"It's a fever, it's something that's inside of you," said team member Kelly Monahan, a sophomore from Falmouth.

"I think it's a love of both sports and animals," agreed Senior Becky Rivet from Bourne.

Rivet, Monahan and junior Fe Fandreyer are members of the 21 person team which includes just one male member. The team competes against various schools from throughout New England including Smith, Mt. Holyoke, AIC and Holy Cross.

There are four shows during the fall season and two additional shows in the spring. Ribbons are awarded according to individual rides in each separate riding division.

"That's what's so great about it," Rivet said. "You don't have to be a pro to join."

Although there are tryouts for the team, even beginners can be participate in the walk-trot division.

Practices are held once a week, but team members are encouraged to ride two other times during the week.

"We try to make it fun," Rivet said. "It's not too competetive."

The shows are literally an all day affair and there is a certain "home barn advantage" for the host team. Horse names are chosen randomly out of an envelope by each rider and are usually accompanied by a two or three word description. There is little time to get acquainted with the equine.

"The horses don't always do whatever you tell them," Fandreyer, from Fitchburg, said.

The riding style which the club uses in the English style and is a very cultured and refined way of riding, according to the girls.

"Equitation, how you look and your presence on the horse is a big part of it," Monahan said. "You have to ride it well to look nice. Jumping is a lot harder than showing."

It's easy to get attached to the horses and that's evident just from the way the girls talk about the horses.

"You definitely get to know them," Rivet said.

Each of the girls have been riding since they were about twelve and all concurred that riding is actually a lot harder than it looks.

"You can make a lot of mistakes very easily," Fandreyer said.

"There's a lot of technique involved," Monahan said. "You never stop learning, you're always building mentally."

But the satisfaction that results from having accomplished a clean ride is exhilarating.

"You're just psyched after you know you did something good," Monahan said. "Getting the horse to react the way you want it to is rewarding."

Of course Monahan also said there are times when things don't seem so peachy.

"You'll be sitting on the ground [after falling off] and you'll say, 'I hate this sport, I hate this horse,'" Monahan laughed.

Points are cumulated throughout the year for each ribbon awarded to individual riders and at the end of both semesters riders can qualify for the regionals.

Tryouts are held once a year, in the fall and there are about 20 spots to fill. the club is coached by volunteers, Sandy Osborne and Vicki Kahn.

Why are those heads on the sports page?

So, what is it with these noggins on the sports page, anyway?

This is the Collegian not the Globe. And the sports page too.

Well, each columnist has his own reason. So let me explain.

Dave, the guy with the cigar yesterday, he simply needs a date. He thought putting his face on the back page would help, but he's a little jealous to just come out and say it.

To tell you the truth I can see why he's having problems. Did you see the size of that head? It took up half the column! And rumor has it it's still growing.

He's trying to look manly with that cigar to persuade all the women, especially the Miss Massachusetts candidate on page seven. But, you want to know the truth? When he had the picture taken he used a pencil.

"But, but, but, it was a No. 2," he cried.

If you can believe anyone looks like that, he does. So if you see him around campus, ask him about it.

Dave looks like a weekly, innocent columnist, but he's actually pretty scandalous.

In his column, he claims he has this tough dog, Bo. He wheeled him in to the Collegian the other day. It's actually a Chihuahua. You can see him pulling it around in a rusty red wagon in Belchertown at halftime of the Patriots game on Sundays.

Dave named him Bo because, like Dave, he's a fan of two losing teams at the same time.

When he saw my dog Bruiser, he dropped, you know what, on the new men's basketball media guide. Believe me, I wasn't too happy.

As for Greg, from Tuesday, he's lobbying to get back on the sports staff. He figured we would remember him if he put his face on the page.

He claims he's a "sports desk exile." Actually, we kicked him off.

If you didn't know, Greg doubles as the Editorial Editor. He tried to put his face on that page, but people questioned it as a centerfold.

How did we get this idea? Mug shots in the Collegian? Well, one day the Editor in Chief came over to the desk and said, "At least all you guys look better than you write."

Consequently, we tried to solve that problem.

Brett Morris

However, she said yesterday, she overheard someone ask when a decent face would appear.

That's when they began to solicit me. The sports editor was going to do it, but everyone decided he looks too much like a New Kid on the Block and belongs on the Arts page.

People just don't understand, it's tough being on the back page of a newspaper. It's tough being pressed against another page for hours. You get newsprint all over your face. And your nose ends up looking like Greg's.

Anyway, according to the Sports Editor, this caricature stuff is permanent. If you don't like it, well, I don't have a solution.

If you don't like our looks, well, I can't help you. But, if you like Dave's, he would very much want to know.

Before I run out of space, I would just like to thank Barry Deutsch, the artist for the Collegian's own Cast of Thousands, for drawing the pictures.

Even though you probably wish he didn't.

Navratilova: AIDS double standard exists

NEW YORK (AP) Martina Navratilova believes the public's response would have been much different if it had been her and not Magic Johnson who announced a positive test for the virus that causes AIDS, according to a published report.

The New York Post reported in yesterday's edition that Navratilova addressed the subject after a workout Tuesday at Madison Square Garden, where she is competing in the season-ending Virginia Slims Championships.

She was asked how people would respond if she had made such an announcement.

"Like if I had the AIDS virus, if people would be understanding?" Navratilova asked. "No, because they'd say I'm gay — I had it coming. That's why they're accepting it with him, because supposedly he got it through heterosexual contact. There have been other athletes who died from AIDS, and they were pushed aside because they either got it from drugs or they were gay."

Navratilova also commented on the number of women Johnson, who retired from the Los Angeles Lakers 13 days ago after testing positive for the virus that causes AIDS, had sexual relations with.

"That's pretty scary," Navratilova said. "If it had happened to a heterosexual woman who had been with 100 or 200 men, they'd call her a whore and a slut and the corporations would drop her like a lead balloon.

"And she'd never get a job in her life. It's a very big-time double standard, and it's frightening because it's happening.

GEO, administration reach accord

The accord may end the graduate student employee strike.

Week-long strike may conclude today

The University of Massachusetts administration and Graduate Employee Organization reached a tenative accord late last night after 12 hours of negotiations — possibly ending the week-long graduate employee strike.

Union representatives will present the written agreement to their membership today and allow the members to vote whether to accept this latest agreement or continue the strike.

Both sides hope the strike will conclude today, ending a week of picketing, rallying and daily marches to the Whitmore Administration Building.

The two parties tentatively agreed on "union security, health benefits and terms of settlement," said Emily Isaacs, GEO co-speaker.

"I look forward to recommending our agreement to the GEO membership," she said.

Isaacs said the outside mediator, Roberta Golick, a member of the American Arbitration Association, played an "instrumental part" in facilitating the negotiations process.

"She kept us focused and allowed both sides the ability to speak directly to the issues," Isaacs said.

Chancellor Richard O'Brien said last night that he felt "encouraged" by these recent developments but declined further comment.

The GEO has been trying to finalize their first union contract for almost a year. The organization represents 2,200 graduate employees including teaching and research assistants, interns and fellows, half of whom are dues-paying members.

Golick, of Sudbury, arrived yesterday on campus to assist in the talks.

"[GEO and the administration] really did it all," Golick said. "I think all I did was inject an objective, neutral point of view.

"Both sides are feeling tremendous relief," she said.

An impasse developed last week between the GEO and the adminstration over the administration's refusal to collect an agency fee, a weekly fee for graduate employees who do not wish to join the union.

The administration contended that it could not legally collect the fee. Although an agreement had been reached on nearly every other issue, the GEO officials felt they had to have agency fee in order to be able to negotiate strong contracts. When the administration refused on grounds that the GEO was not a state-certified union, GEO decided to go out on the picket line.

During the 12 hours of talks, Golick met privately with each side until she reached an agreement reasonable to both union officials and the administration.

Golick said Acting Provost Glen Gordon treated everyone to a Chinese food dinner in celebration of the impending end of the year-long struggle and end of the strike.

O'Brien calls for apology for 'offensive' grad action

By AMY PRENDERGAST

Harsh words were exchanged by top graduate student and administration officials at yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting, just hours before both sides came to a tentative agreement on the issues which have separated them.

Chancellor Richard O'Brien said he has yet to receive an apology from the GEO for the actions of the strikers who "thundered and battered" the unmarked police car he was "trying to get into" after his a press conference at the Robeham Visitors Center last Thursday.

"I found these actions offensive and disgusting. I think it raised the tempers all around, and had a very undesirable affect," he said.

The GEO, which represents over 2,200 graduate students employees including an estimated 1,100 teaching assistants, have been on strike for over a week. They have been negotiating to finalize their first union contract for almost one year.

Graduate Student Senate President Marc Kenen voiced his concern about the visual announcements appearing on the University Housing cable channels which give strike updates and urge students to continue attending classes.

"I was quite disturbed to hear about these announcements that are giving the undergraduates only the administration's view of the strike. Requests for showing the GEO's view have been ignored," said Kenen.

Kenen also questioned unconfirmed reports that the administration was spending an extra $8,000 per day on added security due to the strike.

"I question whether this money is being well-spent. There have been no reports of strike violence," he said.

Kenen, however, said he was pleased with a letter O'Brien sent to all graduate student employees yesterday

Olver to help launch center for productivity

The launching of a new productivity center this morning at the University of Massachusetts will be highlighted by a visit from U.S. Rep. John Olver of Amherst.

In addition to Olver, Chancellor Richard O'Brien has invited a number regional political and business leaders to the formal opening of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst Center for Manufacturing Productivity at 10:30 a.m. in the Campus Center.

The center is designed to increase the competitiveness of small and medium-sized manufacturers in Western Massachusetts by combining faculty from the School of Management and College of Engineering with regional manufacturers in areas such as paper, plastics and metalworking.

"The synergy of academia's talent and industry's resources is a formula for how we must compete in the global economy," Olver said in a recent statement regarding the center.

O'Brien receives names from provost committee

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

The long wait for the choice of a permanent provost from among three University of Massachusetts officials should come to a conclusion soon, according to sources involved in the appointment process.

Chancellor Richard O'Brien said at yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting that he hopes to make an announcement by Dec. 4, when the Board of Trustees will be meeting next.

The three finalists for the post are Acting Provost Glen Gordon, Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Norman D. Aitken and Stephen H. Gehlbach, dean of the School of Public Health.

O'Brien said his decision must be approved by UMass President E.K. Fretwell, adding that he has received a recommendation from the search committee for provost and has interviewed each of the three candidates.

Search Committee chairperson Frederick Tillis said the committee, consisting of faculty, staff and student representatives, met Monday night and submitted a recommendation to the chancellor earlier this week.

"We have recommended three names to the chancellor and the ball is in his court," Tillis said.

Tillis, vice chancellor for Equal Opportunity and Affirmative Action, said the committee did not rank the three candidates, but pointed out various strengths and weaknesses.

"We've interviewed each of the candidates and given [the chancellor] the benefit of our opinions in making a recommendation," Tillis said.

Several committee members said the recommendation to the chancellor noted that a national search should have been conducted, since only three of the seven nominees agreed to be candidates for the position. The committee originally received nominations from the campus community, with nominees having to confirm in writing their interest in the position.

Tillis noted, however, that an on-campus search was appropriate to the University's current fiscal situation.

"It was appropriate to recommend the three candidates and not to do a national search," Tillis said. "We wanted to try to get things stabilized — we suffer from trying to deal with the uncertainties of the University's budget, so it's quite wise and appropriate to get a provost in soon."

Gordon, acting provost since early June, has worked at the University since 1964, when he became an assistant professor of political science. He has served as dean of the faculty of social and behavioral sciences since 1984.

Aitken also began at the University in 1964, serving as associate vice chancellor for academic affairs since 1989. He has served as an economics professor, head of the economics department and associate provost for undergraduate education from 1985 to 1989.

Gehlbach came to the University in 1987, serving as director of the University Division of Public Health until 1989. He has been dean of the School of Public Health since 1989.

Star-crossed couple to tie knot

By LAURA MYERS
Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Leslie Hamilton and Neil Nathanson exchanged a lot of crosswords before she found the solution to their puzzling passion.

The couple, who met two years ago while doing puzzles in a cafe, agreed to marry after Nathanson proposed in a crossword published Sunday in the San Francisco Examiner.

As many as a million readers got the same puzzle, but it had special meaning for the word-crossed lovers. Answers to several clues applied to Hamilton, and the kicker was spelled out on four lines: "DEAR LESLIE, WILL YOU MARRY ME — NEIL."

"I was having trouble solving the Leslie clue, but I figured it out that he was asking me to marry him when I read 'Dear blank, will you marry me,'" Hamilton said Wednesday. "I said 'yes' right away and we didn't even finish the puzzle."

The Leslie clue was "Actress Caron," and the letters "marry me" were the correct response to the clue, "a modest proposal."

Hamilton, a 24-year-old assistant city planner in San Jose, found other nuggets from her life, as well. Answers included "Hamilton," "planner," "cello," which she plays, "Montana," where she was born, and "Stanford," the university from which she graduated in 1990 and where her fiance attends law school.

Nathanson, 21, contacted puzzle writer Merl Reagle in Santa Monica several months ago. Reagle, whose puzzles are published in the Examiner's Image magazine, agreed to write a special puzzle called "Terms of Engagement" using facts about Hamilton that Nathanson supplied.

"I've been making crosswords for a long time and this is the first time I got a request like this," Reagle said. "It was great because usually syndicated puzzles can be so dry. This was a puzzle within a puzzle."

Reagle sent an advance copy of the magazine to Nathanson on Saturday, having taken an extra step on the puzzle in the copy. He used blue shading to highlight the empty blocks that would spell out the proposal, and red for the other special answers.

"I think I did one answer up in the lefthand corner and then told her, 'I'm kinda tired; why don't you do it?'" he recalled.

Nathanson then went to the kitchen to make breakfast, while Hamilton labored for 15 minutes before the hidden question was revealed.

"Knowing Neil, I knew he couldn't just get down on his hands and knees and propose," Hamilton said. "I knew it would be something wild. I should have figured since we're both crossword puzzle fanatics."

The couple hasn't set a wedding date yet, but Reagle's on the guest list.

State to unveil telephone lottery

BOSTON (AP) — Bay Staters soon will be able to let their fingers do the betting, the state Lottery Commission said Thursday.

The state Lottery Commission was set to introduce a pay telephone service, "Lottery-By-Phone," to let players dial a bet.

Lottery officials said the system is the first of its kind in the nation.

"It will make it easier for people to play," said Lottery Commissioner Thomas O'Heir.

NIS-Connmetics, Inc., the company that developed the Lottery-By-Phone system, would not discuss it Thursday. The Natick-based company, which scheduled a Friday news conference to demonstrate the system, was so secretive about the project that O'Heir said he didn't even know what the telephone number would be.

"They're essentially another [lottery] agent, but it's on the phone," said Liz Kloak, spokesperson for the state Treasurer Joseph Malone, whose office oversees the lottery.

The one-year pilot program will enhance the nation's best-selling lottery games, O'Heir said.

In 1990, the lottery posted $1.6 billion in ticket sales, and O'Heir said sales were running $29 million higher this year compared to November 1990.

Chaos reign after Southwest blackout

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

The 5,550-student Southwest Residential Area was rocked by fits of screaming and a spree of vandalism in many residence halls when the entire area lost electricity early Thursday morning.

Southwest lost power at about 1:45 a.m. and it was restored by 3:50 a.m. Physical Plant Director Peter Wozniak said the cause was failure of 13,800 volt distribution system near the McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

During the period without power, much of Southwest was dominated by screaming students.

Pierpont-Moore Resident Director Stephanie Carnahan said furniture was thrown off balconies in some dorms. A trash barrel was thrown through a window at the Hamden Munchie store.

"Kennedy and Coolidge specifically seemed to be kind of a war zone," Carnahan said. "I was just walking around, trying to be an adult presence."

"I think the darkness gave a sense on anonymity to people," said Carnahan, who saw saw the event as a method students used to relieve stress.

The mechanical fault on equipment located near the McGuirk Alumni Stadium which was fixed by 3:50 a.m., Wozniak said.

Jake Orville, a freshman political science major and a Coolidge cluster office worker, said the situation was "total chaos."

Orville said people were throwing beer bottles and toilet paper.

"The place was just trashed," he said. "You could hear the ruckus throughout Southwest."

Sean Kelly, a resident assistant from Pierpont, said he saw widespread vandalism.

"A tree was lit on fire," he said. "People were on the balconies of Cance throwing papers which landed in the tree, then somebody lit it on fire. Cance was really rocking."

"I think it was just an excuse for people to get crazy," he said.

Kelly said there were emergency lights in all the buildings except John Adams. The lights lit up the hallways, leaving only rooms dark.

"There were so many people acting up, there was no way to control it," said Kelly. "As time went on people got tired and went to sleep."

"It was unusual," Kelly said. "It was really strange."

Woman put into custody

University of Massachusetts Police broke up a fight in progress outside the Robsham Visitors Center Wednesday night and placed a 19-year-old woman into protective custody. Police said the woman appeared intoxicated.

LARCENY:

• A telephone valued at $150 was reported stolen Wednesday from a Lederle Graduate Research Center Tower computer laboratory office.

• A John Adams Residence Hall woman reported Wednesday the theft of 14 compact discs from her room. The estimated value was $210.

• An employee of the Astronomy Department in Lederle reported Tuesday the theft of a telephone from her office. A Food Science employee also reported the theft of a phone from a Chenoweth office that day. The estimated value was $165 per phone.

VANDALISM:

• A man reported to police Wednesday night that his car parked in Lot 22 was "keyed" with scratches over the entire surface. Police said "slogans" were also scratched over the vehicle. No estimate of the damage was available.

BCP criticizes administration

Faculty and staff support cultural center closings

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

Thirteen Bilingual Collegiate Program staff members and faculty have lent their support to the proposed closing of the United Asia Cultural Center and the Latin American Cultural Center, which some students have charged are examples of "tokenism" by the University of Massachusetts administration.

In addition, the New World Theater, a multicultural program that has promoted culturally diverse productions for 12 years, has revoked releasing publicity photos to the administration for use in recruiting new students.

"We are convinced and agree with the position that the cultural centers have been used as propaganda and as another form of oppression and tokenism," the letter from the BCP said. "The issues that constitute their demands have been our petitions for the past 12 years which have gone unheard."

"What the students are doing is trying to improve the University," said Benjamin Rodriguez, director of the BCP, and a signator. "These students have a vision."

The BCP is a tutorial program to assist minority students in academic matters, financial aid, counseling, career development and personal matters.

On October 21, members of the United Asia Cultural Center announced their center was closing, with the intention of "debunking the myth of the silent, submissive 'model minority.'"

At the opening night of the first National Latin American Heritage month on November 4, it was announced that members would close the Latin American Cultural Center.

O'Brien said in a press statement released Nov. 5 that he has made contact with Asian students involving the proposed closing of the UACC.

University officials have maintained that the cultural centers remain open.

At a joint press conference on Nov. 7, representatives of the Asian Students' Committee, the Latin American Cultural Center, and the New World Theater expressed their dissatisfaction with the lack of support from O'Brien.

SGA Pres. Gagne denounces housing fee

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association President David Gagne told the Faculty Senate yesterday that the $200 housing assignment fee proposed for next semester is unfair to students.

Gagne said 75 percent of the SGA, which represents the undergraduate population, voted Wednesday night against the fee which would be required for students to secure on-campus housing.

"This is the wrong time to be proposing this ill-advised fee, especially when we are not even filling up the dorms," he said.

According to the Housing Services proposal, freshman would be required to pay the $200 fee during orientation and upperclassmen when applying for housing during spring room choosing. Student's housing fee for the spring semester would then be subsequently reduced by $200.

"This fee is a major concern to students. We have already seen a lot of fee increases and I know we will see more," Gagne said.

The proposal would give students on financial aid an assignment fee waiver until they could receive money from the Financial Aid Office.

Although it will be used as a "penalty" against students who decide to move off campus in the middle of the year, students who decide to study abroad or have other legitimate commitments will not be penalized.

Housing officials said the large number of students not returning to campus is said to be the cause of the assignment fee proposal. Housing Services hopes the fee will prevent students from signing up for dorm rooms and then moving off campus, which costs Housing needed revenue, according to housing officials.

Three of five residential area presidents voted to endorse this proposal last month. They said passing the proposal would lessen the chances of Housing Services raising the housing fees for the 1993 academic year.

Students outraged at Tufts' S. African reinvestment plan

MEDFORD (AP) — Tufts University students, angered by a proposal by President Jean Mayer to reinvest endowment money in South Africa, say they will vehemently protest the plan.

Mayer, who submitted his proposal to Tufts trustees, has traveled to South Africa many times and said he thinks universities should begin reinvesting in companies doing business there because the country's economy is in crisis and unemployment is high.

"I think it's absurd to wait for all the problems to be resolved before trying to help them get back on their feet," he told The Boston Globe.

"All of these things are going to take a long time. If one waits until all of this is solved and a black-majority government is installed, the country will be ruined," he said.

The government and the African National Congress said Thursday that talks on ending white-minority rule and giving blacks political rights could begin next month.

Meanwhile, Tufts students said they are contacting anti-apartheid groups at other colleges and plan protest actions — petitions, teach-ins and a sit-in — before university trustees next meet in February.

"This is precisely the time to keep the screws on, the pressure on," said Pete Mutharika, 20, a junior majoring in political science and a senator in the student government.

"If you reinvest, you're saying the changes that have been made are enough," he said.

Sandra Hanna, a junior and member of the Pan-African Alliance at Tufts, said the idea to reinvest is "ridiculous and morally appalling.

"It's unbelievable to me" that Mayer "wants to pat the government on the back for the few changes they've made, especially since so few have the right to vote," she said.

Experts seek solutions for environmental crisis

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Environmental experts speaking at a panel discussion at Hampshire College last night were unable to reach a common consensus on causes of and solutions to problems stemming from world overpopulation.

The panel, titled "Is Overpopulation to Blame for the Environmental Crisis," was sponsored by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies.

Panelists included Jonathan Adams of the World Wildlife Fund, Arjun Makhijani of the Institute for Energy and Environmental Research, Susan Weber of Zero Population Growth and Gita Sen, of the Harvard Center for Population and Development Studies.

Throughout the debate, the panel of speakers failed to agree upon a common solution to help resolve the problems. They expressed their varying individual philosophical beliefs.

Adams said population growth was not the sole cause of the crisis.

"We should not concentrate on population in exclusion to other factors in the environment, which include the media, technology and cultural attitudes," said Adams.

Adams also noted the problems Third World nations such as Nepal are experiencing.

"In central Nepal, the situation is particularly troubling — the steep hillsides are disappearing at a frightening rate to erosion, as the forest dwindles with the population growth," Adams said.

"I want to introduce the four-letter word behind population," said Makhijani. "That word is fear."

Makhijani spoke of fear that more affluent people have towards the poor people in India.

"This world can either belong to all of us or not — we are so blinded by fear," Makhijani said.

Weber spoke of women's reproductive rights as a means to help with family planning. "Women are key actors in the decision-making, but they are not included as much as they need to be in this challenge," said Weber.

"President Bush recently passed the gag rule, which prevents doctors from saying the "A" word," said Weber. Weber pointed out that the "A" word — abortion — prevents poor women from receiving the proper care.

"Family planning simply does not work," added Sen. She expressed her belief that other factors must also be included, such as improved education.

Sen questioned how a crisis is defined. "No one said overpopulation is to blame for the environmental crisis, which makes it difficult," said Sen.

Each speaker felt differently about the issues, and varying opinions of where the problems lie were discussed. The one thing that everyone agreed with was that it was a complex issue.

Cranberries in Amherst

Local church to sponsor benefit fair

By MARK J. POTVIN
Collegian Correspondent

Cranberries, the New England equivalent to Florida oranges, are back in season. Every year traditional festivities abound, honoring the small red fruit and the industry it brings to the Northeast.

The First Congregational Church (United Church of Christ) of Amherst will hold its 12th annual Cranberry Fair from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday.

Gale McClung, spokesperson for the Cranberry Fair co-ordinators, said "the fair is held the Saturday before Thanksgiving as a Thanksgiving celebration and we decorate the church with a cranberry motif."

"Though the theme is cranberries, we don't want to take it too far," McClung said. "We will have baked goods, candies and homemade jellies for people to buy and indulge in."

McClung said the fair will also include crafts, used books, a white elephant sale, jewelry accessories, clothing, children's toys and used furniture. There will be a collectibles room, for people interested in more valuable merchandise.

The activities will include browsing through the items for sale, enjoying the festive foods that will be available, a play room for the kids, and at the end of the day the "Razzel Dazzel Raffel" will take place.

"The Cranberry Fair will be very festive for all the people of Amherst, as well as for people of other towns all over the valley," McClung said.

"The fair has two functions. One function is as a great community activity, and the second function is to help fund some of our programs," McClung said.

"The fundraising from the Cranberry Fair aids our weekend soup kitchen, Not Bread Alone. It also supports our Alcoholics Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous and Overeaters Anonymous programs. In addition, it helps fund other civic charities in Amherst," she said.

The Cranberry Fair has been highly successful since its inception in 1979 and continues to grow larger every year.

Those little things we all love about UMass

In light of all the crap that has been happening on campus the past couple of weeks, I have taken it upon myself to try to remind you of the reasons why you are still attending UMass, why you haven't given up on it yet and why it is, despite certain events that are currently inhibiting our education, still a unique and wacky place to get your college degree.

Brooke Wheeler

Here are some of the things, people, places and reasons behind the academic wonder that is UMass. (Some of these things are not necessarily exclusive in nature to UMass, but they are, I assure you, as a collective whole essential to the wonderous atmosphere.) We should take pride in them.

- Bluewall cookies. Chocolate chip. Oh God, yes.
- The tallest, ugliest and most phallic college library in the United States.
- The woman who flicks your ID at you when you cash your paycheck in the Campus Center basement.
- The Campus Center concourse on a weekday — frenetic with activity, crammed with vendors and people watchers.
- The Campus Center concourse on a Sunday afternoon, quiet, bathed in diffused light, empty except for a few resting bodies and an occasional bicyclist gliding through.
- The people.
- That big Burnt Fry on the FAC stairs! No one else has one!
- The concrete monstrosity that is the Fine Arts Center.
- Protest Flavor of the Week on the Student Union steps.
- The occasional lone yet indignant pamphlet-waving zealot trying to save us from the fires of hell, also usually on the Student Union steps.
- Hearing the hordes of little duckies laughing as you walk by (is your fly unzipped?).
- T.V. cameras here at least twice a year.
- All these damn people!
- Mexican Fiesta night at the Worcester barracks (with live band).
- Italian night!
- People fear us — we are ZOOMASS!
- Tangelo Pie (especially the Angry Sparrow).
- People's Market bagels.
- The view from the Top of the Campus restaurant.
- The view (however smeared) from the upper library floors.
- ZuNews!
- The University operators — Dolly, Tina, Jean, June and the whole bunch.
- The UMass marching band — the biggest and loudest.
- The Southwest towers from a distance at night (if you squint, you can pretend they're skyscrapers).
- "Notes from the Campus Center Basement."
- That voice mail bitch who tells you that "you have no new messages."
- C'mon, we are the center of the universe around here!
- Going to a Residential Academic Program class in stockinged feet.
- The little observatory perched up by Orchard Hill. (Did you know we had one?)
- Ooh, the reflection of the library lights in the campus pond at night.
- And last but not least, I must say I take particular pride in knowing that most tweedy little Amherst College snots couldn't find their way around our big 'ole UMass campus with a compass and a map.

Ha ha!

Now it's your turn — write and tell me those little things about UMass that you appreciate daily, and I'll compile them in my next column. Campus Mail 'em to: Brooke, not a phallic burrito, 113 Campus Center or drop them by in person. We love to have visitors down in our cave.

GEO wins with activism, undergraduates can too

This is a message from a GEO rank-and-file member to undergraduates about money and power.

I have heard many questions from undergraduates regarding GEO demands and activism. One of the most important in these difficult economic times is: Where is the money going to come from for health benefits for graduate employees? Currently the administration's proposal is as follows:

Spring of '92: Graduate employees would receive a 21 percent cut in health costs. This money will come from a .33 percent cut in every departmental budget on campus. In the School of Social and Behavioral Sciences, with a budget of $11 million, the cost would be about $36,000. This will clearly not affect undergraduate tuition and fees.

School year of '92-'93: Graduate employees would receive 42 percent coverage. School year of '93-'94: Graduate employees would receive 79 percent coverage. By the end of our contract covering health benefits graduate employees would be paying approximately the same dollar amount for health care as other employees on campus. The money to fund the cut in our fees will be coming from the state, not from undergraduate pockets.

Cuts in the budget at UMass and increases in tuition and fees are not happening because of activism by members of the UMass community. They are not happening because we trampled the flowers at the State House two years ago. They are happening because of much larger social and economic forces, including federal budget cuts, anti-tax sentiment among voters and general disdain for public education in the state of Massachusetts. We have to fight against those forces and protect the quality and accessibility of UMass. GEO can do a lot, but undergraduates are the key to this larger struggle.

GEO should be an example of successful organizing and action and we will be there when undergraduates mobilize. GEO members found our source of power as workers, though we are also students. Undergraduates, GEO encourages you to find your sources of power in your families and backgrounds, in the fact that you will be working in this state when you graduate, in the fact that you have invested a great deal in your education at UMass and in your numbers.

Some undergraduates, meeting to organize support for GEO, have begun to discuss the creation of a mass organizing effort to roll back tuition and fees in 1992-93. You have a good deal of time between now and and when the budget gets decided in Boston in May and June. Help the GEO and other members of this community bring more resources to this campus. Fight for decreases in your costs. You can win with activism. GEO is living proof.

Renee Heberle
GEO spokesperson

Support appreciated

Dear University community,

On behalf of many members of the Leach Cluster community, I would like to thank you for the support you provided after the recent student death in our residence hall. A student's suicide is not easy to understand. However, for many, the time has been made easier through the cooperation of faculty, staff, administrators and fellow students.

I would like to personally thank the Residential Education and Housing Services staff, University of Massachusetts Police Department, the Dean of Students Office and the Mental Health staff for your quick and constant support. There was never a time when I felt alone in the process. I hope you know your contributions are greatly appreciated.

Grad dorms not quiet

I am a graduate student living on campus at our university. In which residential area do you think I am required to reside? Would it be the stately buildings of Central or Northeast? Perhaps the private suites of Sylvan or the modern halls of Orchard Hill could be my place of research study and relaxation. I live in the urban jungle of Southwest behind locked doors in the Prince-Crampton complex, the only campus option for graduate students. We are surrounded by a moat of concrete in the shadows of three 23-story dorm towers.

Why is graduate housing in the most densely-populated, most heavily-patrolled, loudest residence area of our campus? We are the masters and doctoral candidates who teach classes, conduct valuable research and need to study far into the night and on weekends. We have traveled from distant states and nations for the opportunity to study at this venerable institution.

We are required to adhere to a 24-hour quiet period yet are rooms are far from quiet. Police cars race by the concrete walkway beneath my window from early in the morning late into the evening with search lights blazing and blue strobes flashing. Hardly a night has gone by without a fire alarm in one of the dorm towers. Along with each fire alarm we are entertained with primal yells and screaming obscenities. A friend's new car was vandalized and another grad student's window was broken as screaming throngs of people churned through our parking area to cross through Southwest.

One desperate doctoral student on my floor walked to the John Quincy Adams tower to ask the staff if they would silence a distractingly loud stereo. Members of our graduate community complained to residence staff that the noise from outside made it difficult to do any work. One Prince-Crampton staff member suggested that they are stepping up efforts to keep the undergraduates quiet.

We are not here to oppress the undergraduates or to criticize their behavior. We were in their position not so long ago. Students in their teenage years are here to discover themselves and have some fun while they study.

There are alternatives to requiring on-campus graduate students to live in Southwest. Graduate Housing could be relocated to a less urban, more centrally located area such as Northeast. Perhaps grad students could be allowed to choose their residential area as undergraduates do.

Writers express views on strike

We have received many letters regarding the current Graduate Employees Organization strike. In the interest of fairness, we submit the following series of excerpts from some of those letters, so that as many people as possible may have their opinions voiced on this important issue. Another GEO letter which was left out by accident yesterday also appears today (see left).

A university is supposed to be a place where people learn about life, as well as academics. What kind of lesson is the Administration trying to communicate to its undergraduates when it treats its graduates with such disregard for their livelihood and well being? Is the lesson supposed to be that people with little power can expect to be pushed down and kept there? Or is the intended lesson that one has to choose in life between being a dedicated but underpaid worker or a well-paid but uncaring manager?

Lisa Lipshires
Northampton

Let me see if I understand the whole situation. You are having some serious problems with the administration of this University. So, logically, you have decided to exact your revenge on me, the undergraduate, by refusing to teach my classes and grade my papers in favor of harassing me as I enter and exit the building. Well, I can see why. If a bully blackens your eye, the only sensible thing to do is to go beat up his little sister, right?

Ryan Pasquini
Belchertown

As a member of the GEO and as a member of the campus community, I am concerned that the strike has caused tensions between the undergraduates and graduate students on campus. To a certain extent, this is inevitable in a strike that involves picketing academic buildings. Apparently, however, some undergraduates feel they have been unnecessarily harassed by picketers. GEO stewards and picket captains have made it clear that picketers should not be harassing undergraduates. GEO realizes how important undergraduate support is for us to succeed.

John Dever
Hadley

. . . The efforts of the GEO have been a positive example of committed graduate students working together to improve their standing.

I have reservations, however, about the United Auto Workers backing the efforts of the graduates. They whole-heartedly back the strike, but not all the grads do. . .

GEO wants to be recognized as a union under UAW, but what does that really mean? It means paying dues as well as an agency fee to support the UAW. It means more antagonism between graduates and the administration and therefore more fixed and regulated work hours instead of the honor system of working we currently enjoy. It means a hired representative speaking for the wants and needs of on-campus graduates.

Anne Howland
Graduate student and GEO member

There is no no doubt that graduate students are overworked and underpaid by comparison to any reasonable baseline I can imagine. . . I realize the administration pays lip service to this point, but that's the problem — it's only lip service. Have you any given any thought or analysis to the problem of how it is possible for a graduate student to cover bills in the current economy on a graduate student paycheck, that is, have to tried to figure out how such a paycheck could be divided between rent, food, transportation, textbooks, etc., with a little left for discretionary spending? This is a mathematics problem without a solution.

Robert Ackerman
Philosophy

Those obnoxious florescent stickers which you felt had to be placed on campus buildings and vehicles now should be removed. I find that defacing public property is a despicable and cowardly act. Surely, you do not expect your brothers and sisters affiliated with the other unions to clean up after your childish actions. Next time you feel you have a problem with someone or something, please consider a more mature plan of attack.

said Golick played a pivotal role in the talks. "I think she was enormously helpful," she said. "I am very pleased."

David Lenson, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, reacted with a "hallelujah" to news of the written accord reached last night.

"I think we're all going to be really happy," Lenson said. "I think what really counts is the amelioration [of conditions] for graduate students that are really deteriorating."

He estimated that graduate employees' stipends have not even doubled in the past 15 years.

"They come from all over the world to study," he said. "They should have a reasonable chance at finishing their education."

Lenson said the the quick agreement reached with the help of the mediator was "really impressive."

asking those who have fulfilled their employment obligations during the strike to send a form to the Payroll Office so they would continue to receive their pay.

O'Brien apologized for "inadvertently" withholding pay last week from those graduate student employees who had not participated in the strike and said, "I am sure you understand the difficult situation in which GEO's actions have placed us."

"I greatly appreciate the change of tone in the Chancellor's letter," said Kenen, a former GEO official. "It has taken away the threats and coerciveness and returned to respect."

Negotiations between graduate employees and University of Massachusetts officials continued yesterday with the help of an outside mediator, Roberta Golick of Sudbury.

Golick, a member of the American Arbitration Association, was mutually chosen by both sides to help end this week-long strike. The administration agreed to the mediator even though the Graduate Employee Organization is still on strike.

In the first few days of the strike O'Brien said negotiations would be cancelled since the GEO had violated a "no-strike" agreement. Informal meetings were held, according to sources.

Board of Governors criticizes student apathy on campus

KIM DIETEL
Collegian Correspondent

The Board of Governors expressed concern last night that the large number of unfilled seats on the Board were indicative of more widespread lack of student involvement across campus.

"We've done our part to fill the seats, " stated Ben Preston, the vice chairperson of the BOG.

The vacant positions include two seats for the Southwest area, one for commuters, one for Stockbridge, four at-large and five graduate student representatives.

Preston stated that letters have gone out to the concerned area governments and an effort has been made to contact the Stockbridge Student Senate. The graduate students have withdrawn their seats and their funding, although BOG officials said they still consider the seats empty according to the BOG constitution.

The BOG elections are normally held at the same time as the Student Government Association elections. Each residential area elects a governor to sit on the BOG, while at-large elections are campus-wide. Area government presidents and governing bodies with open positions during the semester are responsible for filling these positions through appointment.

Some members viewed the unfilled positions as indicative of a lack of student involvement on campus.

"I've seen a dwindling of interest with area government on campus over the last years," said Scott Garstka, a BOG member.

"Advocacy bodies are crucial to students," stated Preston. "Without them, students have no say about what goes on in their life on campus."

BOG chairperson Micah Levy said "The BOG is a place for students to give their input about the Campus Center."

Bill Harris, the Campus Center director, said he would like to research ways to fill the seats and suggested reallocating the residential area positions to other representative bodies on campus.

In other business, the BOG elected Preston to the Student Planning Committee, a group that plans long-term spending of the Student Activities Trust Fund.

"It is the most important committee on campus with relation to what the BOG does," stated Levy.

High-speed train on trial

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a first step to cut more than an hour off travel time between Boston and New York, Amtrak said Thursday it will borrow a high-speed, high-comfort "tilt" train from Sweden.

The train, the X2000, will be brought to the United States for testing and demonstration runs and will then be put in temporary service for fare-paying passengers along the entire Northeast Corridor from Boston to Washington. The X2000 will operate at speeds up to 125 miles an hour along the route and will be able to maintain that speed on its many curves, Amtrak President W. Graham Claytor told a news conference. The goal is to reduce New York- Boston travel time from more than four hours to less than three hours.

Amtrak will also electrify its system from New Haven, Conn. to Boston, eliminating the need to switch to and from diesel locomotives, Claytor said.

Mayer contends that, "The sanctions were applied because of apartheid, and those laws have been rescinded. Now you can say they don't have a nonracial government. . . . but the American Revolution was proclaimed in 1776, and it was 1789 before we had a constitution.

"It's going to take a long time in South Africa as well," he said.

"We want to make sure people understand the changes that have taken place, what is being negotiated, and why meanwhile the economy cannot be allowed to fall apart," Mayer said.

Tufts divested all its holdings in South African-related stock in 1989. Mayer said he hopes Tufts leads other universities, which divested or limited South African-related holdings, in reinvesting in the country.

"The question is not whether we will but when we will," he said of Tufts' reinvesting.

Although other major universities in the Boston area do not appear to be moving toward reinvestment in South Africa, Mayer believes other institutions are thinking about it.

He said other university leaders agree with him but are reluctant to do anything because they are afraid of student protests.

"I think they're all afraid it would look as though they had given up on democratic concepts," he said.

Harvard University, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Boston University have investments in South Africa-related companies that adhere to the Sullivan principles of fair worker treatment and integration. The University of Massachusetts at Amherst prohibits university investments in companies that do business in South Africa.

Asian Students' Committee member Alexander Nguyen referred to numerous reports and recommendations involving minority concerns which dated back to 1974. A list of 17 demands to be sent to the chancellor, and the administration was also publicly presented.

This list included the plan to transfer funding for the UACC to the United Asia Learning Resource Center. It also stated that funding for the LACC was to be transferred to the BCP along with "adequate line funding" for New World Theater.

On Nov. 19, the Graduate Student Senate passed a motion revoking financial support "to any multicultural activity initiated by the administration until the demands of the Latin American and United Asian Cultural Centers and the New World Theater are addressed satisfactorily."

"The administration has not taken steps to close [the cultural centers]," Sherbin said yesterday.

Women's A-10 in transition

UMass looks to start over

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The only word that could describe the 1991-92 Atlantic 10 women's basketball season is transition. Transition in the conference, transition in the standings, and transition even within teams.

As most people have probably heard by now, Penn State has left for the greener pastures of the Big-10, so the A-10 is technically the A-9. The loss is big in terms of visibility and reputation, as the Nittany Lions were at the forefront of the A-10 for the last 10 years.

In addition, the Duquesne Dukes (Duchesses) may leave the conference in the next few years. They have been approached by representatives from the Midwest Conference, and will probably decide for certain by the end of the season, according to a source in the Duquesne sports information department.

As far as the standings, Rutgers looks to rise to the top this year, with a young George Washington team nipping at the Lady Knights' heels. Both teams received bids to the NCAA Tournament last year.

The Lady Knights are led by one of the best coaches in the country, Theresa Grentz. Grentz was selected to coach the American women in the 1992 Summer Olympics in Barcelona, Spain. Grentz has compiled an unbelievable 352-107 record in her 15 years at Rutgers, and the Lady Knights finished 23-7 last year, with a 15-3 A-10 record.

Senior Tanya Hansen is expected to lead Rutgers this year. Hansen, an All-American candidate, averaged 17.2 points and 9.2 rebounds last year.

George Washington represents the young upstart in the league, a team that rebounded from mediocrity into the NCAAs. A great deal of credit must go to coach Joe McKeown, who led the Colonial Women into the post-season in just his second year.

George Washington returns nine players from last year, which means the team will be even more formidable. Three returning players averaged double figures in scoring: Seniors Kristin McArdle and Mary Nordling and junior Jen Shasky. Look for the trio to help lift the Colonial Women into the NCAAs for a second straight season.

West Virginia represents the only other team in the A-10 who could steal the division crown away from the two favorites. The Mountaineers are led by guard Rosemary Kosiorek, possibly the best player in the league. Kosiorek averaged over 20 points a game in leading her team to a 17-12 record.

Head coach Scott Harrelson calls the 5'5" Kosiorek the best guard in the country, and she was a first team All-Conference and Kodak All-American player. As a freshman, Kosiorek's team won the A-10. Nothing would be more fitting than to end her career the same way.

Last year the Mountaineers finished fourth in the A-10 standings, and they return all five starters. With Penn State gone, the team hopes it can at least seize an at-large berth to the NCAAs.

Both Temple and St. Joseph's seem to be in the same boat this year. Both finished in fifth place in the A-10 last year. Both teams lost three key starters from last year. And, both the Lady Owls and the Hawks have relatively new coaches.

Temple's Charlene Curtis enters her second season as mentor, notching a 13-15 record last year. Curtis will try to build a program on par with the men's counterpart, John Chaney.

As for St. Joseph's, they have a brand new coach in Stephanie V. Gaitley. Jim Foster, the Hawks coach, bolted for Vanderbilt after an 18-12 record in his 13th season.

The overachieving Hawks advanced to the A-10 finals last year by upsetting both George Washington and Rutgers. Leading scorer Katie Curry returns, hoping to give leadership to a young team. Curry averaged 16 points while piling up 83 steals. Senior Cindy Anderson will also help out at guard.

Rhode Island, St. Bonaventure and Duquesne represent the third tier of the A-10, with Massachusetts bringing up the rear this season.

Rhode Island looks for sophomore Monica Garnes to turn the Wrams from pretender to contender. Garnes, a 5'8" forward, averaged 9.2 points and 6.7 rebounds per game.

St. Bonaventure is a team destined to be mediocre. Coach Mary Jane Telford's record in 15 years at St. Bonnie's is 171-175, and the team was 14-15 last year. Sue Shay and Jodi Urich led the team with 14.8 and 13.4 points per game.

How to rage in the Cage

Last year's Dick Vitale's Basketball said it was "a wild pit under normal circumstances." The Boston Globe said it's fans were "the Duke fans of the Northeast."

If you've never been to a basketball game at Curry Hicks Cage, this is what you should expect: noise, heat and some really great basketball.

Coach John Calipari thinks the fans have a lot to do with all three.

Calipari credits the fans who have filled the Cage the past two years for making UMass one of the toughest places to play for the opposition in college basketball.

He feels UMass fans are among "the top five groups of college basketball fans in the nation," and cites their enthusiasm as the reason why.

"Our fans feel like they're part of the team," explained Calipari. "They come to games not expecting to sit down. They get soaked. They cheer for us and not against the opposition."

Calipari's highest praise for UMass fans was that they encourage the team throughout the game, instead of the team encouraging the fans.

"They don't wait for us to get them going," Calipari said. "If we're not getting things accomplished on the floor they give us a boost. It's positive. . .that's what it's all about."

Greg Sukiennik

When students returned to campus in Feb. 1990, UMass was ranked 35th in the nation. The Cage was packed to the rafters a full hour and a half before tipoff of a game between the Minutemen and Connecticut, and it was then, Calipari thinks, that UMass fans showed him they were one of the best college crowds in the nation.

"After one game where we lost — I think it was Connecticut — we lost and walking off the floor we got a standing ovation. That showed me 'you weren't quite good enough to win but you don't have to win.' From that point I knew we had something."

If you're a dedicated Massachusetts basketball follower, your first problem is getting a ticket for the game. Because demand for tickets well exceeds supply, no longer can fans just show up at games with their student ID.

Hence, if you want to get into a game, you've got to stop by Curry Hicks Cage a few days in advance (see the Collegian for information as to when) to show your ID for a free ticket.

Against lesser opposition like New Hampshire, this is easy. But when A-10 arch-rivals like West Virginia, Rutgers and Temple come to town, you may have to get up early and wait in line.

Ticket distribution begins at 7:00 a.m. A small price to pay for the priviledge of a free ticket — something most big-time programs just don't give their student fans.

Generally, there's one set of guidelines for the prospective UMass basketball fan: stand and cheer all game.

"If you come to the Cage you should be prepared to stand. I don't think you're going to hear 'down in front' too many times this year," Calipari noted.

Calipari also hoped Cage crowds would continue their record of representing the University well, especially in televised games. It's easy to get carried away, most notably when Temple comes to town. But it's also important to note the basketball team and it's fans, as Calipari suggests, are seen as an extension of the University.

"People will turn on the set and see UMass as a fun place to watch a basketball game, and our fans have been great about that," complimented the fourth-year coach.

One other hint: don't wear a sweater. With 4,058 people standing, clapping, singing and stomping their feet at the same time, the Cage starts to resemble a sauna.

"In the Cage, you're right on top of the court, and it gets loud and very hot and it's intimidating for the other team," Calipari says.

"I know when it's hot when I have to change my shirt at halftime, when I sweat through the knot in my tie."

But it's not the building," he pointed out. "It's the fans. You know if you're soaked, if you can't sleep because you keep seeing plays in your head, that you're really involved. Because that's what I do."

Minutemen aspiring to NCAA heights

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Last season, University of Massachusetts men's basketball fans held signs which read, "Bring on UNLV."

Could this be the season in which other schools request, "Bring on UMass?"

The 1991-92 Minuteman season has the potential to pack overwhelming excitement as head coach John Calipari will have the services of every starter from last year's 20-13 squad which traveled to the world-renowned Madison Square Garden for the Final Four of the National Invitational Tournament.

As the media and coach's pre-season pick to win the Atlantic 10, the Minutemen return seniors Jim McCoy, Anton Brown and Will Herndon and juniors Tony Barbee and Harper Willliams.

However, also seeing plenty of time will be a freshman class which has been rated among the nation's best. Louis Roe, Scott Drapeau, Michael Williams and Jerome Malloy should provide a huge and much-needed contribution off the bench along with returnees Francois Firmin, Kennard Robinson, Chris Robinson and Tommy Pace.

McCoy is UMass' career scoring leader with 1,818 points, an average of 19.8 per year. The guard from Pittsburgh, Pa. has been chosen as one of the top 25 players in the country by Basketball Weekly.

Jim McCoy goes way up for a dunk. McCoy will undoubtedly score his 2,000th point this season.

At 6-feet-3 inches, he can hit the jump shot from anywhere on the court. He averaged 18.9 points last year and was selected to the All-A-10 team. McCoy has scored in double figures in 32 straight games and was named the Conference Player-of-the-Week three times last year. He spent the summer fine tuning his skills in Europe as a member of the Foot Locker NIT All-Star team.

"He's an explosive scorer," Calipari said. "He's improved on defense and should be on a mission."

Barbee is UMass' second-highest returning scorer as he averaged 15.3 ppg last season. The 6-foot-6 shooting forward is a great compliment to McCoy. As a second team All-A-10 selection last year, Barbee is a very versatile, consistent player who hit the game-tying 3-pointer at the buzzer in last season's NIT quarterfinal round game against Siena.

"He's our best overall player," Calipari said. "He has no real weakness."

Brown will push the team up court as he returns to the point guard position. Last season, Brown missed games in the middle of the season with torn ligaments in his left knee, but still averaged over four assists and 4.8 points per game. At 6-feet-2 inches, he came on strong down the stretch last year, averaging 7.8 assists in the five NIT games and had a career high 10 assists in the NIT loss to Stanford.

"He's steady," Calipari said. "He's a good shooting point guard and isn't flashy."

Williams is quickly becoming one of the best post players in the conference and may be the best by season's end. Williams, who has incredible court presence and intensity, averaged 13.9 points and 7.7 rebounds last year. At 6-feet 7-inches, he also led the A-10 in blocked shots last season with 74. He took his game to a higher level in the NIT when in five games he averaged 19.4 points and nine rebounds. He has scored in double figures in 14 of the last 16 games and broke his own UMass single game record when he registered nine blocks against Rhode Island.

"He's really improved," Calipari said. "He's a real warrior as our best post scorer."

Herndon fills a good percentage of the Cage with his high-flying slam show and 43-inch vertical leap. He led UMass in scoring in five games last year, averaging 11.9 ppg. Every time Herndon scored in double figures last year, he also had double figures in rebounding.

Calipari said, "He's the best athlete I've ever coached. He's the team's big play-maker."

Pace saw limited action last year as a forward due to surgery after his freshman season. As one of the first players off the bench his freshman year, this season Pace should contribute, especially on the boards.

At 6-feet-10 inches, Kennard Robinson is the team's tallest player suited up on the floor. Last year, he saw limited time, yet came on strong at the end of the season.

Point guards Chris Robinson, an exceptional defender, and Firmin, a great attacking guard, return.

Roe, the New Jersey High School Player of the Year, will be one of the first forwards off the bench. He averaged 26.1 points and 15 rebounds per game for Atlantic City High School where he had a school record 1,804 career points and 802 rebounds. He played for the USA All-Stars in the McDonald's All-American Game and the Nike Camp.

The freshman class is highly touted, but now its time to go and earn their praise.

Williams, a guard from Hartford, Conn., attended New England Prep School last year and averaged 16 points and seven assists. He was a Street and Smith All-American honorable mention at Weaver High School.

Malloy, a freshman guard from Waterbury, Conn., averaged 28.5 points and 13 rebounds as the Class M Player of the Year in Connecticut his senior season.

Drapeau was New Hampshire's Mr. Basketball and USA Today / Gatorade Player of the Year following his senior season at Merrimack Valley High School. He averaged 34.6 points as a junior and 21 points and 19 rebounds per game last year.

Freshman forward Ted Cottrell, who may decide to redshirt this season, averaged 16 points, 13 rebounds and five blocked shots his senior season at Annapolis, Md. High School and played in the Nike All-Star Camp.

Derek Kellogg averaged 24.7 points, 7.3 rebounds and 6.5 assists as a guard for Cathedral High School last year. Kellogg, who was named a McDonald's honorable mention All-American last year, is also considering sitting out the season.

Jeff Meyer, the 7-foot-2 crowd favorite, has decided to redshirt this year, his sophomore season.

O'Brien brings winning attitude

New coach seeks seven wins this season

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

Of the 22 varsity sports on the University of Massachusetts campus last year, only one team endured a winless season — women's basketball.

The Minutewomen's record was a woeful 0-27, losing by an average of 28 points per game. The team's only player to average in double figures, Keyburn McCusker, and the team's leading rebounder, Lisa Ireland, have graduated. The team's coach, Kathy Hewelt, left the school after compiling a three-year record of 16-68, making way for new leadership.

But who would be willing to take on an 0-27 team with no seniors?

Meet Joanie O'Brien, a woman who has known nothing but success as a player and as a coach.

In her five years with the University of Auburn women's basketball program (two as a graduate assistant and three as a full-time assistant), the Lady Tigers were national runners-up three times and in the Final Eight twice.

Before graduating from Penn St. in 1986 she was a three-year starter and senior captain. The Lady Lions won the Atlantic 10 championship in each of her four years.

"I think it starts with hard work," O'Brien said in a drawl that reflects her years spent in Georgia. "I've never had that god-given talent that a lot of other players did, and I had to work my butt off to get what I got. That has carried over into the next level of coaching. The harder you work — it makes things just a bit easier. It's not going to be easy here, but we're going to work as hard as we possibly can to get some kids here that will put this program on the top of the A-10."

O'Brien has said she has set a timetable that would put the Minutewomen at or near the top of the A-10 in three years, and would like "seven or eight wins" this season.

"People may think I'm biting off more than I can chew," she said, "but I don't think so."

While leaving a program as successful as Auburn's may have been difficult, O'Brien feels she has enough confidence and determination to keep striving for the next level.

"My goal, when I started coaching," she said, "wasn't to be an assistant coach, it was to be a head coach. After spending five years at Auburn it was time for me to go and use what I learned as a player and as a coach down there and put it to my own use. To get anywhere you've got to take a chance, and when you're 27 years old there's not very many people that will give you a chance. UMass did that for me and I'm going to give my best shot to see what I can do for them."

A native of Des Moines, Iowa, O'Brien attended high school in Columbus, Ohio. While playing for Penn State she saw glimpses of the Amherst area, but not enough to make a valued judgement.

"As a player, you come and you go," she said. "When we came up here to play we got out of the bus, played, turned around, and left. When I came up here for the interview, I had a chance to see some of the area and meet a lot of the people. It's a situation much like that of State College, where it's a small town surrounded by beautiful country. It's a college town. It's the kind of atmosphere I had at school, and I figured, 'If I like it as much as I think I do, maybe I can get some kids to turn around and feel the same way about UMass.'"

The term 'Atlantic 10' is now a misnomer, as last year's champion, Penn State, left the league to begin its first year as the Big 10's newest addition. But below Penn State in the final A-10 standings last year were the following teams with records of .500 or better: Rutgers, George Washington, West Virginia, Temple, and St. Joseph's.

"I've been a player in the Atlantic 10," O'Brien said. "I know a lot of people in the league, and it's a good league. With Penn State leaving it may drop down a bit nationally, but what it will do is bring those bottom teams up to the top."

Brother Barbees encompass two sports

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Staff

Brothers often compete in the same sports while growing up and many even find equal success in a given sport. The Dimaggio brothers found success in baseball, John and Jim Paxson found success in basketball and Doug and Darren Flutie have found success in football. It is more unusual, however, for brothers to find success in different sports.

Juniors Tony and Chris Barbee are both varsity athletes at the University of Massachusetts, but not in the same sport. Tony is a member of the basketball team while Chris is on the football team.

Although Tony and Chris both played baseball, basketball and football while growing up, eventually, each made a choice to concentrate on only one of the three sports.

"I played baseball and football, but not in high school," said Tony, a 6-6 starting forward. "In junior high school I played all three. I recognized that basketball was my strength so I decided to go with that."

Chris, a 6-3, 250-pound defensive tackle, said, "I decided that my body was more suited for football than for basketball."

UMass basketball coach John Calipari had a hand in bringing both brothers to UMass. He recruited Tony right out of high school and later brought Chris to the attention of UMass football coach Jim Reid. Chris, who is two years older than Tony, came to UMass in 1989-90 as a transfer from Triton Junior College, where he earned varsity letters in both football and track.

"John Calipari was the guy who was instrumental in pointing Chris out to us," Reid said.

Participation in sports was encouraged in the Barbee family while growing up.

[Participation] was stressed to a point," recalled Chris. "If we showed interest in something, my mom and dad would always be there to support us."

"I think ever since I was in a crib, I always had a ball of some sort in my hands," Tony said. "My dad played sports in college and it was just a big thing for him to have his sons play sports too."

The elder Barbee played both offensive and defensive tackle for the football team at Tennessee State.

Like most brothers, the Barbees engaged in some friendly, but intense sibling competition as youths.

"It wasn't cut-throat but we had some pretty intense games," Chris recalls. "I always put my best foot forward playing against him, just like he did against me."

Chris said most of these athletic confrontations took the form of one-on-one basketball games in front of their house.

Tony credited these early games with Chris as having helped him become a better athlete.

"I think he was a big part of my success because we used to battle and compete with each other," he said. "Being older, he always used to beat me, until that one day; maybe I grew a little bit taller than him, and then I started beating him. I think that he had a big influence on my being successful in sports."

"It was kind of rough my freshman year, being away from home for the first time," Tony said. "Chris came up second semester and it was just like I had another piece of home with me."

Chris said his decision to attend UMass was largely influenced by the fact his brother was a student here.

"I thought it would be a great and unique opportunity to see him play a couple of years of his collegiate career before I graduate," Chris said.

Their respective coaches praise both brothers, as individuals as well as athletes.

"Tony is our best all-around player," Calipari said. "He's not our best shooter, he's not our best passer and he's not our best rebounder, but he's our best player. He's our most consistent player. He's got a lot of pride and he's a big part of what we've accomplished here.

"He's a great kid and a great athlete. I'm proud to say that he is one of my players."

Tony was named second team All-Atlantic 10 last season. He finished sixth in the A-10 in field goal percentage (.450) and eighth in the A-10 in scoring with 15.3 points per game.

He scored in double figures in 26 of the 30 games he played in and 20 points or more eight times. He led the team in scoring four times and in rebounding five times.

In his two years at UMass he has scored 802 points and collected 271 rebounds for an average of 13.4 points and 4.5 rebounds for his career. He was named to the Atlantic 10 All-Freshman team in 1989-90.

Despite his many personal achievements during his career, Tony said his goals for this season are more concerned with the success of the team than personal accomplishments.

"I'd like to see us win 25 games, win the Atlantic 10 regular season and the tournament and just go to the NCAA's and do well," he said. "I just want to be the leader. I want to be a person everybody can look to for leadership."

Reid praised Chris for his work ethic and attitude.

"He's a real big athlete and a hard worker. He has a great work ethic, he's always hustling and he's got a great attitude."

"He didn't play defensive line in high school and he was injured during his first year at Triton, so he's really still learning the position," he said.

Reid said Chris has made basketball fans out of many football players with his talk about his brother.

"Our favorite basketball player is Tony Barbee, and it's because of Chris," Reid said. "He really brings you into being a great basketball fan. We always hope that Tony scores 40 points."

"You just hope you're kids grow up as well as these two. Both are polite, both are gentlemen and both are hard working athletes. If my kids grow up as well as these two, I'll be very proud."

Hard work finally paying off

By CHRIS CUDDY

What a difference a few years makes.

Three years ago, John Calipari walked through the doors of the Curry Hicks Cage, inherited a University of Massachusetts Men's basketball team that was 10-17, and worked out of an office that was no more than a converted classroom.

Today, Calipari sits in his new office in Boyden, with the knowledge that if all goes right, come March his Minutemen will be one of 64 teams vying for the NCAA Final Four in Minneapolis.

"Three years ago, if someone told me we'd be where we are now, I would've thought they were on drugs," Calipari said.

Calipari's first season was 1988-89, and the Minutemen finished 10-18. Although the record was disappointing, Calipari's first season had it's bright spots.

Specifically, the play of Freshmen Anton Brown and Jim McCoy, who were named to the Atlantic 10 All-Freshmen team.

"It was tough at first, but we had some young men [Tony Barbee, Brown, McCoy, and Harper Williams] who took a chance with us," Calipari said, "We just kept telling them we'd get better, and we did."

Calipari's second year brought a 17-14 record, and the school's first NIT berth since 1976-77. Although the Minutemen bowed out in the first round to Maryland, Calipari had brought to Amherst what they hadn't had in over a decade: a winning team.

The Cage, with it's fan turnout once resembling that of a Cleveland Indians game, was now filling up, as students turned out in droves to support their team.

"Fanwise, we used to have to beg them to come," McCoy said, "Now, people are begging us for tickets."

With it's new found success, the team headed into 1990-91 looking to break into the national picture. Headlining the 20-13 Minuteman season, was a nationally televised ESPN game, and a berth in the NIT Final Four.

I think that the reson we've been able to be sucessfull, is that we've worked real hard, and been real lucky," Calipari said, "Regardless of that, I don't think we could've gotten anywhere without the University wanting us to get better.

"We've got a new respect from the media and around the nation, people are interested in what UMass is doing. That, and the new building, will help in attracting recruits, but the new NCAA rules will hurt."

The Minutemen now garner a new found respect around campus, a respect Calipari hopes isn't for the wrong reason's.

"If we do garner more respect around the University, I hope it's not just because we're winning. I hope it's because of the positive way we represent the University, both on and off the court."

"Coach Calipari used to tell me and Jim [McCoy] to be patient, and things would get better, and he was right," Brown said.

What UMass hoop used to be

Program does a 360 in four years

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Staff

The past four years have brought major changes in the University of Massachusetts men's basketball program. The memories of Ron Gerlufson and his mediocre teams have been all but forgotten since the arrival of John Calipari and the new and improved (and very exciting) Minuteman squad.

In 1987 I arrived on campus, looking forward to seeing Division I basketball in person. I had no illusions the UMass Minutemen could rival the Georgetown Hoyas, but I expected the enthusiasm from players and fans would be similar.

I should have known that my initial experience with college basketball would be flawed when I received my residence hall assignment from Housing Services. I had been placed in McNamara Hall in Sylvan, the furthest possible dorm from the Cage.

The 1987-88 Minutemen finished 10-17. The team was not without talent, but the lack of support for the team on campus and the low attendance figures at the games, were not conducive to winning.

In those days there was seldom the sellout crowd that has come to be expected in recent years. There were even several articles written in the Collegian urging fans to come out and support the basketball team, a thought which would seem ludicrous to the legions of Minutemaniacs on campus today.

Despite their record, there were highlights to the season. The biggest was Lorenzo Sutton becoming the all-time career scoring leader at UMass. Sutton's total of 1,718 points gave reporters covering the Minutemen something positive to write about.

A move to Kennedy Residence Hall for the Fall of 1988 brought me much closer to the Cage and allowed me to witness the revival of Minuteman basketball first-hand.

The end of the '87-'88 season brought about an upheaval in the program. John Calipari was brought in to replace Ron Gerlufson as head coach. Calipari brought with him an enthusiasm which was lacking in Gerlufson, and two recruits, Jim McCoy and Anton Brown.

Brown and McCoy assumed the position as the starting guards in their first season at UMass. The team showed promise early in the year, but that promise was derailed by the arrests of senior forwards David Brown and Duane Chase. The subsequent departure of Brown (20 points, 6 rebs.), and Chase (13 points, 8 rebs.) left the Minutemen in a hole which they couldn't climb out of.

McCoy and Anton Brown performed well in their first season and provided the program with two cornerstones on which to build. Both players were named to the Atlantic 10 All-Freshmen team.

The 1989-90 team truly brought the "Rage" back to the Cage. The heightened enthusiasm on campus and the arrival of another talented bunch of recruits produced a 17-13 record and led the Minutemen to post-season play for the first time since 1977.

High-flying forward William Herndon became an immediate crowd-pleaser with his many dunks. Freshmen Tony Barbee and Harper Williams joined Herndon, McCoy and Brown in the starting rotation.

An early season knee injury to Brown forced senior Cary Herer to step in at point guard. Any fears of a collapse by the team were put to rest early as Herer proved to be a capable leader.

A Minuteman winning streak over intersession, which briefly put the team on top of the conference, played a large role in the resurgence of fan support. The cage was packed for every game during the spring semester and fan support was further enhanced when UMass gained an invitation to compete in the NIT Tournament.

Last year, the team had one of its finest seasons ever, finishing with a 20-13 record and a trip to the final four of the NIT. Brown came back successfully from his injury and completed the solid starting unit of McCoy, Barbee, Herndon and Williams.

Seniors John Tate and Rafer Giles provided experience and depth off the bench. Highlights of the season included Giles scoring his 1,000th point and McCoy breaking Sutton's all-time scoring record.

This season, UMass is the pre-season pick for the top spot in the A-10. McCoy, Brown, Barbee, Herndon and Williams are all back and should provide the team with necessary leadership. Experience should be a key for this group as they enter their third season of play together. This year's recruiting class should have enough talent to make up for the graduation of Giles and Tate.

Dreams of the NCAA tournament prevail and players and fans may not be satisfied with a third straight trip to the NIT. It's time that the Minutemen make it to the big time.

Freshman Roe facing high expectations

By TED KOTTLER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team pulled in its mostly highly-touted recruit to date, when Louis Roe, a 6'7", 210 pound freshman forward from Atlantic City High School in Atlantic City, N.J. decided to come to UMass. Many national recruiting experts regard Roe as one of the best freshmen in the country. He graduated as ACHS' all-time leading scorer and rebounder. In his senior year, he averaged 26.1 points and 15.0 rebounds per game. This past week, I had a chance to talk with Roe about his background and the upcoming season.

TK: Louis, why did you come to UMass?
LR: Everywhere I went [this past summer], to tournaments and stuff, everyone asked me, "Why UMass?" I was recruited by a lot of big schools [Syracuse, Florida, Clemson, James Madison], but some of them required you take the SAT before signing.

UMass said it would take me whether I scored the necessary 700 or not, and if I didn't they'd sit me down [redshirt me] my first year, and there were only a few schools that would do that.

I've seen UMass play before, and I didn't think it was a bad school at all, and I thought I would fit in. I've known the coaches since my sophomore year of high school, and they've been recruiting me since then.

That's why the decision was easy, because of my relationship with the coaches. They're young, and I feel if I have a problem or anything I can go talk to them. When things get rough, and I get out of hand, they step up. They're kind of fun to be around, and I think it's important to feel comfortable with the coaches.

I had a couple of other coaches visit me at home last year, and they and their schools seemed pretty boring. I didn't want that, I wanted to come to school and have fun.

TK: You've been playing for ACHs for four years, and now you're joining a new team. Do you think you can fit in to Coach Calipari's game plan?
LR: It's not different. If he [Calipari] has a chance, he likes to let us run, and that's the style we played in high school.

It's a little bit different because everyone's a little bigger, faster, stronger, and can jump higher.

I didn't come here thinking I was going to take anybody's position, I came here to try to fit in first, and then whatever happens, happens. If there's an open spot to move into, I'll move in. I'm not here saying, 'Oh, I'm better than him, I should be playing there.' I think the best five should start. I'm going to come in to give Harper [Williams] or Will [Herndon] a breather.

Seen here dunking against Lithuania, Louis Roe has some mighty tall expectations to fulfill.

That's my role right now, to pick up where they leave off.
TK: By comparison, UMass is a small team, with only one player, 6-10 junior center Kennard Robinson, over 6-7. Do you feel your rebounding is what you can provide to help the team most?
LR: Right now that's my strongest point. But knowing that, I also know I have to work on other things, like my 10-15 foot jumper and moves around the basket. Then I think I'll be alright.

TK: Has anything about the UMass program or college basketball in general surprised you?
LR: I didn't think it was going to be easy going here, but I also didn't think it was going to be as hard as it is. In high school, there are a lot of smaller players.

There aren't many schools with 6-7 players, so you tend to be lazy sometimes playing against the smaller guys. But in college, you've always got to be active. Concentration is key.

TK: Whenever a school recruits a top prospect, everyone associated with the program has high expectations for him. I thought you might feel some added pressure because you fall into that category of highly-touted recruits.
LR: At first I did, because I started off slow, and I was saying, 'Geez, I'm not playin' well,' and people have been saying I'm supposed to be freshman of the year. I have to live up to those expectations.

But I got hurt [ankles], and I'd been playing with the pain, and that made it tough on me. But I'd come back to my room after practice and say, 'To Hell with this, I'm going to start kicking ass.' Now, my ankles are getting better, I'm playing better in practice, and I don't really feel any pressure on me.

I'm not worried about what the press is picking, I'm my own critic. I know what I can do, and I'm going to go out and do it.

TK: Do you think you'll notice a big difference in the level of competition between high school and college basketball?
LR: Well, most of the time when kids come out of high school, they've never played with high school All-Americans or college All-Americans, or any college players at all.

I played in the Hank Gathers College League down in Philadelphia this summer, where all the players from Temple, St. Joseph's, and Villanova play. So, I've played in a college atmosphere, and it's taught me to play with a stronger attitude going to the hoop and also taught me to give guys respect, too.

TK: A lot of people in the basketball community have high expectations for this team, and I wonder what you think makes it a good one. What are its real strengths?
LR: Right now I see that everybody's friends, and there's no static in the team atmosphere, so everybody gets along. Most teams break down when one player gets jealous of the playing time another one's getting, or something like that. I think everybody on the team wants to be a winner.

UMass' return: Thirty years and counting...

By DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

"We just didn't play ball. We had the shots but I've never seen us shoot so badly. But, we'll be back."

-Former UMass Head Basketball Coach Matt Zunic after his 1961-62 team lost 70-50 to New York University in the opening round of the NCAA Tournament.

Matt Zunic wasn't specific about when UMass would "be back," but the lofty pre-season predictions for Coach John Calipari's 1991-92 squad are invoking memories of the "Zunicmen" and their trip to the Big Dance in 1962.

What could be more fitting then commemorating the 30th Anniversary of UMass' first and only NCAA Tournament appearance with another NCAA berth?

"It was a fantastic coaching job," says Jack Leaman who was an assistant under Zunic during the '61-'62 season. "Zunic did a superb job."

Leaman, 59, who now serves as an assistant to women's head coach Joanie O'Brien, recalls Zunic's tremendous ability to get the most out of his players.

Looking at the final scores from the season Leaman shakes his head and smiles. "The son of a gun had the ability to bring a team together," Leaman says.

The Redmen, as they were known then, went 8-2 in the YanCon that year losing both games to conference powerhouse, the University of Connecticut. In the 17 years prior, UConn had won 15 conference titles, according to Leaman. But other YanCon losses by UConn enabled UMass to take the title.

Zunic remembers the season as being divided into two distinct halves. The Redmen went 5-7 through their first 12. Then, in the second semester, guard and co-captain Mike Mole returned to the line-up and UMass ended the regular season at 15-8.

Mole, who now lives in Long Island, NY, remembers he wasn't going to play that whole season, in fact he wasn't even taking classes during the first semester.

"I had one year of eligibility left and I planned on using it in 1963," Mole says. "Then because the team was 5-7 coach asked me to come back."

Luckily for the Redmen, Mole did come back and his impact was immediate. Mole's first game back was against St. Peter's College at Madison Square Garden. By all indications that game was the turning point of the 1961-62 season.

Mole remembers that the game plan against UMass was to press and press hard. That game plan fell by the wayside with the return of Mole and UMass beat St. Peter's by 19 to begin a five game winning streak. The Redmen then won their last five as well.

"[Mole] was the guy who gave us the shot in the arm when we needed it," recalls Dick Bresciani, who was the assistant Sports Information Director during the season and now serves as Vice President of Public Relations for the Boston Red Sox. "He was an excellent catalyst."

"We started off poorly but then Mole came back," Zunic remembers from his home in Crystal River, Fla. "We knew when he came back, we'd be back in the running."

Mole averaged 11.9 points a game with 143 points in just 12 games and along with Rodger Twitchell and Pete Bernard led the team in scoring.

However, after the first six of Mole, Bernard, Twitchell, co-captain Kirk Leslie (who tragically died in a car accident some years after graduation), Charlie Fohlin and Don Black, the Redmen were not a very deep squad, Leaman admits.

This became clear during the first round of the NCAA Tournament against New York University. The game was played in the Palestra in Philadelphia, which at the time according to Leaman was "the mecca of college basketball, next to the old Madison Square Garden. It was an exciting place to play."

But even the excitement of the Palestra couldn't help the Redmen overcome the depth of the NYU team.

"We were very thin after those six guys," Leaman says. "NYU was a very good team. We played well for the first half and then our center [Fohlin] fouled out."

NYU's non-starters played well, still the Redmen trailed by just four at the half, but All-American forward Barry Kramer led NYU with 15 points including 7-10 from the charity stripe as NYU outscored UMass by 16 in the second half.

"He was a tough coach and when I say tough, I mean tough," Bresciani says.

"He wanted success and he wanted us to be winners," says Mole who now lives in Long Island. "He worked us hard because he wanted us to succeed. His first love was basketball."

"His language was rancid," Fohlin recalls. "He never enamored himself with the administration."

In addition, Fohlin remembers some of Zunic's 'strategies,' used to intimidate other teams or players.

"We were playing a team with a real good driving guard," Fohlin says. "Zunic told all of us to foul him on his first drive through the lane - HARD.

"He threatened to bench us if we didn't do it. We did, and it worked. The guy didn't drive the rest of the game."

Zunic was also known for never holding back what he had to say and that was especially true in his relationship with the referees.

"You always had to worry about the officials where you played," Zunic recalls. "I got my share of T's, and I don't mean timeouts.

"There were a lot of problems with the officiating. You had to keep checking them. I knew there were some things going on. We were limited with finances at UMass, but some of these people would pay [more money] for the refs."

Fohlin was a 6-foot-7 center and during that time, Fohlin was regarded as a big man, even though today's standards might place a man of his size in the backcourt.

"I was considered big at that time," Fohlin, 51, says. "Most of the time there wasn't anyone to defend [Black and me]. It's changed dramatically since then."

Black was considered more of the scorer, averaging 7.8 points per game, and Fohlin was the self-described "beef," recording just over five points a game but hauling in close to seven rebounds an outing. Twitchell was the team's leading rebounder with 12 per game.

Now living in Stratford, NH, Black was a 6-foot-8 center who came to UMass on a full scholarship after deciding that the big city life of Boston University didn't suit a "country boy" from South Athol.

"I was only 19 or 20 at the time and there was always a lot of pressure," Black, 52, says. "Playing under scholarship was like having a job — a good job."

Part of that job for Black was hitting a hook shot which not many defenders could touch, in addition Black liked to shoot from the outside, but remembers that Coach Zunic frowned upon the big men shooting from the outside.

"That was part of the rigid structure of the game then," Black says.

Now, as the Pearl Anniversary of the Redmen's Tournament appearance approaches, former Coach Zunic offers some prudent advice to this year's Minutemen in their quest for a NCAA bid. The Zunic outspokeness obviously remains.

"Keep on winning and try to win the conference," Zunic advises. "Then you don't have to worry about who's on that committee. It's all a political game."

NCAA Top 40 in a Collegian-size nutshell

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Last fall there was little doubt who was the preseason No. 1 in college basketball — it was the University of Nevada Las Vegas.

Rather the preseason debates focused around whether or not the Runnin' Rebels were the best college basketball team ever assembled, whether or not coach Jerry Tarkanian would follow his starting line-up into the pros and who the hell could ever beat these guys. The answers: probably not, no and Duke.

This season there is no one, clear cut, dominant team out there. Instead there are many excellent squads that could walk away with the title in Minneapolis come March. Last year Duke proved that it is not always the team with the most talent that wins the national championship. However, even with that in mind, for my preseason No. 1, I will take the talent and the Razorbacks of the University of Arkansas. Here are my Top 20 picks.

No. 1 — ARKANSAS — If you want talent try Lee Mayberry, Todd Day and Oliver Miller on for size. With Miller it's a lot of size, like 6-foot-9, 325 pounds. He's the second best center in the SEC and one of the top three in the nation. Mayberry is a skillful pointguard, who should be a first team All-American and Day is a 6-foot-8 scoring guard who is just about unstopable one-on-one. Toss in some experienced bench players and solid newcomers and Nolan Richardson's team will be tough to beat.

Coming off of a 34-4 season in 1991 the Razorbacks will have to stay clear of the off the court problems that plagued them last year. Presently Day and Miller are suspended due to discipline problems and neither will play until January. But the tournament does not start until March and by then Arkansas will be in full swing and poised for the title.

No. 2 — DUKE — The team that did the impossible last year, returns four quality starters for this season's campaign. Christian Laetner and Bobby Hurley are as good as anyone around, both possess superior skill and poise. Grant Hill and Thomas Hill add athleticism and some shooting touch. Three freshman bring needed size. The team doesn't have a weakness and who can argue with the Blue Devils after what they did last March? One down note for coach Mike Krzyzewski is the transfer of three point ace Billy McCaffrey to Vanderbilt, but coach "K" shouldn't fear too much, this team will find a way to be in the title hunt in Minneapolis.

No. 3 — UCLA — The Bruins may be just as talented as Arkansas. Forward Don MacLean (23.0 ppg) and Tracy Murray (21.2 ppg) are both flat out scorers and guard Darrick Martin knows how to get the ball to them while adding some outside range himself. 1990 top recruit Ed O'Bannon, a 6-foot-8 forward, who sat out last year with a knee injury, adds more punch inside. Anyone doubting that UCLA is for real needed only to witness the drubbing they gave Indiana last Friday in Springfield.

No. 4 — ARIZONA — The other big gun out of the PAC-10, the Wildcats should battle UCLA all season for "best in the west" bragging rights. A meeting in the Final Four to decide it isn't out of the question. Sean Rooks and 7-footer Ed Stokes are tough to stop inside. Kentucky transfer Chris Mills pumped in over 15 points a game last season but most feel that he isn't even close to his potential. The Wildcats poses a 64 game home winning streak and even though the point guard situation is a little weak, if the Wildcats gel — look out.

No. 5 — INDIANA — The Hoosiers are loaded and no one can argue with any Bobby Knight team having the opportunity to win a national championship, in fact few would want to argue face to face with Knight about anything. Calbert Cheaney will be the big gun for Indiana teaming up with Eric Anderson and freshman Alan Henderson to form a potent frontcourt. A deep backcourt with heralded Damon Bailey and Jamal Meeks should lead the attack and the Hoosiers into the title hunt. Any team with Knight at the helm is capable of a championship and this team has the talent to boot.

No. 6 — KENTUCKY — Rick Pitino will be glad to see four starters return to a team that finished No. 9 in the Final AP poll last season, but couldn't enter the tournament due to probation. The probation has been lifted and the Wildcats are as good as anyone in the nation. Kentucky will run and gun it, keying on the explosive sophomore Jamal Mashburn and a slew of newcomers. Travis Ford transferred from Missouri and should start at point guard, while Chris Harrison, who averaged nearly 30 points a game as a senior in high school, will contribute at the other guard position.

No. 7 — LSU — Shaquille. The only word necessary when describing the Tigers. O'Neal, an imposing 7-footer who can do it all, is the nations best player and a future franchise player in the NBA. Right now though he is the franchise for Dale Brown's team, that as long as the Shaq is around, can beat anyone in the nation. Mike Hansen, a 58 percent three point shooter and prop 48 case Jamie Brandon help out in the backcourt, but the key to the Tigers will remain O'Neal.

No. 8 — OHIO STATE — Junior forward Jimmy Jackson lead the Buckeyes to a 27-4 record last season and now is back for more. A likely First Team All-American, Jackson is a pure scorer, especially tough to stop in the clutch, a team leader and the returning Big 10 Player of the Year. Mark Baker and Jamal Brown both averaged double figures in points last season and they make up an excellent guard combo.

No. 9 — ST. JOHN'S — Malik Sealy is the big time performer for the Lou Carnesecca's Redmen. Sealy, a 6-foot-8 leaper, tossed home 22.1 points a game last season, while grabbing a team high 66 steals. Guard Jason Buchanan is the floor leader and a defensive standout. Center Robert Werdann surprised everyone last year with a soft touch around the hoop. The Redmen are a consistent team which will play great defense and make few mistakes, just how Carnesecca likes his teams.

No. 10 — SETON HALL — St. John's may be a good defensive team but probably none arebetter than the Pirates. Opponents shot a mere 40 percent against the Hall last year and now they add 7-foot-2, 295 pound Luther Wright, a prop 48 case last season. On offense, coach P.J. Carlesimo will look to Terry Dehere, a sweet shooting guard, who is an All-American candidate. The rest of the team is solid and despite the loss of Anthony Avent to the NBA, the Hall have a good chance at repeating as Big East Champs.

No. 11 — OKLAHOMA STATE — Although the Cowboys lack a little depth, they are still the class of the Big Eight. Byron Houston brings true meaning to the position — power forward. The Karl Malone clone is a terror, imposing on defense and has a nice touch around the net (22.7 ppg). Point guard Sean Smith, the coaches son, should provide leadership and shooting ability and will be joined in the backcourt by Darwyn Alexander.

No. 12 — CONNECTICUT — Coach Jim Calhoun has built upon his recent success by bringing in a top recruiting class (second only to Michigan). The most impressive freshman should be 6-foot-9 forward Donyell Marshall. Mashall lacks bulk (175 lbs.) but not agility and an outside shot. Look for freshmen Kevin Ollie and Brian Fair also to make an impact. Despite the blue-chip recruits, the top Husky this season will remain Chris Smith. Smith is a great ball handler, shooter (18.9 ppg) and defender. Forward Scott Burrell is equally impressive. Look for the Huskies to make it three straight Sweet 16's.

No. 13 — OKLAHOMA — The Sooners, like UMass, made it to the NIT Final Four last season. In Amherst, there was ecstasy, in Norman, disappointment. The talented Oklahoma squad should return to the big time this season. As a freshman, forward Jeff Wright scored over 18 points a game last season. Now he's prime to make even bigger waves. Add to that long-range bomber Brent Price and a slew of juco recruits and the tournament coach Billy Tubbs' team plays in this spring won't be a disappointment.

No. 14 — KANSAS — Although Mark Randell is gone, don't count the Jayhawks out of the picture. Last year Kansas rolled over Indiana, Arkansas and North Carolina only to be stopped by Duke in the National Championship Game. Returning stars include guard Adonis Jordan and forward Alonzo Jamison. The Jayhawks have a solid, experienced bench and some good recruits, this year. They may not be the most talented team around but they always seem to be a force during March Madness.

No. 15 — NORTH CAROLINA — The Tar Heels probably won't make the Final Four this season, but maybe next year. Gone are Rick Fox and Pete Chilcutt but the sophomore class is an awesome one. Eric Montross, Derrick Phelps and Brian Reese should live up to the billing of one of the best recruiting classes ever. The key to Dean Smith's team will be the 7-foot Montross and whether he has the ability to dominate a game single handily. Like all Smith teams, the Tar Heels will make few mistakes, either physically or mentally.

No. 16 — UTAH — It's the Utes, not BYU that are the top dogs in Utah. Senior big man Josh Grant can play with anyone, but few can cover him. Grant is a 6-foot-10 center, who can not only drive the lane but also possesses a great outside jumper and regularly cans the three pointer. Besides Grant, coach Rick Majerus has a solid and deep team. The Utes, 30-4 last season, make few errors and are the type of team that can make a serious run in the NCAAs.

No. 17 — MICHIGAN — As four 1991 McDonald's All-Americans roll into Ann Arbor the future looks bright for the Wolverines. The recruiting class has been called the best ever by many. The best of the best is Detroit's Chris Webber, a 6-foot-9 forward, who is supposed to be the best prep player from Michigan since one Earvin Johnson. Webber will make an immediate impact with his size strength and agility. Three other freshman may join Webber in the starting line-up by tournament time, and if they come along as expected, Wolverine fans may not have to wait too long for that bright future.

No. 18 — GEORGETOWN — Four years ago Alonzo Mourning was the top recruit in the nation, a player that was the last cut on the 1988 U.S. Olympic team before he had ever played a NCAA game. Now, as a senior, it's time for Mourning to live up to his potential, and with Dikembe Mutombo gone, the offense will center around him. Guard's Charles Harrison and Joey Brown survived up and down freshman years and should aid Mourning now that they have more experience.

No. 19 — FLORIDA STATE — Amp Lee and Edgar Bennett form one of the premier one-two punches in the nation, oops wrong sport. Douglas Edwards and Charlie Ward form one of the premier one-two punches in the nation. Douglas, a 6-foot-9 forward, averaged 16.4 points a game last year, while developing into an all around force. Ward is practicing his passing, but as a teammate of Lee's and Bennett's. A back-up quarterback, the basketball guard won't return to the court until after the January 1st Bowl games. Toss in juco transfer Sam Cassell at the other guard slot and FSU will be a forcee in its first year in the ACC.

No. 20 — ALABAMA — A preseason Top 5 last season, coach Wimp Sanderson's team won the SEC but died in the tournament and fell short of its expectations. This season they return forward Robert Horry (77 blocks) and guard James Robinson to a team that should be able to run with anyone. The Tide picked up some junior college help but until they solve their point guard problems they won't return to the upper echelon of college basketball.

Winning tiny obstacle for recovered Riley

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

For Tricia Riley, just making it through the 1991-92 season would be a storybook ending to her career at the University of Massachusetts.

"If I had one goal for this season, it would be to just finish the season," Riley said.

As a member of UMass' women's basketball team, Riley had an outstanding sophomore season in 1989-90, playing in all 28 games, and leading the team in assists.

With that season behind her, Riley headed to her junior year looking to help lead the Minutewomen from her point guard slot.

However, during preseason Riley would suffer a back injury, jeopardizing her future at UMass.

During the next two years, Riley would play in only five games, sitting out the 1990-91 season as a medical redshirt.

This year, Riley is back for her fifth season at the cage, looking to bolster a team that struggled through an 0-27 campaign.

In 1991-92, with new coach Joanie O'Brien at the helm, and a brand new coaching philosophy, look for a new look Minutewomen squad to "Surprise a lot of people," according to Riley.

"We might not win a lot of games this year, but I think at this point this year, we're better than we ever were last year, and we haven't played a game," Riley said.

Riley's comeback bid got off on the right foot two weeks ago, in an 85-42 drubbing at the hands of the Lithuanian National team. Riley played 18 minutes, collecting three points, three rebounds, and three assists. The biggest scare of the night came with two minutes left in the first half, when she fell hard on her back, although it appears Riley is feeling no ill effects.

"I don't think a fall is going to hurt her any more than day-to-day playing," O'Brien said, "With her, we're just going to take it day by day, and save her for the games."

Riley has not recovered 100 percent from her injury, and is still not able to practice everyday.

"I don't practice every day, and sometimes I feel like I'm letting the team down," Riley said. "But hopefully, I can finish the season, and if I can I'd just have to thank God, the coaching staff, and my teammates for being so patient."

The center of attention

Kristofik switching to new postion

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

As the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team gears up for its first season under coach Joanie O'Brien, the players realize they are going to make sacrifices. One player in particular being asked to sacrifice something is junior Kim Kristofik.

Kristofik is being asked to take a step up and play center for the team in its rebuilding year. The 6-1 forward averaged 6.8 points per game during a very disappointing 0-27 season for the Minutewomen. Yet she said she is optimistic about this year.

"Everyone's working really hard," she said. "We need something a little different to change things."

Kristofik is quick for her size, and O'Brien said she hopes the team can use this to its advantage.

"You can use someone like Kim to outrun someone down the floor," she said. "She doesn't play as big as most centers, but we'd like to take advantage of her speed and quickness, and sneak in a few baskets."

The Atlantic 10 has a lot of tall centers that Kristofik must compete against. On any given night, she will give up at least an inch to her rival. Although Kristofik may be able to outshoot her competition, the problem lies in rebounding. The Minutewomen were simply horrible under the boards last year.

"Rebounding is concentration," O'Brien said. "If you want the ball, you're going to get it no matter what."

Kristofik is not totally unaccustomed to the role of center. In her four years at Morris (NY) Central High School, Kristofik played in the paint, and was very successful.

In her senior year, she averaged 19.5 points and 11.9 rebounds. She finished her career with 1,171 points, and holds the school record in steals. "After playing center in high school, I learned to play outside [as a forward]," she said. "I'm a little smaller than most centers, but speedwise I should be quicker."

Her versatility and willingness to adapt to a different role should help the Minutewomen put a faster, more competitive team on the floor.

and both will look for even better numbers.

There's good news and bad news in Pittsburgh for the Duquesne Duchesses. The good news is that the team returns four starters. The bad news is that those starters last year were only good enough for an 8-20, (3-15 A-10) record last year. Darcie Vincent had a phenomenal junior year with 17 points per game, but the Duchesses must get help from others if they want to improve.

The good news is that Massachusetts can't be any worse than they were last year. The bad news is that they probably won't get much better either.

When coach Joanie O'Brien says the Minutewomen will be starting over, she wasn't trying to fool anyone. UMass was 0-27 last year, and gone are Keyburn McKusker, Lisa Ireland and Jessica Schusler. In addition, the Minutewomen have no freshmen recruits to help out.

The Minutewomen will look to their quickness in counteracting their lack of size. UMass' hopes to a large degree lie on senior Trish Riley's back.

Riley has played only five games in the past two seasons due to a chronic back injury, but her skills at guard warranted a good, long look. Riley is a good outside shooter who will try to push the ball up as much as possible.

Kim Kristofik will try to anchor the Minutewomen while playing a new position: center. As a forward last season, Kristofik averaged 6.8 points and 5.7 rebounds. She has demonstrated her shooting ability, but as of yet it is unclear whether she will help the team in rebounding.

Jenny Moran will spread opposing defenses out with her 18-foot jumpers this year. Moran, a forward with a good shooting eye, should improve from last season.

Laurie Dondarski may be the most interesting player of this year's team. Dondarski, a sophomore, has secured a spot on the roster as a walk-on. She is a member of the UMass softball team in the spring, but will look to turn the lady hoopsters around this fall.

O'Brien has a very difficult job this season: she must whip together a rag-tag group into a Division 1 basketball team, and compete at the level of the Atlantic-10. Meanwhile, she must also somehow recruit young players for the upcoming season. O'Brien has hired two capable assistants in Jill Rooney and Jack Leamen, who used to coach the men's team at UMass.

O'Brien has yet to pin down a starting lineup, so everything is pretty much up for grabs. She said, she hopes to garner seven wins this year, which may be a stretch.

Cape Fear is brilliantly terrifying

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Phenomenal: Master director Martin Scorsese (Goodfellas) has crafted a superior remake of the 1962 classic Cape Fear that adds a moral complexity to the nail-biting suspense and excellent acting.

The Box Office

Ex-public defender Sam Bowden (Nick Nolte) has moved his family — wife Leigh (Jessica Lange) and daughter Danny (Juliette Lewis) — to the fashionable Southern town of New Essex. Their life is not perfect; Leigh is still hurting over an affair Sam had with another woman and Danny and Sam share a tense untrusting relationship.

However, their family is getting better. That is, until Max Cady (Robert DeNiro) comes into their lives.

Cady has just been released from a 14-year prison sentence for a vicious rape and assault. Sam was his public defender at the trial. Because of his repulsion over Cady's crime, he had buried evidence crucial to the case. Cady has found out and is back to "teach Sam about loss."

He begins to harass the Bowdens, annoying them at first, then gradually breaking down their family. Cady is unrelenting and untouchable by the law. Sam goes to the police (Robert Mitchum — who played Cady in the original) and finally to a private detective (Joe Don Baker), who is perfectly willing to break some laws to protect the Bowdens.

Coupled with the re-orchestrated Bernard Herrmann score, Scorsese creates an instant atmosphere of fear and anxiety, keeping it constant throughout the film. Cady is slowly driving the family apart, pushing each of them to their respective limits. At one point, Cady poses as Danny's new drama teacher in a spellbinding and haunting scene. Cady uses Danny's budding sexuality and her problems with Sam and Leigh to form and uneasy bond.

The last half hour is a virtual edge-of-your-seat thrill marathon as Sam and his family flee to the Cape Fear River. It's a non-stop confrontation as the upper hand changes many times. The film is so relentless it leaves one exhausted and in awe.

The performances couldn't be any better. Robert DeNiro, arguably America's best actor, is chilling as the evil incarnate Max Cady. He uses his twisted view of redemption and justice to trap and eventually rip apart the Bowden family. Complete with a myriad of tattoos and a vicious redneck drawl, DeNiro is so effective he could give Hannibal Lecter a run for his money.

"Robert DeNiro, arguably America's best actor, is chilling as the evil incarnate Max Cady. . . so effective he could give Hannibal Lecter a run for his money."

Nick Nolte (48 Hours) plays Sam as a man trapped by his past and his present mistakes. He's not the pillar of goodness like Gregory Peck played him in the 1962 version (Peck appears in a cameo as Cady's lawyer here). Sam's barely holding on to his own wife and daughter and he's not willing to let go. He's the closest thing to a moral center in Cape Fear.

Jessica Lange and film newcomer Juliette Lewis complete the main cast. Lange is in top form, taking the under-realized character of Leigh and making it credible. Lewis is mesmerizing as the vulnerable target Danny. She measures up to her powerful co-stars, especially DeNiro. Lewis deserves an Academy Award nomination for her work.

Cape Fear is the most exciting thriller since Silence of the Lambs and Dead Again. But it's more than cheap thrills and suspense. It's an unrelenting, dark moral tale aided by a superb cast and expert direction.

RESCHEDULING OF FINAL EXAMS ON OFFICIAL SNOW DAYS

In order to reschedule final examinations in case of snow, 2 alternate exam periods have been devised. They are 6:30pm and 8:45pm each exam day. The use of these alternate periods in the event of closings is outlined below. In addition, the academic calendar includes Monday, December 23 as an official snow day in the event that the University is closed Dec. 21. This policy goes into effect ONLY if the University is officially closed. The snow day "hot line" is 545-3630. If the University is open, all exams are expectedto take place as scheduled. Each faculty member should inform his or her class of the planned time and location of the rescheduled exam in the event of a snow day. All rescheduled exams will be held in the same location as published in the final exam schedule.

If the University is closed until 11:00am:

8:00am	rescheduled to 6:30pm same day
10:30am	rescheduled to 8:45 same day
1:30pm	held as originally scheduled
4:00pm	held as originally scheduled

except Dec. 21:

8:00am	rescheduled to 1:30pm same day
10:30am	rescheduled to 4:00pm same day

If the University is closed all day but open in the evening:

8:00am	rescheduled to 6:30pm same day
10:30am	rescheduled to 8:45pm same day
1:30pm	rescheduled to 6:30pm next exam day
4:00pm	rescheduled to 8:45pm next exam day

1:30pm Dec. 20	rescheduled to 1:30pm Dec. 21
4:00pm Dec. 20	rescheduled to 4:00pm Dec. 21
8:00pm Dec. 21	rescheduled to 6:30pm same day
10:30pm Dec. 21	rescheduled to 8:45pm same day

If the University is closed all afternoon and all evening:

8:00am	held as originally scheduled
10:30am	held as originally scheduled
1:30pm	rescheduled to 6:30pm next exam day
4:00pm	rescheduled to 8:45pm next exam day

1:30pm	rescheduled to 1:30pm Dec. 21
4:00pm	rescheduled to 4:00pm Dec. 21

If the University is closed all day and all evening:

8:00am	rescheduled to 6:30pm next exam day
10:30am	rescheduled to 8:45pm next exam day
1:30pm	rescheduled to 6:30pm exam day after next
4:00pm	rescheduled to 8:45pm exam day after next

8:00am Dec. 19	rescheduled to 6:30pm Dec. 20
10:30am Dec. 19	rescheduled to 8:45pm Dec. 20
1:30pm Dec. 19	rescheduled to 1:30pm Dec. 21
4:00pm Dec. 19	rescheduled to 4:00pm Dec. 21
8:00am Dec. 20	rescheduled to 1:30pm Dec. 21
10:30am Dec. 20	rescheduled to 4:00pm Dec. 21
1:30pm Dec. 20	rescheduled to 6:30pm Dec. 21
4:00pm Dec. 20	rescheduled to 8:45pm Dec. 21
8:00am Dec. 21	rescheduled to 8:00am Dec. 23
10:30am Dec. 21	rescheduled to 10:30am Dec. 23

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A real estate matter requires prompt attention. Your pride of ownership comes to the fore. Use the weekend to spruce up your property. Cast shyness overboard if you want more friends. Mingle!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A good day to talk directly with people in authority. Consult your doctor, lawyer or public officials. Setting new priorities will help you make better use of your time.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may want to invest in something that your intuition says will be financially rewarding. Male is supportive. Your earning power is about to get a welcome boost. Count your blessings!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make certain to keep up with your work today. A supervisor could be more difficult than usual. Your imagination may be working overtime where romantic partner is concerned.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An old friend helps you develop a special talent. Larger paychecks are possible. A job interview or business conference goes better than you expected. Dance the blues away tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Look for new ways to showcase your talents. Family members need to know exactly where they stand. A candid conversation proves fascinating. You are amazed by a younger person's ideas.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Postpone travel. Others look to you for guidance in time of crisis. A positive attitude will help you work wonders when dealing with a stubborn individual.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Do not allow jealousy to get the upper hand today. An extravagant romantic gesture could put a severe strain on your budget. Pursue your aims quietly. A period of solitude proves welcome.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A co-worker may be jealous of your ideas. Keep your plans under wraps. A full financial recovery is part of the picture. A loan or grant relieves worries about a student's tuition.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Go ahead and speak up at a business meeting. An authority figure will be impressed with your ideas. Originality counts big with influential people. Give serious thought to forming a new alliance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A close professional relationship gets a big boost. Tackle tasks that require careful attention to detail. Friends prove their loyalty. Say "goodbye" to someone who plays games in romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An old friend gives you new insights regarding a problem. Make a firm choice after conducting your own research. Double-check any financial figures to prevent costly mistakes.

New U2 album is a visionary masterpiece

By MICHAEL FETTERER
Collegian Correspondent

Achtung Baby
U2
Island Records

When your favorite band releases its first new album in three years, it's hard to listen to it with an objective ear. But you can't help but enjoy Achtung Baby, U2's new arrival onto the modern music scene. Lead singer Bono, guitarist The Edge, bassist Adam Clayton and drummer Larry Mullen Jr. make up the Irish group, and once again they demonstrate their ability to captivate the listener from beginning to end, with a whole new style that faithful fans might find a little surprising.

In December 1990, U2 resurfaced on the radio with "Night and Day," a song appearing on Red, Hot and Blue, a benefit compilation for AIDS research. The style of the music was a great change from the band's last album, Rattle and Hum, released in 1988. Many saw the band go through a transformation from their more popular rock and roll sounds from that album and The Joshua Tree, to tunes that were more progressive, on the cutting edge of music technology. Adam Clayton said during an interview in 1988 "We just wanted to capture this period of the band." He was referring to the changes that U2 was going through, like they did in 1983 when they recorded Under a Blood Red Sky. And now with Achtung Baby, their faithful fans get to hear the latest set of changes that have raised their musical style to new levels.

The first track, titled "Zoo Station," almost shocks you if you've ever heard U2 before. It gives you the chills as The Edge's guitar breaks an eerie silence. Synthesized drums crash against your ears like cannons firing. But a definite beat forms from the musical frenzy, and the new U2 is born.

Bono's voice is altered into a technological arrangement of human vocals and electronic distortion. Somehow, all of these drastic changes come together as one and become a dazzling array of sounds that make your ears want to get up and dance.

The album continues with "Even Better Than the Real Thing," a song that could very well be the next hit off the album. Here, the new and old sounds of the band meet, where you can notice the changes and hear how they have grown together.

As with any band, time progresses with its members and that is something you may notice in a few songs. Bono's writing style reflects this point in "Love is Blindness." The background organ gives it a melancholy beginning, but once Bono begins to sing, you can see that the band is far from retirement.

The power that he conveys through his voice and lyrics capture your soul, and takes you to places you never knew existed inside yourself. "One" slows down the pace from the first two tracks with its love son vocals and message of harmony and peace. "So Cruel" incorporates a soft tone and a string arrangement to make a ballad along the lines of "All I Want is You" on Rattle and Hum. And once again, Bono creates a masterpiece with his lyrics in "Trying to Throw Your Arms Around the World," with his ability to say everything and say nothing at the same time.

U2 redefines the rock and roll of today with the popular song "The Fly." With the beat supplied by Larry and Adam, your foot can't help but start tapping. Edge's guitar produces sounds that captivate you. But the best part of the song is when Bono's low voice is paired with a gospel voice that lifts the song up, creating a duo that sound absolutely superb.

Now I can't give away all of the album to you here, that would be pointless. You wouldn't get to form your own opinions or discover things that I haven't mentioned. But Achtung Baby is definitely a change for the better for U2.

The album creates a new sense of purpose for themselves that their old image wasn't doing anymore. They did not build this album upon their past but rather on their future. They look down the road and see what lies in store for them. Some things may be more obvious than others, but they know this album is the starting gate to it all.

And last but not least: Hat's off to The Edge for revealing his receding hairline for the first time since the mini-album Wide Awake in America, released in 1985. Also, there have been rumors floating around that the band is planning a small indoor arena tour during the winter and spring months and then play large outdoor stadiums come summer. Right now, I can't confirm or deny those rumors, but is they turn out to be true, I'll see you in the ticket lines.

Fishbone and Primus bring on the funk

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

Fishbone/Primus
The Springfield Paramount
Wednesday, Nov 20

"We're playing music that is completely different from what's going on now. This ain't no Bobby Brown, it's not a rap group. . ." So claims Kendall Jones from the band Fishbone, at a press conference yesterday on the Amherst College campus. And that's exactly what they were all about last night and no rap.

They stood there and rocked the stage in such a way as to remind folks that funk still exists. . . big time.

It's hard to dance when you're drunk, and if you were as drunk as I was, and were at the show, you still couldn't help but saturate yourself with the funky antics of last nights' show: I danced my ass off. Fishbone were totally awesome. Their lead guitarist, Kendall Rey Jones, pulled some of the best riffs the guitar world had to offer. As well as the best musicians from the circuit were on hand, such as Christofer Dowd and John Bigham. Of course their lead singer, Angelo Moore, has a phenominal stage presence; jumping up and down, playing that damn saxaphone and assuming the role of a complete nuisance.

Primus, what we saw of them, (we got there a little late, seeing that Springfield is out of the way), also had a heyday. Not as incredible as they usually are, managed to torcher their instruments to the expected degree. They are most certainly an amazing find. Let's hope they continue on their path of originality.

On the whole, if both Fishbone, and Primus, get their way, they'll both go far; really far. Their respective labels don't quite know what gems they have on their hands. . . and they have both earned compliments from this critic for not only pleasing his ears, but for pleasing his rather uptight and stuck up taste. Bravo!

Title defense begins for men's swimming

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Correspondent

The men's swimming team will begin its campaign to defend its New England Championship for the sixth consecutive year this weekend, with dual meets at Boston College, today and at Maine tomorrow.

Because the team has lost 20 swimmers to graduation in the past two years, coach Russ Yarworth will call upon his upperclassmen, including senior co-captains Bill Chouinard and Chris Sullivan to lead a group of 16 talented but inexperienced freshmen swimmers.

Yarworth has deemed that this season, because of the great changeover of personal, will be his greatest coaching challenge.

"We're a much better team now than when we started training on September 15," Yarworth said. "These up coming meets at BC and Maine will be a good indicator as to how far the training has taken us."

To repeat as champions, the Minutemen will have to compete with the likes of Connecticut, Providence College and Boston College, all of which figure to be especially strong this season. Not coincidentally, says Yarworth, all of these teams are from the Big East Conference.

"It is very difficult to compete with the recruiting programs of these schools because they receive a lot of exposure and money," Yarworth said.

To enable the Minutemen to compete against schools with more experienced swimmers, Yarworth plans to continue the team's intensive training as the season begins, with less rest in between meets, so that the freshmen will gain experience and seasoning that will prove to be valuable when the team enters the post-season.

"We're still going to go out to win every meet," said Yarworth, "but I'm more concerned with the New England Championships in February."

Yarworth expects to get a big performance out of senior co-captain Bill Chouinard, who won the New England Championship in the breaststroke two years ago and expects to regain his title this season.

Yarworth also believes that juniors Chris Barrett, Jim Gregg, Joe Morris, Scott Reed and Jay Peluso all have the potential to win events at the New Englands.

This season's surprises figure to be juniors Sean Clark and Chris Cotter, who Yarworth expects will develope very quickly because of their hard work, and Greg Meymaris, who missed the New England meet last year because of illness.

Leading this year's crop of freshmen will be Jeff Wicklund, Marc LeFrance, Adam Reich, Tim Milbert and Justin Murphy, who Yarworth considers to be the best diver he has ever recruited.

Despite his team's relative inexperience at this point in the season, Yarwroth feels confident that the Minutemen can still repeat as New England Champions.

"UConn looks flashy because they have some excellent personal, that will win them some events," Yarworth said. "But they cannot win the New England's with a few good people. The kids we will bring to the New England's are not superstars, but if every man can score points in each of his events we can still win the championship."

■ Women's Basketball

The Red Flash feature a strong front court, with junior Erin Murphy and senior Michele Rehm at the two forward spots, and 6-foot senior Vesna Drazetic occupying center.

Drazetic led the team in points (13.1 avg) and rebounds (8.3). The team will try to feed the ball down low to her.

O'Brien, after much deliberation, has said that she has her starting lineup. For now.

O'Brien has said she will start walk-on sophomore Laurie Dondarski and sophomore Shawna Pemberton at guards, Moran and junior Gloria Nevarez at forwards, and Kim Kristofik at center.

"We have no idea what they'll do," O'Brien said. "We'll be worrying too much about ourselves."

What the Minutewomen do have this year is quickness, even if they are a little lacking in height. The key to the game will be whose style dominates the tempo, St. Francis' half-court game, or UMass' fast break. The Minutewomen need to look to Kristofik and Riley to keep them in the game.

"I don't know if they have any athletes that are as good as Kim, or as fast as Trish, so hopefully we can take and do some things with that," O'Brien said.

Riley has a chronic back injury, but as a fifth-year senior, she showed in the pre-season that she can play point guard effectively. How much her back will limit her playing time this season is a big question.

"She's getting better," O'Brien said. "She's coming along and is practicing every other day."

Riley will see some time this weekend, that much is for sure.

The winner of the UMass-St. Francis game will play the George Mason-Pittsburgh winner on Sunday at 3:30 p.m. A consolation game will pit the two losing teams against one another.

UMass hosts late show

Midnight game brings Siena, ESPN to town

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Here we go again. Bars open late, faces painted red, rowdy fans, Will Herndon dunks, Jim McCoy jumpers, the Blues Brothers, a standing ovation to Coach John Calipari when he walks on to the court, the Minuteman Hoop Band, cheerleaders and ESPN!

What more could a basketball fan want?

Okay, Temple, but lets not nitpick.

The University of Massachusetts basketball team opens the regular season tonight/tomorrow when it hosts the Siena Saints at midnight in the Curry Hicks Cage.

The last time any of us saw the Saints, Tony Barbee was being mobbed by teammates after hitting the "shot of the century" at the buzzer.

Barbee's 22 footer sent the game into overtime and Jim McCoy's jumper with :50 left in the extra period gave UMass an 82-80 win, which thrust them into the NIT Final Four at Madison Square Garden.

"Our guys know we were lucky to win last year," Calipari said. "The revenge factor will be a factor."

So will the atmosphere.

ESPN brings its cameras to Amherst, giving the fans incentive to rock the Cage and make a statement for being ranked as one of the toughest places to play in America.

Anybody who was at last year's midnight/ESPN tilt against Boston University remembers how loud the crowd was throughout the game. The end result: an 82-65 UMass rout.

"The crowd definitely plays a factor," Calipari said. "It's a positive group, they cheer for us, not against the other team."

After two exhibition game victories against Marathon Oil (94-92) and Lithuania (91-54), Calipari was quick to point out how subdued the crowd was.

The Minutemen opened last season against Purdue and lost 64-53 in West Lafayette. McCoy, who had been plagued with a virus was still weak and shot a miserable 2-13.

This season, McCoy is healthy, but Barbee may not be 100 percent. The junior forward injured his elbow in practice this past week. He is expected to play and Calipari thinks he will be all right.

Freshmen Louis Roe and Mike Williams are also nursing injuries which are not expected to keep them out.

The Saints lost Marc "Showbiz" Brown and two other starters to graduation. However, Bruce Schroeder (12.4 points per game and 4.5 rpg) is back.

"I expect Siena to come out and shoot a lot of threes," Calipari said. "I'm concerned, I just hope we come out and play hard."

Game Notes: Doors will open at 10 a.m. If you don't have a ticket, don't bother showing up, your student ID alone will not get you into the game.

The game can be heard on 91.1 FM (WMUA with Joe Donovan and Jeff Crofts) or on 99.3 FM (WHMP with George Miller and Kevin Kennedy).

Dan Patrick will be doing play-by-play and Clark Kellogg will be commentating for ESPN.

Bars will be open until 3 a.m. No alcohol will be sold after 1 a.m.

Women open regular season vs. St. Francis

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Like every team, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team begins their season with hope. The Minutewomen open their regular season Saturday night at 6 p.m. in Loretto, PA against the St. Francis (PA) Red Flash. They open play in the Red Flash Classic, which will also feature George Mason and Pittsburgh.

UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said that the team is eager to face St. Francis.

"They're definitely ready to play," she said. "They're tired of playing each other, and they're really looking forward to it."

The weekend will be a homecoming of sorts for junior Jenny Moran and senior Trish Riley. Both players live in Altoona, Pa., which is near the tournament.

Like UMass, St. Francis has a brand new coach in Jenny Przekwas, a recent graduate of the University of Wyoming. She has been given more of a team than O'Brien has, however, as the Red Flash return 10 players from last year.

The University of Massachusetts football team raps up its season on Saturday as it hosts rival New Hampshire at 12:30 p.m. at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

When the University of New Hampshire football team visits the University of Massachusetts at 12:30 p.m. on Saturday at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, certain things are guaranteed.

It will be the last game of the Minuteman season. The last collegiate appearance for its seniors. Both teams will display their talented running backs, while still showing off their respective defenses.

But, the uncertainties are the story.

Will UMass tailback Jerome Bledsoe gain enough yards to break the UMass career rushing yardage record?

Will New Hampshire, 8-2 overall, 6-1 in the Yankee Conference, win to give it a share of the Conference title with Villanova and Delaware?

Bledsoe enters the game needing 195 yards to break Garry Pearson's all-time mark of 1,631 set in 1982. As the top rusher in the country with an average of 143.7 yards per game, he has registered nine consecutive weeks of more than 100 yards on the ground.

He has averaged just over 200 yards in the past three weeks, so the record is a possibility.

However, it won't be easy for the senior from Burlington Township, NJ. The UNH rushing defense is third in the YanCon as it allows an average of only 127.3 yards per game.

"They're tough against the run," UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "They have a good group of seniors who really show their experience."

The Wildcats will counter with their own ground game. Barry Bourassa, a junior, is just behind Bledsoe in the YanCon rushing standings with an average of 109 ypg. He leads the nation in all-purpose yardage with 206.7 ypg with Bledsoe in second place at 186.2.

Bourassa will line up behind quarterback Matt Griffin. Griffin leads a passing offense which is averaging 239.9 ypg. UMass' starting signal caller will be Dave McGovern for the fourth consecutive week.

"New Hampshire has so many ways to hurt you on offense," Reid said. "They have size, speed and their quarterback is playing terrific."

If New Hampshire wins tomorrow, the Athletic Directors of the three non-involved schools will use a selection criteria to determine the league's automatic berth to the NCAA Division I-AA Playoffs.

The criteria used will include head-to-head competition, total schedule record, strength of schedule and record against mutual non-conference opponents.

If UMass, 4-6 overall, 3-4 in the YanCon, beats New Hampshire, then Delaware will receive the automatic bid based on head-to-head competition with Villanova.

GAME NOTES: New Hampshire's last championship season was 1976. The game will be broadcast live on WMUA, 91.1 FM, Amherst and WTTT, 1430 AM, Amherst.

Dondarski starts second season on new team

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Laurie Dondarski plays two sports for the University of Massachusetts.

There is a professional athlete, who peddles Nike shoes, who also plays two sports.

That's where the similarities end and that's where we will end the Bo comparisons.

"I think it's funny [the comparisons]," Dondarski said. "I wish I could be half the athlete he is."

Good, now let's get on with the athlete that Laurie Dondarski is.

Dondarski, a 5-foot-2 junior, has been a starter at third base for the UMass softball team the past two springs. This winter she joined the basketball team and should start at point guard.

"[Playing two sports] is something I always wanted to do," Dondarski said. "When I came here, I came first to play softball, but I made a deal with [softball coach] Elaine Sortino that I could play both. She knew how much I wanted to play."

At Belleville High School, in Belleville, N.J., Dondarski excelled, earning All-State honors in each sport. Dondarski was highly recruited by colleges in both sports. Pennsylvania, Virginia and Penn State all wanted her for basketball. Virginia and Penn State are both Top 5 teams in the nation this year.

As for softball, Dondarski had to choose between Temple, Rutgers, Princeton, Seton Hall, Boston College and, of course, Massachusetts. Dondarski makes no bones about the main reason she ended up in Amherst — Elaine Sortino. In the women's basketball media guide she lists Sortino as her greatest influence.

"Elaine is just the type of person that I want to be like a few years down the road," Dondarski said. "What she does for our team, us, it's amazing. She has so much to do and she gets it done. My family means a lot to me also but Elaine is just great.

"When I went on recruiting trips and told coaches that I wanted to play both sports, they all said no. Elaine said that if I came here we could work something out. She would never want to stand in the way of something I wanted to do," Dondarski said.

For Dondarski softball came first. She wanted to win her position at third before playing two sports. After two years of starting she knew she was ready for basketball.

"After my freshman year I thought [playing basketball] would never happen," Dondarski said. "But Elaine gave me permission as long as my education was still my top priority, and with a new basketball coach I figured now was a good time."

Dondarski's hoop game was admittedly rusty but she is getting back into game shape.

"I needed work on my conditioning," Dondarski laughed. "I was out of shape, but I'm getting there. I'm a good ball handler and I just need to get the ball to the people who can score. I don't care if I'm scoring as long someone is."

Unfortunately, last season the softball team may have scored more points than the women's basketball team. Dondarski is in the interesting position of going from a team which last year went 39-13, was ranked as high as No. 13 in the nation and competed in the NCAA Championships, to a team that lost all 27 contests in 1990-91.

"Hopefully I will learn the two sides of sports from this," Dondarski said. "I've never played on a losing team, even in high school. Now when we walk in the other team doesn't say 'Oh my God, UMass is here.' Now we are the team that is in awe. In softball we aren't supposed to lose, at all, we can beat anyone in the nation. In basketball we have more realistic goals."

O'Brien said, "Laurie knows what it likes to be on a winning team and I hope she can help us develop that winning attitude."

One problem that has occurred with Dondarski playing both sports is that the softball team has its traditional California trip scheduled during the Atlantic 10 women's basketball tournament. While in California the Minutewomen generally play some of the top teams in the country.

"I'll be missing the trip," Dondarski said. "I want [basketball] to go as far as we can but we have to be realistic, we won't win the A-10, there are too many powerhouse teams. As soon as basketball is over, I'll join the softball team. I probably won't play in California, but the moment I step on the field after basketball, that's when I'll win my position back."

With the Dondarski's determination, it probably won't take long.

Mediation leads GEO to agreement

By DAVID MASSEY
and MIKE LEVY
Collegian Staff

The week-long graduate employee strike ended Friday when union members overwhelmingly voted to accept the tentative agreement forged the day before with the help of an outside mediator.

"We've gotten what we need," said co-speaker of the Graduate Employee Organization, Emily Isaacs, at a press conference after the two-hour private membership meeting. "We can go back to work."

The agreement gives the union a health fee waiver, although they didn't receive the agency fee provision which was previously a major sticking point in negotiations.

Isaacs said 650 members of the union attended the meeting. Only about 24 members indicated in the hand-vote their desire to not accept the agreement and continue the strike.

Although the union does not yet have an official contract, a few weeks will pass before the administration and the union hammer out a few "non-consequential" issues, union officials said.

The administration recognized GEO as a union. Chancellor Richard O'Brien said at an administration press conference on Friday that GEO "is indeed a special kind of union. It talks like a union, smells like a union, looks like a union."

Both parties agreed to a health fee waiver reasonable to union and administration officials. The administration will waive 21 percent of the costs for individuals and families for this year.

The administration will waive 42 percent of the costs next year and 79 percent for the following year.

Jill Havens, spokesperson for the union, said money to pay for these health benefits will come out of all University accounts. "It will not be made up by raising undergraduate fees," she said.

O'Brien said the agreement will cost UMass $500,000 next semester, $1 million next year and $2 million each year after. However, Acting Provost Glen Gordon said, "The campus is strapped for cash."

Isaacs said GEO is now a secure union even though they ended the strike without getting agency fee. The administration agreed to release eight full-time equivalent graduate employees to be hired and supervised by the union.

According to the written agreement, they will paid at the average teaching assistant salary and work 20 hours per week.

"We need people who can commit themselves full-time to organizing this union," Isaacs said.

The administration also agreed to offer graduate employees an option of automatic dues deduction from a paycheck.

The union also has the opportunity of going unopposed to ask the Attorney General for his legal opinion on the collection of union dues for graduate employees unwilling to join the union.

The administration said his ruling will be legally binding.

The administration also said they will not oppose the union from petitioning the state Labor Relations Board to be recognized as an official state union. They said they will urge the Board of Trustees not to oppose the union if it does petition the board.

In 1979, the commission, which certifies all state unions, did not recognize GEO as a union. Isaacs said the membership has not yet agreed when to petition the commission although she said, "We're in a strong position."

The administration agreed not to bill graduate employees for tuition, curriculum and fees or terminate employee contracts.

The agreement also states any graduate employee who certifies he or she fulfilled their contract during the strike or plans on making up missed work will be paid in full.

Isaacs said the mediator who assisted on Thursday facilitated the process of compromise. "It really focuses people. [Roberta Golick] kept bringing us back to the main

Productivity center opens with U.S. grant

Engineering, SOM create partnership

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

A variety of campus officials and local politicians gathered in the Campus Center Friday to open the new Center for Manufacturing Productivity.

The new center is a partnership between the University's college of engineering and school of management departments and western Massachusetts industries. It is sponsored by a $500,000 grant from the U.S. Small Business Administration.

Among the speakers at the opening ceremonies were State Senator Stanley Rosenberg, Chair of the Board of Trustees Gordon Oakes, Chair of Management, Anthony Butterfield, and a representative of U.S. Representative John Olver, who was supposed to speak, but was detained by congressional business.

Professor Butterfield said the object of this program is to bring engineering and management expertise to small and medium size businesses. Paper, plastics and metal working companies with less than 500 employees are the focus of the program, he said.

Butterfield explained the four activities which will be performed in assistance to local manufacturers. These are consultation, special research to individual manufacturers, general research helpful to a group of businesses and education and training.

Sample projects named by Butterfield included improvement of production, planning and control, computer simulation of a manufacturing process, computer design of manufacture of cutting tools and development of a knowledge-based cost estimator.

Senator Rosenberg addressed the group of about 60 people, which consisted mostly of professors and professionals from western Massachusetts industries.

Rosenberg discussed a tax bill he filed which would give a bonus tax return if businesses conduct research at a University. He added recycling-related tax credits were struck from the bill by the state senate.

Rosenberg noted the solid waste problem in the Commonwealth. "We need to get more manufacturers to use secondary materials," he said.

The Senator was enthusiastic about the prospects of the success of the new center.

"There are an enormous number of economic development opportunities here in the valley," he said.

Board of Trustees Chair Gordon Oakes, who also said he was excited by the new program, said initial funding was secured by late U.S. Senator Silvio Conte. Conte was also involved in funding the new Polymer Science building, now under construction.

Gender equality sought

Speaker: Underrepresentation in gov't

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

Gender equality is a distant goal that will not not be acheived anytime soon, said the head of 50/50 By 2000 Thursday night at Smith College.

"I do think gender equality can happen and in a relative short period of time," said George Dean, a former advertising executive. "We have a long awaited goal and a chance to do a lot. We must have aim and focus. Power and authority are not given, you must seek it."

Dean described how the group's name, 50/50 By 2000, is to give a sense of urgency to its purpose: to increase the number of women holding public office. To prove his point, Dean stated some current statistics:

Massachusetts is one of the 30 states has no women in its Congressional delegation and is only average (19 percent) on percentage of women in its state legislature.

U.S. Congress has only 5.8 percent female membership. (6.6 in the house, 2 percent in the senate)

There are only three female state governors and one woman in the President's cabinet

One female on the Supreme Court and about 16 percent for women in municipal and county posts.

Dean said "that's not only unfair and unjust, but it isn't good for either the government or the nation. This sharing of political power by men and women is a natural evolution, a natural extension of our democratic process and should be pursued by men and women alike."

Only 38 percent of women and 18 percent of college women consider themselves "feminists," Dean said, "yet we all believe in equal political, economic and social opportunity for women and men which makes us all feminists according to Webster's Dictionary."

Dean said he was impressed with the writings of John Stuart Mills who over 130 years ago wrote it did not make sense to exclude half the human race from public affairs, and who also questioned the wisdom of not taking advantage of the talents, creativity and minds of only half a nation's population.

Dean said "there does exist today, despite appearances a form of tyranny that is unjust and unwise."

He described this tyranny of gender im-

Porn found in Barbie boxes

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Parents buying toy dolls for their children are being warned that the packages could contain pornographic material pictures and literature.

Middlesex District Attorney Thomas Reilly issued the alert Saturday after pornographic material was found in 46 toy packages in stores around Boston.

Earlier this month, authorities charged Robert Reesman, 55, of Lexington, with disseminating pornographic material to minors. He was accused of putting the pictures and literature into packages containing Barbie, Midge and G.I. Joe dolls at a Watertown retail store.

"Right now, we do not know ho many packages have been tampered with," Reilly said.

He said parents should check the packages they buy, and his office was working with police departments to prevent a recurrence "before children open up these toys on Christmas morning."

Isaacs said it is important to "allow ourselves as well as the campus community to go back to what we're committed to — teaching, research and making this University a strong, quality public institution."

O'Brien said the week-long strike which cancelled many classes hurt the University. "No strike can fail to have some damaging effect on an institution," he said.He also said the same results could have been attained by bargaining alone.

balance in 1990 American politics as "three separate problems which, taken together, tend to lock women out of our leadership process, primarily at the Congressional level, but also, to a lesser extent, in our state capitols."

"The first problem is the array of advantages, like free mailings, large paid staffs and campaign advertising dollars two to ten times greater than challengers, enjoyed by incumbent members of Congress that effectively destroy electoral competition and defeat virtually all challengers, men and women," he said.

In the 400 primaries run this spring and summer, only one incumbent lost and he was under indictment for a sex offense with a minor, Dean said.

Without serious reform, the situation will remain a "man's club" or as The Wall Street Journal says, "the American House of Lords."

"The second major problem is the reality of the closed-mind; people who cannot conceptualize women in a leadership role or a position of authority in government," Dean said.

In addition to this closed-minded group, there are perceptual problems, he said. "America wants its political and business leaders to be strong, tough, aggressive and ambitious, and when female candidates are, some will say they are 'pushy,' 'shrill,' and yes 'bitchy.'" he said.

"As Margaret Thatcher said, reported by last month's Time article, 'When a women is strong, she is strident. If a man is strong, gosh, he's a good guy.'"

Senior worries about actually having to live in the real world

You know you have to get out of college when all you do is lament on the future.

I mean, there are so many decisions in the next nine months, I don't know how anyone can expect me to make them all before I get that shiny degree placed into my sweaty and shaking little hands.

Think about it, seniors: What is in store for us?

Gayle Long

Well, in case you haven't given it much thought, I have compiled a short list to give you the same sense of anxiety I have been feeling.

ONE: Jobs, jobs, careers, careers and more jobs. For some of us, you know the liberal arts majors like myself that no one thinks are capable of anything (except bull-shitting on blue book exams) — the word CAREER is too strong.

After all, how can anyone in this economy in the United States want people who are LITERATE and can write in COMPLETE sentences? Absolutely NO ONE.

Employers these days want power-hungry suit-types to do all of the dirty work for them. There is no need of professional grammar-checkers. (Sigh, too bad, eh?)

For the management types, however, there are also some bad signs, such as large consulting firms and corporations like NYNEX laying off innumerous numbers of management people because it is top-heavy. Not cool.

So maybe in the end, there will be lots and lots of us UMass alum, Finance and Finnish, Management and Music, Accounting and Art, all flipping burgers at the local fast-food chain. That is, of course, if anyone decides to admit that we ARE in a recession.

TWO: Graduate Schools. If you're anything like me, and taking your GREs in December or GMATs in January, you're not exactly focused as to what to do for the rest of your life. I know I'm not (after all, I work for the Collegian).

But, grad school takes serious cash (unless you are SMART) and in reality I'm not. So, the only way to get into grad school is to be smart and to have money — I guess I'd better try and find a job.

But oh yeah, I forgot. There's no need for English majors in the corporate world. That's what word processing programs are for. They come with their own spell-checkers.

THREE: Then of course, what are the rest of your friends and significant others going to do?

It's a big scary world, and going to another part of the country alone and without your mommy and daddy could prove a frightening experience. Where is your best friend going? You know you want to live with her, so why not try and find out what she's up to?

And what about that special person in your life? Was the relationship a waste from the start? Or should we just consider the whole thing a learning experience and wish each other well?

All I do know is that the world is not going to end on Graduation Day, even though I feel like it is. I'll be leaving behind some wonderful friends, many warm and fun memories, and even some pretty bad ones.

But the bigger question still remains: what are the "right" decisions? My grandmother would tell me to follow my heart, but unfortunately, my heart can't provide me with a good home, food and drink. Only money can.

It really sucks being a senior. It's neat to be 21 and all, but I'm not as secure as I was when I was eating D.C. food (I know that sounds like a paradox). Why isn't there someone telling me what to do next?

Maybe because I'm supposed to be an adult.

It's never too early to start anticipating holiday season

I have a confession to make. Well, it's not really a confession. My roommate knows about it. My family knows about it. My friends know about it. Thousands of retail stores know about it.

I'm one of those people who believe the holiday season begins in September.

I try to cover it up. When I walk into a department store a few weeks before Halloween and see the mirrored ceiling dripping with garland and red ribbon, I groan just like everybody else. But inside I'm thinking it's about time.

Darienne Hosley

Last June, I bought my first Christmas present. Of course, I've lost it and now have no idea where I hid it, but that's not important. Over the past few months, I've been picking up little gifts here and there and piling them in my closet. I go through them every few days, gloating over all the neat things I found and planning what else to get.

It's a little obsessive, but my roommate is dealing with it well. We'll spend two or three hours studying when suddenly I announce, "I can't wait until Christmas." She pauses, looks up at me, shakes her head and continues with whatever she's doing.

She's getting into the spiri. . .f it all now. Tuesday night we're going to pull out our cheap decorations. We have that canned snow for the windows, little wreaths and trees to stick all over the room and of course a twelve-inch Christmas tree. We'll borrow some microwave popcorn for garland and cut and paste ornaments from construction paper, string and little pieces of things we can't identify.

I'm feeling bitter about that final exam schedule. I only have to take two exams — one is on Tuesday, and the other is the very last exam offered. I won't get home until Saturday afternoon. That leaves me four days to devote to absorbing holiday atmosphere.

I want to wallow in Christmas. I want to lie in front of the fireplace with a mug of hot orange spice tea. I want to see my cat curled up asleep beneath the tree branches. I want to smell fresh-baked cookies and, of course, the scent of the pine tree drifting through every room in the house. Pine-scented Lysol and a radiator just isn't the same.

I went shopping Saturday for typing paper and envelopes. I ended up with Pop Tarts, which I don't particularly like, and a box of Christmas cards. Not too bad. Of course, I spent an hour looking at cards and wrapping paper and decorations and all sorts of holiday goodies.

Every summer I decide that this year, I'll have a budget for presents. Sometime in mid-October, I sit down and try to figure out what I've already spent and how much more I can afford. Somewhere in the middle I get scared. I just take a deep breath and think, "Okay. I'll buy whatever I want and next year I'll have a budget."

It's not the presents that are so expensive. It's the accessories. You know — wrapping paper, gift boxes, ribbon, cards, candy. . . Not to mention all those things I buy just for myself — Christmas records, candles, tree decorations, lights, garland. . . I'm the only person I know who goes through two or three boxes of cards to send to everyone she knows and then gives a second card to everyone in the family and close friends. That's almost $30 on cards alone.

I know what you're thinking. I'm a slave to the commercial holiday industry. Well, maybe I am. A little bit.

I just know that I love Christmas. As I wander the stores or sit down with my paints, I have someone in mind. Someone I know I can make happy with just the right gift. So I may not solve their life crises, but when they tear off the paper and ribbons and pull out the gift within, they'll know someone was thinking of them.

Only a month to go. . . Enjoy.

Separation is worsening racism

I am writing in response to some of the articles recently published in the Black Affairs section of the Collegian. I am a white, middle class 20-year-old who grew up in an average suburban section of a typical American town. I'm not even going to pretend to know what it is like to be an African-American, or assume any deep understanding of the struggle for civil rights, equality and other racial issues. Although I do realize racism is still a pressing issue in our country more than hundred years after the Civil War, I believe it is not an insurmountable one.

But after reading certain articles written for Black Affairs, I can't help but feel that, in attempting the problem of racism and prejudice, we are only making matters worse. It seems as though, instead of emphasizing inter-racial communication and understanding, these articles focus on segregation, which does nothing for the cause of inter-racial harmony. Michelle Canon, in her article entitled "Who are we, anyway?" [Collegian, Oct. 29], summed up this situation when she stated that "There is. . . something wrong when pride turns to arrogance and people get dissed because of who they are."

I do not mean to imply that African-Americans, or any other minority group for that matter, should "integrate" themselves into "American society," while putting away their own culture and heritage like an outdated book. I do, however, believe if there is going to be an end to racism in this country, some amount of acceptance and understanding of American society is necessary while still learning about and retaining pride in one's individual culture.

Jeff Lawrence, in his article "Sister, Sister, I feel good about you" [Collegian, Oct. 29] stated that "I love my Black sisters and salivate over no other." This statement is reminiscent of the closed-minded attitude of white culture toward their Black slaves more than a century ago; has our society not grown up enough since then to learn from our past mistakes and accept each other as human beings instead of members of a certain ethnic group?

I realize that racism is still a problem and that some juvenille white people think they are still living in "plantation times," but further segregation is not going to solve a thing. Looking down on a fellow African-American for finding a white woman/man attractive for their looks or personality, or for hanging around in a white clique, is only turning racism around and changing its face, but not its name.

A brief reminder from the editors

We'd like to take a moment to thank you for all the letters and cartoons that have been flooding the editorial desk. We love it — send more! Just keep a few simple rules in mind:

Letters must be typed double-spaced. It makes things much easier to read and is much more likely to be printed.

Always include your name, address and phone number. If we can't contact you, you may not be real. If you're not real, neither is your opinion.

Cartoons must be drawn with flair pen on an 8 1/2 by 11 sheet of paper. No ballpoint pen. It doesn't look good.

Mail it or drop it off at the Collegian, 113 Campus Center Basement.

Tiered system isn't a solution

The system of higher education endorsed in Trystan Skeigh's editorial [Collegian, November 21] sounds two-tiered: a public one attended by poor students where but existing knowledge is well taught by second rate faculty, and a private one consisting of this nation's scholars and students of wealth. Naturally students graduating from these distinctly different environments would find that the challenging and well-paying jobs requiring more creative skills would be offered to the graduates of the private institutions. . . in assuring that this system would perpetuate itself. Not to mention the fact that this nation would suffer immensely in the world economy if the generation of new knowledge were reduced to only private, elitist institutions.

Is this a reasonable solution to the sort of grievances you have experienced in the liberal arts at UMass? Have you considered switching to one of the professional schools? Although undergraduate education is an important part of what major public universities are designed for, it is not the only function. If you do not realize this, you probably made a poor choice in selecting such an institution (Kansas University or Kansas State University would be the same). Do not advocate the dismantling of a system of proven worth because it does not happen to meet your personal needs for a warmer and more nurturing environment.

The future of rock...

"Rock and roll is Black music and we are its heirs," claims the Black Rock Coalition, a group founded by Living Colour and Vernon Reid, referring to the movement's attempt to break down stereotypes through music. Memebers of the Coalition J.J. Jumpers and Royal Pain will be gracing the Iron Horse on Tuesday, Nov. 26 at 8:30 p.m. These two bands are both featured on the compilation album The History of Our Future. With high-calibre musicianship, flair apparently on the rebound in American pop, the bands of the BRC are poised to move to the foreground of this movement with innovation, spectacle and sonic boombosity.

The TOC Restaurant is a student's paradise

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

What's the best-kept secret on the UMass campus? Where there's always a discount for students, whether or not they're on the meal plan?

Why, it's the Top of the Campus Restaurant.

A couple of friends of mine went up on a Friday night after the hectic week of classes, exams and other absurdities we have to deal with as students.

This has got to be the best deal for us students here — for those of us no longer on the meal plan there's a 15 percent discount on entrees.

And for those of you escaping the weekend meals at the D.C. — there's a $5 discount on entrees.

Not bad, huh?

DINING OUT

This is not even considering that the T.O.C. requires no transportation as it is on the 11th floor of the Campus Center.

At 6 p.m., the dinner crowd had already taken all the window seats, which afford a great view of campus and on the North Amherst side, a extended panorama of Northwestern Massachusetts.

The atmosphere was relaxing, and while we were perusing the menu, we ordered some garlic bread and I ordered a drink.

The menu offers a pretty good selection of entrees, such as chicken parmesean and chicken and seafood dijon.

Also, there's pasta, burgers and jumbo baked potatoes. And don't forget — there's stir fry of all kinds — beef, chicken or seafood.

So — if you've got a big appetite or small, you'll find yourself a good meal.

Students will love the T.O.C. not only because of the good food made to order — we're not talking dining commons stuff — this is not made in mass quantities to fee to the 5,000 people on campus. It's made to order.

My friends and I are suckers for red meat — even if it is passe here on campus. We all ordered steak.

I had the steak terryaki, which comes with a salad, potato, and a mini loaf of bread. The bread was piping hot, the salad was fresh, and the company was great.

Hanging in the restaurant are pictures of the campus at different periods of time, reminding us there are some things in this world that are here to stay.

And if we're lucky, it's going to be the Top of the Campus Restaurant.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The spotlights is on your relationship with someone who makes you feel comfortable. A member of the opposite sex offers some constructive advice. Follow it to the letter.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Impulsive behavior could lead to embarrassment. Consult a lawyer regarding legal documents. A forceful person helps you obtain what you want. Get promises in writing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Distant affairs can become more profitable if you deal directly with those in charge. Clear any travel plans with your mate or partner. A "family rate" could let you combine business with pleasure.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An excellent day to deal with intricate details. A change in personnel could put you in line for a raise or promotion. Put your best foos forward. Display your special management skills.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A good day for buying furniture or equipment. Write important letters and make strategic phone calls. Family members can help you increase your income. Ask probing questions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An idea that was ignored last week receives a warm welcome today. A member of the opposite sex pushes you to make a decision. You feel more confident than in the recent past.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be firm but polite with someone who is a nuisance at work. Know what you are really implying before saying a word. Others will read your body language. Look and act confident.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not allow your emotions to dictate an important decision. The emphasis is on being practical while standing up for your principles. Give further thought to a profitable creative venture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A great day for reorganizing your work. You may be spending too much time doing a job that could be accomplished more quickly. Working with a community project brings special honors.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): New financial gains are possible when dealing with the general public. Those in sales should cultivate a friendly demeanor. A business associated may want to become your romantic partner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take the initiative now and you will leap over recent hurdles. Will power gives you the edge over your competitors. Tone down your language when around conservative people. Your popularity soars.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Overhaul financial policies today. Seek the cooperation of family members in cutting household expenses. Laughter is the best antidote for the blues. Plan an evening out tonight.

Lesbian PreOccupied Theater an all-around good, good time

Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Cafe
Hampden Theatre
Nov. 22

By NICOLE GONALEZ
Collegian Staff

In a room without light, a voice was heard in the darkness. "Let there be flourescent. Let there be diversity so that we can exploit other cultures all over the world. Be silent, consume, and multiply chocolate chip cookies. God created this perfect place: Mall."

The Lespian PreOccupied Theater had arrived to the second Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Cafe, a night of talent, humor, social comment, and, especially, an all around good time.

The Lespian players, including Chaia Heller, Lizzie Donahue, Liz Resenbrink, Helen Mc Elwain and Suzanne La Grande created an all-too-real depiction of this country's obsession with consumerism using only shopping bags and the addition of a hat and a priest collar here and there.

"Like, what would I do without a mall? I would be, like, so weird," said a long-winded teenager under a spotlight. During this monologue, the audience laughed softly at times, but mostly stayed silent. The scary thing is that we all know young people who talk like this. Still the details went on about shirts and skirts, jackets, socks, until she was dragged into a Guess jeans/Obsession commercial.

"The only difference between night and day is fabric," said a lounging snob as she and fellow consultants gave advice and stuck magazine ads onto the young "mallee" until she became a magazine cut-out Christmas tree, complete with gold mask.

Comedienne, Julie Waggonner, introduced the acts with lots of charm and biting wit. She found the cafe to be a relief from talking at straight clubs and demonstrated why. Imitating a typical straight audience member watching her act, she asked, "Is she-? Nawww, she's too pretty. Is she-?" "Yes," she answered. "I am...a love child of K.D. Lang and Bart Simpson.

Adding humor to our patriarchal society, Waggoner announced that the O.B. tampons were designed by a woman gynecologist. "I'm so grateful that this was made by a person with a vagina!" she said. She then added over the laughter, "I'm glad the men who designed the packaging didn't put baseball cards in them."

She announced that everyone she knew was currently having babies. She put on a white garbage bag over her pants and tied a knot in the front.

"Those of you who were considering asking me out probably changed their minds now," she commented. She then demonstrated "the baby walk". Tiptoeing and tottering all over the stage got everyone bursting out with laughter.

In a more serious part of the production, JoElla Costello introduced her written piece with straightforward conversation. Her comment "I'm tired. I've been picketing with GEO," was followed by applause. She explained that her birth date was significant because not only was this earlier in the week, but it also was five days before the Kennedy assassination.

Costello's essay, "Birth of a Warning" followed difficult events in the life of her mother and grandmother up until JoElla Costello had been born. The oral history told was something that only close friends would tell each other late at night, numbed with alcohol. But, Costello, simply, soberly, told what she knew. A scene described one in which her grandfather was adjusting TV channels in anger while his daughter screamed in the other room. The young woman was JoElla's mother, a victim of rape and who was giving birth to the child while her own mother, eight months pregnant, stood nearby.

After the intermission, Labia Wildflower made her presence. "I'm bisexual. You know how confused we are," said Wildflower. In the short time that she was onstage, she asked silly stereotypical questions about her bisexual identity such as "Do I like broadway musicals? Does this mean I have a flair for fashion? Does this mean that I can dance like a gay man?" The latter, she proceeded to do while the room rang out with laughter.

Guitarists Brian Weiland and Linee Perroncel ended the evening with melodies colored with anger, nostalgia and broken hearts. Impressively smooth vocals by Perroncel rang out as though she had kept these songs with her over a long period of time; especially in a song of an ex-best friend in The Amy Song.

How long do we have to wait until the third cafe?

UMass massacres Siena at midnight

University of Massachusetts forward Tony Barbee directs the team's halfcourt game in Friday's season opening contest at Curry Hicks

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

A national television audience got a taste of what University of Massachusetts basketball is all about, as a raucous crowd filled the Curry Hicks Cage at midnight Friday and watched the Minutemen rout the Siena Saints 94-59.

It took UMass almost three and a half minutes to score their first field goal, but once Tony Barbee hit a three, the Minutemen were off and running, never to be caught.

Leading 10-8, UMass went on an 18-2 spurt keyed by its defense and offensive rebounding.

Freshman Louis Roe (9 points, 9 rebounds) boarded two missed shots and layed them in, William Herndon scored four points, two on a back-door dunk from Harper Williams, two on foul shots, Williams hit a short five foot hook and two free throws, Barbee nailed a tri and Anton Brown (4-4, 10 points) made a layup.

By the time Siena's Bruce Schroeder (13 points) scored with 9:26 to go in the half, the Minutemen had a 28-13 lead.

The UMass defense was so tough, Siena managed just seven field goals in the first half and shot a paltry 24 percent. They did not shoot much better in the second half, finishing the game at 32 percent. The Minutemen connected on 53 percent of their shots for the game.

"We set the tone in the beginning of the game with our ball pressure," Harper Williams said. "Having guys who can play coming off the bench helps, because if you don't play hard, guys will take your place."

UMass coach John Calipari said, "We're running more because we can play more people."

Specifically the freshmen. Roe was tenacious off the boards, Mike Williams (6 points, 4 rebounds and 3 assists) was smooth while running the offense and Scott Drapeau banged away en route to a solid 10-point, five-rebound effort.

Missing from the winning equation however, was UMass forward Jim McCoy, who simply had a bad night. McCoy shot 3-12 and finished the night with nine points.

"I had a hard time shooting," McCoy said. "They shifted the zone to cover me."

McCoy finally scored with 46 seconds to play in the half. His 18-footer gave UMass a commanding 47-22 halftime lead.

In their previous two exhibition games against Marathon Oil, a 94-92 win, and Lithuania, a 91-54 win, the Minutemen came out flat in the second half. However, there was no let up Friday.

A loose Minuteman team came out with the same flare they exhibited in the first 20 minutes. Herndon displayed his athleticism with two nifty scoops in the lane which brought the crowd to a frenzy.

"It's a great atmosphere in this arena," said Siena coach Mike Deane. "Why they're building a new arena is beyond me."

A quick 7-0 run three minutes into the second half built the UMass lead to 33. It led by as many as 37 and won by 35.

"We learned we have the killer instinct, something we didn't have in the two exhibition games," said assistant coach Bill Bayno.

GAME NOTES: The Minutemen host Division II Keene State tonight at 7 p.m. before journeying to Alaska for the Great Alaskan Shootout over Thanksgiving break. The pregame ceremonies include raising the 1991 NIT banner.

The game can be heard on WMUA (91.1 FM), Scott Silberzweig and Scott Donahue, and WHMP (99.3 FM).

Minutemen drop season finale to UNH

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Minuteman football team concluded its 1991 season Saturday as it was handily defeated 35-28 by the visiting University of New Hampshire Wildcats in a contest which characterized UMass' season long woes.

In front of 4,126 fans at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, the Minutemen turned the ball over three times, inserted three different quarterbacks, and failed to score on three occasions when inside the UNH 20-yard line.

In the meantime, UNH quarterback Matt Griffin completed 18 passes in 33 attempts for 366 total yards and four touchdowns to lead the Wildcats, 9-2 overall, 7-1 in the Yankee Conference, to a share of the Conference title with Delaware and Villanova.

Griffin's top target was explosive split end David Gamble. The speedster was too quick for the UMass man-to-man defense as he caught six passes for 177 total yds and two touchdowns, including a 70-yarder which gave the Wildcats a 7-0 first quarter lead.

"Three guys made the difference in today's game," UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "They were Gamble, Griffin and [defensive end Dwayne] Sabb."

With 11:36 remaining in the game, Griffin connected with Gamble again for a 20-yd touchdown pass, following a John Donnelly 15-yard catch and UMass roughing the passer penalty, which put the game out of reach as the Wildcats pulled ahead 34-16.

The Minutemen were able to march the ball 73 yards on the ensuing drive, concluded by a Mike George one-yard touchdown run, but it was too late as 6:17 elapsed on the game clock.

In its next two posessions, UMass was unable to get into UNH territory until the last drive of the game when the Minutemen, led by two Ron Villone catches from quarterback Tom Fasano for 19 and 21 yards, scored on an Eric Thimas 16-yard catch to make the game appear closer than it was.

"I didn't think they would score 35 points," Reid said. "We tried to play zone to control the pass and shut down the run."

The showdown between the top two running backs in the YanCon didn't fulfill its billing as UNH's Barry Bourassa, who entered the contest averaging 109 ypg, struggled, gaining 40 yards in 19 carries and one touchdown.

UMass tailback Jerome Bledsoe, the leading rusher in the nation, did his share by compiling 108 yards on the ground in 25 carries. It was the 10th consecutive week Bledsoe has rushed for more than 100 yards and he finished the season with 1,544 total, second on the UMass season rushing yardage list.

After a Don Caparotti 17-yd punt return put the Minutemen in good field position at the UNH 44-yard line with 7:05 left in the game, Fasano, UMass' third quarterback of the day, completed a 27-yard pass to Eric Thimas, only to have him cough it up to UNH linebacker Chris McGrath.

A Caparotti 27-yd punt return led to UMass' first scoring drive as two plays later Bledsoe broke several tackles for a 16-yd TD run.

UMass outside linebacker Matt Tulley brought the Minutemen to within five, 21-16, with 50 seconds remaining in the third quarter when he picked off a Griffin pass and ran 25 yds for the touchdown.

Dave McGovern started the game at quarterback and had to leave in the first quarter with a shoulder injury. McGovern was replaced by Tony Williams, who left with an injured ankle at the end of the second quarter.

GAME NOTES: Three YanCon members received berths in the NCAA Division I playoffs. UNH hosts Stanford, Delaware hosts James Madison and Villanova travels to Youngstown State.

Class of '57 General talks on U.S. Army

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff
and PETER I. DUNN
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts alumnus and Major General, Thomas C. Foley, Commander of the U.S. Armor Center and Fort Knox, talked about U.S. plans to reduce the army as well as the importance of ROTC in a speech he gave at the UMass Minuteman Battallion's annual Dining In last Friday.

General Foley received the Distinguished Alumni Award from the Umass Alumni Office. Foley graduated from UMass in 1957 with a Bachelor of Business Administration and an Army commission from ROTC in armor.

Foley described his work at Fort Knox in civilian terms. "I wear three hats, all equally important. I am the mayor of the sixth largest city in Kentucky. I am President or Commandant of the U.S. Army Armor school, which develops leaders and writes doctrine and procedural techniques which define requirements for armor equipment.

"[Fort Knox] also looks after the readiness of the total armor force. I am the commanding general of the U.S. Army Training Center. The principal role of this is the training of initial entry soldiers," Foley said.

Fort Knox is the sixth largest community in Kentucky and the state's largest employer, he said. Due to the Congressionally mandated personnel and budget cuts, Fort Knox has experienced a loss of over 4,000 military and civilian positions since 1987, he said.

Foley said there are four challenges facing the U.S. Army today.

He said the Army must maintain its war fighting edge as demonstrated in the Gulf as well as keep today's army energetic and maintain the correct balance of forces.

The army must adapt functionally to the environment in the world because the new army will not just be a smaller version of the old cold war army, Foley said.

"The new army will be primarily based in the United States and will be able to respond to regional crisis anywhere in the world."

He said the United States must provide resources to the army in an era of increasing budget cuts.

"Demobilization in the past is a warning not to dismantle the army now," Foley said.

The nation should strengthen the "total" army, including the Regular Army, Reserves, and National Guard, he said.

"The army has changed in many ways since its founding, but the fundamentals are the same as in the beginning: a mix of regular and active duty soldiers and a volunteer militia," he said. "This is the foundation of the 'total' army."

"The United States must understand today's army is not an accident, but the result of careful planning and hard work over the last 20 years," Foley said. "The army will change but the basic values of the army are still the same: selfless service to the country, dedication to duty, and perseverence."

Foley, who served two tours in Vietnam, gave this advice to the cadets.

"Constantly strive to add quality to whatever you're involved with because you can make a difference," he recommended. "Never forget your people and take care of them. Never stop growing intellectually. The army is a great place. It's very challenging. Have fun."

"UMass' ROTC Battallion is the kind of organization that sets the standard. It's a professional organization with a lot of esprit de corps."

Public Safety head to take sabbatical

The Director of Public Safety at the University of Massachusetts will be taking a two-month professional improvement leave to do research on military veterans, according to the University Press Office.

Dr. Arthur Hilson, who was named interim director of Public Safety in 1986, has also acted as director of Veterans' Affairs since 1976.

Hilson will be working for the next two years with the state veterans' affairs office and doing research to determine needed services for veterans' attending state colleges and universities.

There are approximately 750 veterans on the UMass-Amherst campus.

According to a University spokesperson, Dr. Hilson's duties will be under the jurisdiction of Police Chief Jack Luippold though he won't be interim director of Public Safety.

Dr. Hilson nor Chief Luippold were available for comment.

Haitian official speaks on crisis

Discusses coup which overthrew President Aristide

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

A high offical in the deposed Haitian government of elected President Jean-Bertrand Artistide praised the U.S. trade embrago against Haiti and said world attention must turn to Haiti's plight.

Jean Claude Martineau, the press and cultural attache in Boston of the deposed Haitian government, spoke before an audience of 30 last night at the New Africa and told students Haiti needed Aristide, who was ousted in a coup d'etat in September, to return.

"Aristide was elected for five years by 70 percent of the people," Martineau said. "We want him back."

Martineau said three projects initiated by Aristide brought disdain from the army and upper class. These included a literacy campaign in attempt to lower the 85 percent illiteracy rate, an attempt to increase investment in Haiti and land reform.

Currently, peasant farmers are allowed to keep half of Education secretary's clout at issue

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — When Gov. William F. Weld created a cabinet position for a secretary of education, the idea was to give public schools and colleges a higher profile in his government.

Secretary Piedad Robertson has a high profile, but how much power does she have in the Weld administration? Some believe she doesn't have much — and that she is losing ground by trying to second guess the governor. So far, Weld's education proposals have been characterized by such bungling that even fellow Republicans have been critical.

Robertson's attempt to second guess the governor was in evidence at a recent Education Board meeting where she told Holyoke school officials that she would seriously consider their request to shorten the school year in the district, to help them save money.

Holyoke School Superintendent George Counter said at the time he only recommended the shorter school year to point out how desperate his school district's situation was. He wanted the state school board to take some kind of emergency action. He wasn't really looking for a shorter year.

But Robertson took the idea of a shorter school year seriously. She said the school committee should not stifle innovations at the local level. Robertson was mouthing a philosophy she believed her boss, the governor, espoused.

But her attempt to think like the governor backfired when, a few weeks later, Weld unveiled education proposals that included the suggestion that the school year should be made longer — not shorter.

The governor's plan drew strong criticism because it was vague and appeared to be hastily put together to coincide with a visit from U.S. Secretary of Education Lamar Alexander. How much of a role did Robertson have in crafting that plan?

The state's new school choice plan has also been criticized as being terribly flawed, even by those who support the idea

Calm in Yugoslavia on first day of cease-fire

By NADA BURIC
Associated Press

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia — Croatian officials said the army stopped shelling Osijek, and European Community monitors reported general calm elsewhere today, the first full day of the Yugoslav civil war's 14th cease-fire.

Refugees continued to flee Osijek, regional capital of Croatia's ethnically mixed eastern Slavonia region. Officials in secessionist Croatia said army cannons pounded the city early today, but the shelling stopped before noon.

A defense official in Osijek said seven people were killed and 34 were wounded by shelling by the Serb-dominated Yugoslaz army in the last 24 hours. The official, who spoke on the phone on condition of anonymity, estimated that only 50,000 of Osijek's original 140,000 residents remained.

In Croatia's capital, Zagreb, meanwhile, the army prepared to vacate more barracks after Croatian troops lifted their weeks-long blockade.

And in another development, a reliable source reported that six people were killed in three gunfights between police and other uniformed men in Zagreb.

There was no official confirmation of the report. But police were presumably hunting members of the nationalist Party of Rights, whose leader Dobroslav Paraga was arrested Friday on allegations of planning an armed rebellion. The party opposed any truce while the army occupies any of Croatia.

Thirteen previous cease-fire pacts mediated by the EC have failed to halt the 5-month-old war between the Serb-led federal army and Croatian forces.

AMONG THE RUINS — An unidentified woman plays with a cat amid the ruins of her destroyed home Monday in Vukovar. Heavy fighting between Croation security forces and Yugoslav Federal Army troops has nearly completely destroyed this town. There were no reports of major fighting Monday in Croatia and the newest cease-fire, the 14th, appeared to be generally respected.

Salem man charged with luring teens to parties of pot and porn

SALEM, Mass. (AP) — A Salem man is accused of luring dozens of teen-agers to his apartment for parties where they viewed pornography, smoked marijuana and bought beer for $5 a cup.

Joseph E. Richburg, 36, was arraigned on Monday in Salem District Court on charges of contributing to the delinquency of minors and the illegal sale of drugs and alcohol. Bail was set at $20,000.

Salem police broke up on of the parties Friday night and rounded up 26 teen-age males.

"The kids had no idea about him. They thought the guy was cool. That was the scary part." said Detective Sgt. Conrad Prosniewski.

Police said they were acting on information from parents of the teen-agers and Richburg's neighbors.

But Salem Juvenile Officer Peter Baglioni said some unsuspecting parents thought Richburg was a peer of the children, and they even dropped their children off at the defendant's apartment.

"Some of the parents weren't paying attention to what was going on," he said. "The parents should have been knowing where their kids were going."

Baglioni said the teen-agers would not be charged, but authorities planned to place them in substance abuse programs.

When police broke up the party, they found beer bottles and kegs, marijuana in each room and "Playboy Lingerie" magazines spread out on the table.

"It's a sad commentary on society when this type of thing goes on," Baglioni said. "But this type of thing goes on too frequently."

Detectives continue to investigate the parties and are considering pressing additional charges against Richburg.

Sgt. Richard Urbanowicz said Richburg has a past criminal history including a May 1991 conviction for assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

their crops, Martineau said. The other half goes to the landlords, except in the case of cash crops, in which the landlord takes it all.

Martineau added the land is actually owned by the state and leased to landlords for $1 per acre each year. Martineau said most peasants do not know this.

"Ignorance, more than gold or petroleum, is a mine," he said.

Haiti gained its independence in 1804, the first Latin American country to do so and the second in the western hemisphere after the United States.

Martineau said 60 years passed before Haiti was recognized as a nation. It is difficult to recognize a nation of ex-slaves when your nation is comprised of slave owners, he said.

In 1822, Haiti accepted a debt to France of 90 million gold francs, said Martineau, a debt which took the nation a century to pay.

"We worked for France," he said, noting a difficulty in accumulating any amount of wealth in such a situation.

In 1915, Haiti was invaded by the United States and was occupied for 19 years. During that time, Martineau said, the modern Haitian army was established by the U.S. Marines, which he said has been a major problem with the democratic process in Haiti.

"In Haiti we have an army which is at war with nobody else but the Hatian people," he said.

From there, Martineau said, there was a series of coups, all in the name of protecting the constitution. "But the constitution does not provide for a coup," he added.

After that were two generations of Duvalier presidents for life. When the family was overthrown, "it was probably the proudest moment in Haiti's recent history," said Martineau.

Praises of phone pre-reg

"Dial-a-class" lauded by students

By MATT GRIFFING
Collegian Staff

It seems undergraduate students and Whitmore agree that the new "dial-a-class" phone preregistration system is an improvement over the old method of bubble sheet and number two pencil.

According to Nancy Fitzpatrick, the undergraduate registrar, the computerized phone preregistration system has run smoothly and has met student approval.

"We have had only a short period of busy signals when the system first opened up. Since then it has been running at below capacity," she said. "The feed back that we recieved on the help lines was mostly positive," she added.

With this new system, she said students are now signing up for courses much earlier than in past years. This facilitates the proccess of preregistration for Whitmore, she said.

She said 84 percent of undergraduates have already utilized the system to set up their schedules as of presstime. Today is the last day for students to use the computerized system.

Fitzpatrick said she expects the same amount of students to "prereg" as last semester.

"We are trying to see students who did miss their deadline," she said. "Anybody who has to must come in before the end of Wednesday of this week when the rosters go to the departments," Fitzpatrick said.

Students appear pleased with the ease of prereging with the new system.

"It was a lot quicker than filling out all those forms," replied Sona Dulgarian, a senior B.I.D.C. major.

"I preferred it much more than old system. It was quick and hassle free," said Brett Holmquis, a junior Biochemistry major, though he said a floormate couldn't deal with the new system.

"The floormate punched the phone and screamed. I guess he wasn't compatible with prereg," he joked.

Stephanie Reed, a junior psychology major, said, "It went really fast and was efficient. The biggest advantage was that there was no waiting around.

"I was apprehinsive about not getting through but that was no problem," Reed said.

There was some apprehension over preregging over the phone but students said actually using the new system was not difficult. "I had doubts at the beginning about this dial-a-class but I tend to have confidence in computer systems," Robert Corddry, a junior English and theater major said. "The only fear I had about the system was that it was so easy."

Masturbator exposes self to woman in library

A woman reported to the police on Friday afternoon a man whistling behind her in the University library. When she turned around, she found him masturbating.

Police said a man was harassing several women by Moore Residence Hall on Saturday morning and was punched in the face by another man. An onlooker hailed a police car and took the victim to University Health Services for facial injuries.

A Student Security officer reported to the police on Sunday morning a subject breaking into a vehicle in Lot 42 with a metal object.

Police found Michael E. Whilby, 18, of Farmington inside of a vehicle and placed him under arrest. An investigation discovered 11 other vehicles in the lot which had been broken into or damaged.

A woman reported to the police on Friday afternoon that one of her tires on her car in the parking garage was slashed. She found a note saying, "Thanks for splashing me with water, check your tires." The estimated value of damage is $100.

A bicycle rack was tipped over on Saturday night causing extensive damage to at least three mountain bikes, police said. A witness saw four males doing the damage.

Several resident assistants chased them from the area. Police are still interviewing witnesses. The estimated value of damage is $700 to $1,000.

Shanties provoke controversy

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — The shanties that housed Diversity University on the University of Vermont's green will not be replaced, school President Thomas Salmon said.

The shanty town was built in May by students protesting what they said was a lack of cultural diversity at the school. Students called it Diversity University because they held informal classed there.

The shanty was destroyed Friday night in a fire officials say was arson.

Diversity University has been the object of vandalism for months. Vandals tore down several structures in August. After students rebuilt it into one large shanty, a student threw a bottle through a window.

Salmon said Saturday that he will not allow any structures to be built on the campus until the administration approves a policy on when and where symbolic structures may be built at the school.

"Diversity University was a kind of symbol which, in my view, did not enhance the cause of cultural diversity," Salmon said. "I think it was detrimental to the cause."

Students active in Diversity University said administration attempts to outline a policy on symbolic structures is an attempt to limit protesters' constitutional rights.

"How are ideas supposed to flourish when it is designated where they can flourish?" student Edie LaFontaine said. "That contradicts everything the University stands for."

Howard Ball, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, drafted a proposal that would establish a policy on such structures, which the school does not presently have.

of allowing students to attend school outside their district. The school choice proposal, also a pet project of Senate President William Bulger, D-Boston, was tacked onto the 1992 budget without any hearings or input from educators.

Robertson didn't hold her current job when the plan was passed, but she hasn't been terribly visible in recommending changes.

Now, Robertson finds herself in another bind. A state school board panel, which includes two Weld appointees, has released a report that slams the current system for financing education. The state primarily funds education through the local property tax. The report calls for more state funding for education.

Robertson has distanced herself from the report, which is primarily authored by Martin Kaplan, a Weld appointee to the school board.

Maria Rodriguez, Robertson's spokeswoman, said the secretary did not sign onto the report because she is named in a lawsuit over school funding.

"It talks about a lot of funding issues and that matter is in court," Rodriguez said.

The Weld administration has downplayed the need for additional education funding, stressing that structural reforms should be put in place before there is a discussion of financial charges.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

OK, OK, fine. . so I took a week or two off, but so did the grad employees. It's a tough job and I'm not an easy guy to motivate. Thanx for the fill-in Debra.

Now that we're just about done tearing apart our own University do you think we can move the war back to the statehouse where it belongs?

Jason says thanx to the person who returned his paycheck.

I wish professors would realize that when their students start standing up in the middle of class, it's not to give a standing ovation.

Some people get confused too easily. I know a few that get confused if you put fruit in their jello.

What's the matter with the world? Just look at it. First we have this big floating ball of dirt we call a planet and everyone running around on it is called an earthing. To break it down we have nations. From there we go to states and provinces and divide those into counties. Counties are divided into towns and cities. Neighborhoods. Streets. Households or apartment houses. Families and finally individuals (all together now— "We are all individuals). But wait! it doesn't stop there. We also have id, ego and super-ego.

There's plenty of concrete walls on hand around campus. Just in case of spur of the moment racketball games.

I wish these people would wise up and realize that rallies don't work. They're just an excuse to stomp around and shout: "Press coverage! Press Coverage! We want press coverage! or maybe " Hey, hey, ho, ho. . take our quotes or we won't go!

Marc Elliott

Let's get his straight. The press is here to clue you into the facts, not to tell you what to think about them. You have to do that yourself.

I got a submission from Rob W. for Graffiti of the Week. 'Course I've got a couple of problems with it: (1) it's from a T-shirt, (2) he called me a shmuck — whatever that is, and (3) he's a SGA geek. But for T-shirt of the Week, Rob W. saw this at a Jerry Garcia Band concert: "Free your mind and your ass will follow."

OK, now for the real Graffiti 'o the Week last seen in the second floor men's room of the Campus Center: "All the guys hang out here, but not for long." Submitted by who, you ask? Well I lost the note so I don't know!

If you're going to be put on a pedestal, don't wear a dress. Have you heard this in any of your classes? "Blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, QUIZ, blah, blah, blah." Sometimes attending class is like watching those cable stations that broadcast in languages I don't understand: "Blah, Blah Blah, [image whatever language you don't understand] Blah, blah, blah, JERRY LEWIS, blah, blah, blah."

Hey guy! Wanna sticker? How 'bout a pamphlet? You wanna pamphlet? Be sure to show up for the rally today. It'll be at the same place, at the same time, starring the same people.

Imagine if Adam were to cheat on Eve? He'd end up at the DC on "prime rib night."

New from the HSCN! The creators of such chilling pictures as Surfing the Elevator of Death and Drunk Driving Arrest, it's "Ping-pong for chicken pucks" soon to be a hit new UMass game show! Next week, Bowling fro Brewskis!

Lousiana choices: Racketeer or racist? Hmmm. . . I'll just have the salad thanx. Kinda makes you wish there were more that two parties eh?

Flowers, letter bombs, money and Graffiti submissions can be sent to you know where (it's in the headline, look up) and addressed to "That idiot, Marc Elliot."

'Till next week. . . "Iz next, Eveningvear."

DC turkey not the real thing

Mid-terms are pretty much over, the first snow has fallen and the GEO strike has come and gone. Yes, the semester is progressing according to plan. The next event is set for Thursday, the 28th of this month. Turkey Day — a traditional time of fun, feasting and relatives.

Diana D'Avanzo

Yet in this time of happiness, it seems some type of annoyance and uneasiness is desperately attempting to permeate the atmosphere. What is this impending doom? Hmmm. Another case for UMass' Investigative Reporter. Deductive reasoning will certainly aid in uncovering the root of the problem. The chief clue is that a feeling is enveloping the UMass community. What can possibly smother the very environment in which poor, struggling collegiates live? The answer lies in one of the following: dust, an atomic bomb or an odor.

Dust. In large quantities, vision may become impaired and sneezing may result — never a pleasant task considering the effort needed to dig up a tissue or use a sleeve to rid one's face of excreted phlegm. Is the problem dust? No. The only large quantities of suspended disturbances on campus are caused by the bulldozers tearing up the ground behind Lederle — relatively small compared to the entire campus. The said condition is prevalent throughout this learning mecca. Strike dust.

Next, an atomic bomb. Can the present aggravation be the result of this type of stratospheric phenomena? No. Reason being, if such an explosion had resulted in unhappiness, no one would be alive to complain. Strike atomic bomb.

Odor. Now, there may be something to some type of mephitic scent being the means of the season's kill-joy.

One smell or another is noticeable throughout campus. Around the pond it's sewage and duck doo, along the road it's gasoline and in the Hatch it's coffee. However, one powerful nose invader successfully outwieghs all others. The winner is D.C. smell. If it was yesterday's lunch prepared in tomorrow's sauce at dinner time, D.C. smell would not be unique, perhaps not even that noticeable. However, the people of these dining establishments, those individuals that always seem dressed for the funny farm, bring out all the yuckiness that may well have been left undetected.

Consider for a moment the possiblity of not being handed a plate attached to a hand attached to a lady screaming, "No seconds!", "Where's your plate?", "Only one scoop — ingrate!" or, the all-time favorite, "Macaroni and Cheese is a Main, sorry. Ha, ha, ha." This, in its entirety, is D.C. smell, and please no arguing. If at UMass some Wednesdays can be Mondays, then attitudes can contribute to a smell.

Question remains, what has made these past weeks stand out most? A small, simple fact brought to light by the earlier stated happy thoughts of having actual, yummy food void of greasiness, preservatives and dishroom noise. Unfortunately, Food Services has achieved in overdoing the sliced turkey, potatoes and gravy thing this month — roughly seven times. Successfully, a state of discontent has resulted in the student masses forced to frequent the commons. Repeatedly dishing out a poor semblance of a holiday meal just before the digestible and good tasting real thing is to take place is not smart. After being shown what kinds of, um, food UMass invests each student's $800 in, the patrons are reminded exactly what is being paid for — and what is lacking.

Thus, agitation and frustration lead the way to all kinds of disturbances — nasty comment cards, killer stares and, worst of all, some radical demands for change. First, a polite and respectful attitude by employees, then nutritious food. Gasp!!- Is there no light finding its way through the smothering darkness?. . . Yes! Alas, there is uplifting news left to greet the many eager ears. THANKSGIVING DAY IS THURSDAY!!

Diana D'Avanzo can't wait to get home for dinner

Missing out on values

Well, Thursday is Thanksgiving for we citizens of the United States of America, a day in which families sit down together and give thanks for what they have.

Not exactly, at least not in most families. Most people see Thanksgiving as a day where mom takes work off to cook a fresh meal, a day in which the high school football game in the morning is followed by the NFL in the afternoon, or a day that the homeless aren't forgotten.

Michael Morrissey

In fact, today's images of Thanksgiving have deviated greatly from the traditional feast between the Pilgrims and the Indians, which was less than noble in the first place. In fact, the Pilgrims probably just wanted to bum another free meal off of the natives.

It's unfortunate that one of our only real "holidays" has to symbolize the manner in which white Europeans screwed the Native Americans. At any rate, the traditional dinner with the family and relatives is long gone. Today's family consists of a divorced mother and her three children, or a live-in unmarried couple with one young child and another on the way.

There are other deviant situations in this country, but they all show us the same thing: the postcard myth of the husband, wife, uncle, aunt, grandparents and the kids at the table is long gone! No longer can we perpetuate the myth that in America, every family has apple pie for dessert. It just doesn't happen.

The reason is rather complicated, as it deals with economics, class, the generation gap and other issues. It all comes down to one thing however: the deterioration of family values.

Yes, here I go again. In the United States, our moral values are at an all-time low. This leads to a lot of problems, most of which lead right back to the family.

Today's middle-class teenager is typically a wanna-be hood, with little regard for any authority. I ask the graduating students and those in graduate school, how many of your high schools had an incident involving a student carrying a firearm while you were there?

Five years ago, the answer was probably not many. Nowadays, the number of young punks with guns in suburbia is on the rise, and I don't see a decrease, but an increase. Why? Because their parents don't guide them.

Most adults think responsibility is a big word, not a tenet of being a parent. They are just as irresponsible as their children, lying to their spouses, stealing on the job, and carrying on extra-marital affairs.

These people's rationale is, "Everything's legal if you don't get caught." Is this the new American tradition? Are the days of the great Americans gone?

Unfortunately, the answer is probably yes. Too many young Americans perpetuate the genocide of our society by procreating children that they cannot support.

As long as our 16-18 year-olds are becoming fathers and mothers instead of high school graduates, our society will crash and burn just like the empires before us. The United States truly is the present Roman Empire, dying out because of its impurity.

I know it's hard for those who have little or no guidance from their parent(s) to show restraint, but that is what we must do if we are to recover from our moral recession.

Let's stop stealing from each other, killing each other, and making children that we cannot economically and morally support.

Furthermore, for those of you who were lucky enough to have caring parents, think about what you have Thursday and be truly thankful for it.

Believe it or not, our country's recovery depends first on clean hearts and clean minds. Once we have this, we can fight our other problems.

Party reinforces frat stereotypes

I came to UMass with preconceived ideas about the stereotypes of frat boys. The film Animal House helped to form these ideas, as well as horror stories of gang rape, racism and homophobia that I had heard. Crude, macho, elitist, drunk, high, politically unaware, racist, sexist men who wear back-to-front baseball caps and Bud sweatshirts.

Still trying to keep my mind open I attended my first frat party (you could say that I was a virgin frat party-goer), willing to have these images shattered. After 20 minutes I left, my stereotypes unfortunately still intact. Obviously not all of the aforementioned qualities apply to every brother and every fraternity house, but I noticed enough to feed the "Animal House" stereotype. I felt I was a piece of meat at a meat market.

As an onlooker I felt that the party was set up to enable the frat boys to hook up with women. The women were allowed a cup totally free of charge, whereas the men had to pay. The women did not have to be on the guest list in order to gain entry, which makes me wonder what they would have to do to return this favor.

Finally, before outraged fraternity brothers stone me or write letters of indignation to the Collegian, I would like to stress that I am fully aware that some, if not most, fraternities do good community work and that many admirable Americans are members. However, there are too many of the "other" type in existence and these are the ones perpetuating the negative stereotype. Is it about time you guys changed the "Animal House" image?

Black Affairs

Reggie Perry's "last chance" at the Malcolm X

On Wednesday Nov. 20, 1991 in the Malcolm X center here at the University of Massachusetts, Reggie Perry held the third of three discussions, which dealt with Black male and female relationships on this campus.

The first was an all male discussion and the second was an all female discussion. The final discussion titled "Last chance" was an opportunity for both sexes to come together and discuss various feelings they had about anything dealing with the relationships between Black males and females .

Jeff Lawrence

This was a good concept, however what really happened was a different story. Reggie opened with his remarks and stated that the discussion was not to become a "calling out" session. He then followed with having everyone write their answer to the following question. "What advice would you give to the opposite gender to close the communication gap between the two?" As I looked around I saw what seemed to be text books answers being written, but when the time came to start talking the room was silent.

Five or six people spoke on the subject, out of a crowd much larger than that of five or six people. My understanding was that we were all going to come together and talk about what was troubling us about one another. Maybe because Reggie stated that it was not to be a "calling out" session, people no longer had anything to say.

Do not get me wrong, the people that did speak made good points, it's just all the people who were writing their thesis' that suddenly lost their appetites. Someone could have least read what they had written, it would have made things more interesting.

The discussion ended with a video tape which consisted of clips from. The Mack, Boyz in the Hood, School Daze, The Color Purple and a few other Black movies.

I give Reggie "All the Dap!" for taking the time to create such a discussion, but the grade that most of us would have gotten would have definitely brought down our cum. 5000 G.

African-American dialects, the essense of Blackness

When we speak in various African-American dialects, keep in mind that it has been our means of communication in America, since the sixteenth century. The development and strengths of our dialects are an important part of the ingenuity that has taken from us to create our own culture. However, we must also understand that today, in the educated world, which is based upon White-America's standards, our dialects are thus forth negated, exploited, and not considered to be "proper."

Nicole Garretson

So, when Whites use, or should I say abuse our dialects, we should recognize their flimsy caliber. This does not mean that we should laugh with them, for they are imitating us as though we are caricatures speaking some trivial language, and that's not funny. The only thing that's funny is how stupid they look! They are trying to be someone that they cannot be.

They use our dialects when they feel like being "down" or acting bad. It should not surprise us that both of the preceeding terms have negative connotations in Anglo-American cultural environments. I do not believe that those same white people would take our language home to "mom" and "dad!"

On the other hand, we (African-Americans) unconsciously exploit the dialects ourselves. This is most prevalent among the college-educated class.

We must not forget that there are some Black people living in rural areas or the city ghettos, who do not have adequate education. As a result, many of them cannot speak or write with the standard grammatical, communicative skills.

For example when I see Black students speaking like "hoodlums" in their Afro-Am class, then speaking even more starchy than a lily-White person in their legal studies, or computer science class, it makes me wonder. Who do we want to be? What are we constantly trying to prove?

Let me note that presently, only 3 or 4 percent of Black people in America are attending colleges, and Universities. Furthermore, only 60 percent graduate from high school.

These realities DO NOT occur because the masses of our communities want to be uneducated. Believe me, any of them would trade places with one of us "educated blacks" in a minute.

They (the majority of our population) do not use our dialects to prove their Blackness. It is the one and only way that they have taught to speak.

The truth is that this society is built to maintain our inferiority. So, if anything , we should work towards alleviating the low self esteem, and inadequate knowledge of themselves, and the world around them that prevails amongst the masses of our communities. That's a part of what being "Black" is all about.

Now please do not misunderstand me. As stated earlier, these dialects are a part of our essence. We should feel very good about using our esoteric communication when we are amongst ourselves, since almost everything else we do has been exposed, and redefined by White people.

So, we don't necessarily have to eat "Chitlins" in class, rap when we speak, or force our dialects into the ground to prove our "Blackness." This just add to the stigmatization that has already been imposed upon us. Let's not just act "Black." Let us BE ourselves. . . a part of the African race.

Death penalty not war on drugs, but war on Blacks

Nov. 1, 1991 on the Editorial/Opinion page the editorial, "Death penalty for murders, drug dealers" written by Michael Morrissey was quite disturbing.

Mr. Morrissey stated his opinion on the death penalty by saying that it should be given to both murders and drug dealers.

After reading this I wondered if Mr. Morrissey knew that the majority of people on death row at the present time are Black males. I also wondered if Morrissey was aware of the fact that the largest percentage of people incarcerated for drug dealing are also Black males, the reason being that they were the one's who were caught, the one's who didn't have senators, or judges for parents to pay off this bias judicial system which was established in this country.

For some reason I felt that Mr. Morrissey was aware of this, and despite his "somewhat conservative ideology" I couldn't help but wonder if this ideology was derived from his somewhat anti-Black male mentality.

If the death penalty were to be given to drug dealers, it should be given across the board. This means, Black, White, Asian, Latino, etc. would be given the penalty. However, because of the constant injustices against minorities in the judicial system, this is far from reality. Another fact in which I am sure Morrissey is aware of.

The conspiracy to rid this country of the Black males, thus the Black family, is alive, well, and living in the governor's mansion.

Evidence for this not only comes from editorials like those written by Morrissey, and others like him, but also from governor Weld, who want to instate the death penalty.

In Morrissey's editorial he stated "Do you want to win the war on drugs, guys? Kill the enemy."

Well hommie take your ass out on the street and kill your so called drug dealing enemy but may I tell you that drug dealers are not only in low income neighborhoods, they are in rich White neighborhoods, high schools, and churches. Oh and on your one man war against "The Enemy" don't forget to make a quick stop at the state house, You bet the white sheet, hood, and that ole red, white, and blue thing, that there are drug dealers there also, dressed in thousand dollar "suits," with government beepers to boot.

In order to stop the real war on drugs let's keep the stuff from getting into the country. I have never seen any poppy fields growing in this country, and the people that are being arrested do not own planes to go get the drugs.

Bush, his wife and the rest of the Klan, oops, I mean government officials need to stop all the hoopla about "The War On Drugs" and spend all the money on keeping drugs out of the country.

However taking in consideration the fact Bush is too concerned with sending Black men and women to the Middle East to kill other Black men, women and children to make sure that when we drive into that Exxon station we have plenty of gasoline to fill our tanks, he has people like Morrissey, and Weld to do his dirty work for him.

In Morrissey's editorial he stated, that drug dealers, were "less than human, and did not deserve the respect of humans." I remember reading somewhere that this is how some early white "Americans" felt about their slaves and how the Klan feels about everyone different than their sick selves.

People of color need to take more of an interest in who we elect as our so called officials. We need to find out more about these people who go around kissing babies. This means more than just listening to the candidates on the 11:00 news, this means writing letters, phone calls, and just plain putting hommie out there on the spot. Then we utilize our voting power. Therefore we at least have more of a say so in who we elect.

Weld and this stuff about the death penalty is dead. We cannot let this happen. If put into effect it will mean the deaths of many young men who are making mistakes, which we all have done, while the people who are responsible, the one's who give these young men the drugs to sell, get off free.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be direct in business and romance. A clever member of the opposite sex helps you find the answer to an important question. A phone call could eliminate the need for a trip.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You remain calm when other people panic. Someone influential is impressed by your performance. Trust your intuition! The colors red and purple have special significance now.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Today's events offer you new opportunities and hope. Introduce a young person to someone who will be a good influence. A patient attitude and hard work help you to solve a complex problem.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Learn how to dress for success. Improving your personal appearance could win you that special job. Womanpower affects the outcome of a competition. Travel is best postponed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Time and facts are on your side. Financial pressures will subside if you continue to act in a responsible way. Help a fledgling employee learn the ropes. Explain your employer's priorities.

LIBRA (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do whatever you can to brighten an older person's day. A part-time relationship could grow into something more permanent. Romance soars to new heights this evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): There are things you can do to improve your work record before an important decision is made. Listen to the experts. Romantic partner makes a request you should honor.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Look for the good in people and you will find it. A word from someone special sends your spirits rising. Be specific when setting new goals. Strong-minded people usually get their way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Open your eyes to what is happening in your office. You may need the advice of someone at a distance. Believe in yourself and there is no limit to what you can accomplish.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You powers of concentration are truly amazing today. Be careful not to get carried away. The sooner you start a new project, the better. Choose your allies with care.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Facing reality now will smooth your path in the future. It is not a moment too soon to act on a financial matter. A romantic pursuit could be in vain. Look elsewhere.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): If your romantic partner blows both hot and cool, back off for a while. Attention to detail is essential if you are to succeed in business. A daydream triggers a clever idea.

Siena NIT quarterfinal, now-graduated Siena point guard Marc "Showbiz" Brown said the Minutemen were "the luckiest team on the planet."

Marc, even in defeat you were all mustard and no hot dog. It's doubtful UMass knew about Brown's statement — it was on Albany, N.Y. television, after all. But the way the Minutemen utterly destroyed the Saints on national television Friday night, you'd think Coach Cal's crew was on a revenge mission the likes of which haven't been seen since Rambo: First Blood, Part II.

I braced myself for a huge second-half letdown which never came. The Minutemen played like a team possessed all 40 minutes and never let up. Were this a prizefight, the referee would have stopped it during the introductions. It was that close.

Have you ever heard a crowd chant "It's all over" five minutes into the second half? Honestly, every time Siena crawled within 25 points the crowd got into it a little more, as if to say "Go ahead! Blow them out!"

It was Brenna. "Hey! Get your hands up," she said. Oops, Louis Roe was at the line shooting two. I hurriedly got my hands up for the ceremonial "woosh" but he missed (sorry Lou, I'll get 'em up next time).

"See? I told you," Brenna said. "Now look what you did." Yes, even the faithful can go astray. Thanks for the reminder, Brenna. I felt positively sorry for the busload of Siena fans who made the trip from Loudenville, N.Y. to see their beloved Saints get smushed. They took a lot of heat — which is to be expected, I suppose — and it's a long bus ride home to Loudenville. Wonder what Siena fans think of the Cage, as the atmosphere is very similar to Siena's Alumni Recreation Center, where the Saints have only lost twice the past four years.

One more quick Cage note: dropping cheerleaders is just not very a propos. Next time, would you please catch her?

Ouch: The Bruins lost yet another player to injury when Andy Brickley tore up his shoulder. Brickley, the team's third-leading scorer, is lost for the year according to reports, and joins Glen Featherstone and Cam Neely in the stands. It's going to be hard for the Bruins to compete when half the team is watching the game from the "Boards and Blades" club upstairs.

Well, whether you choose Chicago vs. Detroit or The Survivor Series for your Turkey Day viewing pleasure, have a good one.

for this year's motto, "You've Gotta Believe."

King was released by the New York Knicks after a serious knee injury put his career in jeopardy.

"For a couple of years we were mediocre, and then we were awful," she said. "But we have no where to go but up. King came back, scored 50 points in one game last season, played significant minutes and made a return to the All-Star Team.

"That's the sort of stuff we believe in," she said. "These are the sort of people we believe in."

Minutemen crush Keene State, 94-45

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

It was the classic David versus Goliath matchup. Division II Keene State and Division I University of Massachusetts (ranked 34th in the newest Associated Press poll). For all intents and purposes, this game was over when they scheduled it.

There would be no Lowell miracle, no let down from Friday night's 35-point rout of Siena, just a 94-45 blowout.

Those 3,745 Curry Hicks Cage fans who decided to attend last night's basketball game, saw some inspiring play from the UMass freshmen.

Leading 59-31 in the second half, UMass coach John Calipari benched the starters due to what he described as a lack of effort, and went with a lineup of Louis Roe, Mike Williams, Derek Kellogg, Scott Drapeau and Jerome Malloy.

"I told the starters, 'the minute you let up, that's when I'm taking you out,'" Calipari said. "They were begging me to go back in because they knew this was a game where they could raise their averages."

The starters never did play again. However, in 3:05, the freshmen built the lead to 40. A Kevin McHale like post move by Roe (13 points, 8 rebounds), a Williams jumper, a Kellogg off-balance-leaner in the lane, a Roe ally oop dunk, two Roe free throws, and a Kellogg foul shot gave the Minutemen a 71-31 lead.

"I can't ever remember beating two teams this bad," Calipari said."

The Minutemen (2-0) jumped out to a 13-2 lead before Keene State (0-3) knew what hit them. To their credit, they came back and closed the gap to two before UMass flexed its muscles.

The Minutemen proceeded to go on a 36-10 run in the final 13 minutes to end the half ahead 57-29.

Tony Barbee (18 points) paced the first half attack with 16 points on 7 for 10 shooting, while Harper Williams chipped in with 10 and William Herndon with nine.

Herndon continued his perfect shooting, connecting on all three shots he threw up. He is now 9-for-9 on the season.

As for UMass' all-time leading scorer, Jim McCoy, another subpar performance. In 15 minutes, McCoy had three points (1-6 from the floor, 1-4 from the free throw line), zero rebounds and one assist.

"If he would have played in the second half, he probably would have had 15 points," Calipari said. "He's still trying to find himself. The good thing is I got to see everybody play. That might never happen again."

Bullets' president proves NBA not only for men

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Even though the Washington Bullets are in the cellar of the Atlantic Division of the NBA, the president of the franchise is definitely a first.

Susan O'Malley, president of the Bullets franchise since May 1991, the first woman ever to become a president of a NBA franchise, spoke to a group of 40 at the University of Massachusetts yesterday.

O'Malley, 29, said early planning was the key to her swift movement in the Bullets' front office.

"When I was 11 years old, I announced at the dinner table I was going to run a franchise," O'Malley said. "And my father said I had better get a plan."

O'Malley said while a general business and finance major at Mount St. Mary's College in Emmitsburg, Md., she held two internships; one with a hockey team and another with a now-defunct local soccer team.

"I was a good intern because I was willing to do anything," she said. "I washed some of the players' cars. I worked in the mailroom at one internship, and I was the best lick-and-sticker in town."

O'Malley said the biggest obstacle in getting to where she wanted to be was not her gender, but rather making herself stand out.

"[Washington Chairman of the Board] Abe Pollin is sexblind and colorblind," she said. "I'm always treated well within the NBA. Outside, when I'm representing the league, I always get a lot of strange looks, however."

O'Malley recounted a meeting of the 27 presidents, of which she was the only woman.

"We went into the lounge of the hotel after the meeting, and I was the only woman. I remember the bartender — his name was Peabody. Anyway, he sees me and the other presidents and says, 'Which of you brought your wife?' After that, I told him I was buying, and the tip wasn't looking too good," O'Malley said.

O'Malley said professional sports was the 22nd largest industry in the United States, but the industry has become saturated with paraphenilia vendors and broadcasting rights.

"This country spent $64 billion on sports nationally last year," she said. "The view of the future is international sports. The NBA will have to open an office in Europe within the next few years in order to stay lucrative."

O'Malley said this exposure begins with the decision by the U.S. Olympic Committee to allow professional basketball players to play in the 1992 Olympics.

"Because of [Olympic Committee], there will be international licensing rights, and in the future, I think the winners of the NBA Finals will end up playing the European champs in the McDonalds Open," she said.

O'Malley cited the return of Bullets' forward Bernard King as one of the reasons

Memories of the weekend

In the past three years the Buffalo Bills have only lost three games within their division, the AFC East.

Two of those losses have been at the hands of the New England Patriots.

Lesson: don't open your mouth unless your foot won't fit.

I admitted earlier that I was afraid of this game. My beloved Bills would be looking past poor, pitiful New England, find themselves in a dogfight and suffer an embarassing, potentially damaging defeat, I feared. Wouldn't you know my worst fears came true and all those things I said about Buffalo blowing out the hapless Patsies came back to haunt me with a vengeance.

Greg Sukiennik

I had no idea, however, that Hugh Millen would outperform Jim Kelly (four interceptions — four!) or that the Patriot defense would hold the Bills' vaunted offensive attack to a scant 13 points. Damn good thing I don't bet.

But let me remind you, New England fans: to get into the playoffs, the Patriots had better reserve seats now.

In a televised interview after last year's UMass/

Losing streak finally ends

Women's hoop tops St. Francis, 44-40

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The losing streak is over!

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team had a good weekend in Loretto, PA at the Red Flash Classic, breaking the team's 30-game losing streak by defeating St. Francis 44-40, and losing in the Championship game to the University of Pittsburgh, 65-56.

"It feels great for me, but I think it feels even better for the kids," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "They needed to get the win to make everybody shut up about the losing streak.

"They got their monkey off their back, and now they can quit looking back."

The sights are now set straight for the Minutewomen. The team got rid of their losing ways in their first game of the season. Led by point guard Trish Riley and forward Jenny Moran, UMass squeaked out a four point victory over the Red Flash.

In fact, UMass jumped out to a 24-13 halftime margin thanks to St. Francis' penchance for fouling. The Minutewomen shot 86 percent from the charity stripe in the first half, converting 18 of 21 free throws.

"Free throw shooting in the first half was the key for us," O'Brien said. "We shot very poorly, but we were taking the ball to the basket hard and we got fouled a lot.

"St. Francis cut the lead to two in the second half, and our kids probably could've packed it in and say here we go again, but they didn't. They fought hard."

The Minutewomen held on with help from Moran (game-high 13 points) and Riley's help off the bench.

Riley, the backup point guard, logged 27 minutes and added 11 points. Her quickness on the floor has been a strength for the team.

For her efforts, Riley was rewarded with a spot on the Red Flash All-Tournament team, along with forward Maleeka Valentine.

"Maleeka played great defense throughout the whole tournament, she was unbelievable playing defense," O'Brien said.

In the Championship game, UMass went down by 20 points early and were never quite able to climb back.

Pittsburgh started an 11-0 run in the first half, highlighted by two 3-pointers from Erin Maloy, who was also named to the All-Tournament team.

But the Minutewomen went on a 10-2 run at the end of the first 20 minutes, led by Kim Kristofik's six points. Pittsburgh led 33-21 at intermission, and UMass could only trim the lead by two points in the second half.

The Minutewomen came out strong in the second half, going on a 12-5 run topped off by a Pemberton bank shot with 8:08 left to cut the Lady Panther lead to 45-39. Pitt regrouped after taking a timeout, and after Riley drove in for a layup to cut the deficit to four, the Lady Panthers took off.

A 10-0 run for Pitt sealed the fate of the gritty Minutewomen. Jonna Huemrich was a big factor for Pitt, leading all scorers with 17 points. Riley led the Minutewomen with 16 in the finale. Huemrich took home the Most Valuable Player trophy for her efforts.

"They fought hard, they had a chance," O'Brien said of her team. "If they had gotten a call or two the other way, it would've been a totally different situation.

"They got a chance to be an okay ballclub. They didn't play well, . . . they realize this and it's good because they know they can improve."

BOSTON — Gov. William Weld came out in favor of a large chunk of a Democratic education reorganization proposal on Tuesday, but said he wouldn't approve tax increases to fund reform.

But the Legislature's Education Committee plan was roundly criticized by other Republicans, who accused the panel's chairmen of condemning Weld's proposals last month and then copying them.

"I'm not in favor of raising the income tax, which is one of the options in the Democratic plan," Weld said. "I'm not in favor of raising any taxes, but. . . I think we can discuss adequate funding measures."

The chairmen of the education committee, Sen. Thomas Birmingham, D-Chelsea, and Rep. Mark Roosevelt, D-Boston, unveiled their reorganization plan Monday. They pointed to several funding options, one of which was maintaining the state income tax at 6.25 percent, which they say would raise $250 million a year. It is now scheduled to drop to 5.95 percent Jan. 1.

"My feeling is that $13 billion is enough money to pay for programs that the state should be funding, including education," Weld said. The state's fiscal 1992 budget is $13 billion.

"I see this as an effort to sell taxes," said House Minority Leader Peter Forman, R-Plymouth. "All they're doing is looking for an excuse to raise taxes. They use children and education issues . . . and attach it to every tax issue they can think of."

Last month, Birmingham and Roosevelt derided Weld's reorganization plan as an insubstantial publicity ploy. But their proposals, which were put together by four task forces, are either identical or very similar to the governor's.

"Both Roosevelt and Birmingham should be congratulated," said Sen. Arthur Chase, R-Worcester, a committee member. "Some of these items are basically very similar to what the governor proposed, only there are more pages to it. There's nothing in there but a wonderful outline of changes we'd all like to see in education.

Peter Nessen, Weld's Administration and Finance secretary, said his office had been looking into various funding options for an education reorganization since weld announced his version of reform last month.

One possibility was earmarking local aid for education, Nessen said. But he added that he didn't think that alone would pay for education.

"The dollars that you're looking at are substantial, and they cannot come from one area," he said.

Jewish tradition of Hanukkah celebrated

By JENNIFER D. HAWKINS
Collegian Staff

Christmas, its traditions and its celebration advertised and commercialized in stores across the United States, is far more widely known than the traditions of Hanukkah, the Jewish holiday which arrives about the same time as Christmas.

The history behind the Jewish holiday of Hanukkah is a story rich in courage and perseverence. University of Massachusetts Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter described Hanukkah's history as "the struggle of the Jewish people to practice their religion."

Around 168 B.C., a Syrian Greek King named Antiochus forbade Jews to practice their religion and desecrated their temple in Jerusalem.

The Jewish people revolted against the king and after a long struggle, they eventually triumphed. Driving Greek people from the land, they reclaimed their temple.

A legend says when the people attempted to purify their temple and light the menorah, they discovered that they had only enough oil to light one candle for one day. The Jews decided to light the candle anyway and try to make some more oil. Instead of burning out when it was expected to, the candle miraculously stayed lit for eight days.

This legend helps explain why Hanukkah is celebrated for eight days.

Today's Jewish people celebrate Hanukkah by lighting candles every night on the menora, an eight-branched candle holder, each branch representing a night of the holiday. The traditional menorah used oil, so in keeping with the tradition, Jews eat foods cooked with oil during the holiday. A traditional dish is latkes, which are fried potato pancakes. Also, children usually receive a small gift every night for the duration of the holiday.

Perlmutter described the struggle of the early Jewish people and the legend of the lighting of the menorah as "a story of hope."

"Even when there is no guarantee of success, even though people are few," he said, "it is still important to light the light of freedom and hope."

Debate Club argues nationwide

By MICHAEL J. MEEHAN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Debate Club is alive and arguing well all over the country this year. One aspect of the debate club, the parliementary debate team, recently returned from a national parliamentary debate tournament at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colorado.

The tournament, in which team members debated in a style modeled after the British parliamentary system, took place Nov. 15-18.

Chris Hamilton, senior natural resource studies major and president of the debate club, was pleased with the team's performance.

"It was one of our better showings", Hamilton said. Out of the 30 debate teams sent to the tournament from all over the country, UMass team Melanie DeSilva and George Fern, both sophomores, finished in the top ten. Junior Peter Lewis, economics major, finished 14th best speaker overall. The UMass debate club sent three teams to the tournament, Hamilton said.

The parliamentary debate team currently has 15 members, and, time permitting, participates in four such competitions per semester. The other 15 members of the debate club make up the newly formed mock trial team. According to Hamilton, this is the club's first foray into mock trial competition since the debate program first began here at UMass in 1909.

The mock trial team is busy preparing for their first competition, Hamilton says. The competition will take place in March at the Western New England College School of Law.

Aside from participating in parliamentary or mock trial debates, the debate offers a variety of public services to the University.

During the semester, Hamilton says, the debate club sends out letters to professors here at UMass offering to publicly debate an issue in that professor's classroom. The club also offers open seminars and workshops on public speaking and argument.

Hamilton hopes the UMass community will become more aware of the debate club, and welcomes all inquiries. The debate club office is located in trailer 3 behind Thompson Hall.

Turkeys recalled out West

By CAROL ANN RIHA
Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Norbest, Inc. is recalling turkeys in nine Western states because of a rotten-egg odor caused by decay.

No illnesses have been reported.

The birds recalled are among 70,000 fresh turkeys sold in Oregon, Washington, California, Idaho, Nevada, Arizona, Monatana, Utah and Wyoming, company spokesman Mike Korologos said. Frozen turkeys weren't recalled.

Only turkeys that smell bad need to be returned, Korologos said Monday.

"It's not a health hazard. It just smells bad," he said. He said probably only a small percentage of the 70,000 turkeys are affected.

The Salt Lake City company said it had received 10 complaints about turkeys processed at its Salem, Ore., plant.

"At some point during the distribution, the turkeys were exposed to temperatures above the 30- to 35-degree level," Korologos said.

Astronauts focus lens on the Earth

By LAURA TOLLEY
Associated Press

SPACE CENTER, Houston — An Atlantis crewman peered down at Earth through a telescope today, trying to recognize various spots on the globe in a test of how astronauts might serve the military from space.

Shuttle crewman Thomas Hennen ran into trouble with the Pentagon experiment Monday night when a system that tells the astronaut the telescope is trained on the desired target apparently failed.

He had better luck with the telescope assembly after turning it off and back on and was able to find three out of four targets early today.

Hennen told ground controllers the cueing system still didn't appear to be working exactly as it did in training, but "it really hasn't hindered the actual acquisition of the site."

He could not find Pretoria City, South Africa, but the first-time flier did spot Kampong, Cambodia; Harare, Zimbabwe; and Diego Garcia, an island in the Indian Ocean that was a major staging area for U.S. troops during the Persian Gulf War.

Hennen was picked for the flight because of his expertise in Army imagery analysis and spent months studying satellite maps and training in simulations.

"We're curious to see what a trained photo interpreter can discern from space," sadi Air Force Lt. Col James McLeroy.

Scientists move back hands of Doomsday Clock

CHICAGO (AP) - The keepers of the Doomsday Clock turned back its hands today to 11:43 p.m. - its farthest point ever from nuclear midnight - to reflect the end of the Cold War.

The clock, which appears on the cover of the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists and symbolizes the threat of nuclear war, had stood at 11:50 p.m. since March 1990, after a democratic tide swept Eastern Europe.

"The Cold War is over. The 40-year-long East-West nuclear arms race has ended," the Bulletin said in an editorial today."

"The world has clearly entered a new, post-Cold War era. The illuaion that tens of thousands of nuclear weapons are a guarantor of national security has been stripped away."

Since the magazine's founding in 1945 by scientists who worked at the University of Chicago on the Manhattan Project to build the atomic bomb, the clock was closest to midnight - two minutes - in 1953, after the United States tested the hydrogen bomb.

Until today, the clock was farthest from midnight - 11:48 p.m. - in 1963, after the signing of a test ban treaty, and again in 1972, when the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty was signed.

The Bulletin's directors and editors determine the setting.

New comic Latin book hilaris est

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

Latin for Even More Occasions
Henry Beard
Villard Books

It's here! The book every former/current Latin student has been waiting impatiently for, the sequel to Latin for All Occasions, Latin for Even More Occasions.

Finally published this month, Latin for Even More Occasions is a ridiculously corny book for those who are pretentious, or who think they might like to be. It's a cute coffee table book, or an ice breaker for those socially inept folks who can't find the right words to say in English.

Beard's book offers impressive translations of humorous quotes on everything (including Sports, Literature, Geography, and Holidays. He even provides readers with telephone answering machine recordings.)

Henry Beard made many genuine attempts to be hip, cool, and contemporary. He actually tried a little too hard to be updated because I had trouble translating some of his English slang. An example of this, "Artifex plumipes qui merdam manducat in meo libelloelectronico qui regit. Pessum datum est!" he translates to mean, "Some bagbiting technoweenie put a hungus Trojan horse in my program! It is munged!"

In response to the assertion that Latin is a dead language, the author replied, "No, it's only resting. You see, until now nobody took the trouble to translate useful modern phrases into classical Latin."

Is Latin making a comeback? "Cacatne ursus in sylvis?" (Does a bear shit in the woods?)

Book Review

Under such nifty subtitles as, "Dopey Expectations are More Forceful in Latin," the author manages to entertain with such translations as, "Ventis secundis, tene cursum." (Go with the flow.)

Another equally obscure thought from the master of Latin disaster, "Nonne hiems, quae incendiis magnis multisque belli inter gentis omnes tertii inducatur, inhibeat orbem terrarum ne nimium calescat?" (Wouldn't nuclear winter cancel out the greenhouse effect?)

The author treads heavily on the boundaries of good taste when he suggests things to say in Latin to make friends in Germany. "Quae populos habetis in animo deballare proximo bello inter omnes gentes?" (Germany: So who have you guys got lined up for your next world war?) Or in Spain: "Ecce, inmittes is in amphitheatrum paucos Christianos et permitte tauro aliaquando vincere?" (Why don't you throw a few Christians in there and let the bull win once in a while?)

Speaking of a lack of good taste, my favorite sports columnist, Davey Scott could also find some useful expressions with which to improve his lame intellectual facade. "Ibi id impone, ibi id impone!"(Put it in there, put it in there!) As you may have noticed, these expressions have a variety of different interpretations (not that Dave is going to get any opportunities with that lame picture next to his column.)

Other humorous, yet similarly tasteless subtitles include, "The Expletives Never Need to be Deleted in Latin." Examples of these winning quotes are, "You've got stercus for brains," and "Quisnam pepedit?" (Who cut the cheese?)

Or perhaps you have a burning urge to use "a Term of Nonendearment," such as, "tiro in exercitu stellarum" (space cadet) or "simulator" (wannabe).

There is something in this book for everyone. (Beard certainly attempts to degrade just about everyone, anyway.)

For those new to Latin, the book includes a pronunciation guide.

This book could also be used "to help those many classically trained individuals whose Latins is just a little rusty to 'chew the toga' with absolute confidence."

With four years of Latin under my belt, I think Beard's volume could make some nice suggested reading, or a stocking stuffer, for high school and college students studying Latin. However it will get a few giggles out of almost anyone, whether they studied Latin or not.

Burt speaks: Madonna meets the Nazis

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

Yesterday, professor Richard Burt spoke on "Degenerate 'Art': "Exhibiting the Avant Garde and the Administration of Aesthetics, at the English department colloquium series.

As his main topic, Burt examined an exhibit of avant garde art currently touring the United States that is a partial recreation of a government exhibit in Nazi Germany in 1937. He raised a series of questions about the nature of censorship and the tactics used in the process of legitimizing and delegitimizing of art.

Burt noted a series of unexpected resemblences in the tactics used by groups and institutions that seemed directly opposed. For example, he pointed out that in the original exhibit which intended to discredit the avant garde, the Nazis had repeated the tactics and even the slogans of the artists they attacked. Specifically, some of the Nazi grafitti scrawled over Dada art such as "Take Dada seriously!" was directly quoted from exhibits organized by Dada artists themselves. In the current exhibit, organized by the Los Angeles County Museum of Art, this grafitti is absent altogether.

He said that the American curators who put together the new exhibit can be seen as replicating some of the strategies of those they seek to criticize. Burt pointed out that "the current exhibition seeks to undermine current and potential would-be censors, but it imitates techniques in the 1937 exhibit in order to do so."

He discussed how the current exhibit downplayed issues such as the censorship of homosexual art, and ignored some very prominent victimized leftists. A painting by avant garde artist, Otto Dix, of a male jeweler with a "Mae West" figure was presented without comment on its homoerotic character.

He said "The rhetorical and ideological force of censorship has to be taken into account in terms of how it is practiced and how related tropes such as "philistine" and "moron" are employed. We need to depart from the ususal definition of censorship as a repressive and monolythic state apparatus."

Burt mentioned that pop superstar Madonna had been led on a tour of the exhibit by the main curator. "Toward the end of the interview, Madonna drew a parallel between the exhibit and her own experience of censorship," he said. He noted that she had compared those who called for her work to be censored with Hitler.

However, Burt noted, Madonna was using the event to promote her film, "Truth or Dare", which flirts openly with issues of censorship, and that the museum was using the presence of the media idol as a promotional as well as political message.

Madonna, he said, is "'like a victim' of censorship", and that such efforts have only served to reinforce her importance.

He concluded, "The current widespread panic and hysteria arises presisely because censorship cannot be limited to a recognizable state censorship apparatus. It can be found everywhere and by everyone."

Get stuffed on HSCN movies

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Hey, movie lovers, welcome to another installment of the Campus Cable Connection. This humble reviewer wishes you all a happy Thanksgiving, and when you get back from break all stuffed, these movies will be waiting for you.

Against All Odds — Rachel Ward, Jeff Bridges, James Woods. A remake of Out of the Past with a heavy, drab plot and, to an extent, unsatisfying. An unemployed jock accepts a job from an ex-teammate to find his girlfriend who has run off to Mexico. A couple of great action scenes, but not enough to save it. **

Catch-22 — Alan Arkin, Martin Balsam, Richard Benjamin. Screen adaptation of Joseph Heller's famous novel based on insanity within the army during WWII. The movie is long and drawn-out, but the acting shines.  1/2.

Das Boot — Jurgen Prochnow, Herbert Gronmeyer, Klaus Wenneman. German film ("The Boat"), about a German U-boat during WWII on a certain mission. The film effectively and tastefully displays and anti-war message. If you liked The Hunt for Red October, you'll love Das Boot. ****

Eating Raoul — Paul Bartel, Mary Woronov, Robert Beltran. Amusing black comedy about a couple who lure wealthy swingers into their apartment and kill them. They figure, hey, it reduces the amount of perverts in the city, and it gives them money to finance a restaurant.  1/2.

Hairspray — Ricki Lake, Sonny Bono, Divine. Director John Waters goes all-out in this bizarre flick about the integration of a teen TV dance program in 1962. The satire is touchingly nostalgic as well as witty.  1/2.

Pet Semetary — Dale Midkiff, Fred Gwynne, Mary Lambert. Screenplay by Stephen King, based on his best selling novel. It's not as good as the book, but some magically gruesome moments make for a better-than-average film about a family who stumbles upon an ancient Micmac burial ground.  1/2.

The Stunt Man — Peter O'Toole, Steven Railsback, Barbara Hershey. Dazzling, award-winning film about a fugitive who accidentally murders an ace stunt man on a movie set. An eloquent black comedy. ***.

The Good Mother — Diane Keaton, Liam Neeson, Jason Robards. Somewhat tiresome and drawn-out adaptation of a Sue Miller novel about a woman who finally finds sexual fulfillment in her life, but risks the ability to raise her daughter well in the interim.  1/2.

Torch Song Trilogy — Anne Bancroft, Matthew Broderick, Harvey Fierstein. Fierstein rewrote and condensed his Broadway play about a drag queen. Remarkable performances. ***.

Terms of Endearment — Shirley MacLaine, Jack Nicholson, Debra Winger. Tearjerker alert! Tearjerker alert! Follows a mother and daughter through their trials and tribulations throughout the years. Jam-packed with Oscar winners, including Screenplay, Director, Best Picture and Oscars for MacLaine and Nicholson. ****

Also being shown on HSCN this week are these movies: Tales from the Darkside: The Movie ( 1/2); Pump up the Volume (); Robin and Marian (* 1/2); Friday the 13th Part 1 (); Lawrence of Arabia (); Seven Year Itch (); Jumpin' Jack Flash ( 1/2); Scanners ( 1/2); U2 Rattle and Hum ().

Police invasions and headlines won't make drugs go away

I saw an article in the Springfield Union-News recently about a huge drug bust in Holyoke. Apparently, the cops found large amounts of cocaine, mostly of the crack variety and lots of cash and made six arrests.

The bust made the front page. Quotes from neighbors who were happy the raid occured were featured prominently in the article. After all, now that the Holyoke Police have made this huge arrest there's less of a drug problem there, right?

You've got to be naive, stupid or both to believe that. High-visibility arrests and tough talk make for fine newspaper headlines and TV news top stories, but they don't solve the deeper problems behind the drug business.

Take Pittsfield, for instance. Some years back there was a huge raid on the city's "West side" neighborhood which brought over 30 arrests and a large seizure of money and cocaine. The local media ate it up like cake at a wedding.

Well, ya know what really happened? The raid amounted to a full-scale invasion of one West Side neighborhood. Riot police were under orders to fire off massive volleys of gunfire if any shots rang out. How did the cops get their 30 arrests? They just rounded up everyone looking suspicious on Columbus Ave. and hauled 'em off to jail. Was it just coincidence that much of the neighborhood they picked is Black? Or that most of the arrested were Black males? Seems like too many coincidences for my taste. It's funny how Pittsfield has such a small minority population but supposedly that population could ca use so much harm to the city.

But hey, here's the punchline—five years later, Pittsfield still has a drug problem. In fact, it's gotten worse. Funny how all those arrests on the West Side didn't solve things.

Greg Sukiennik

See, you can make all the drug raids and round-up arrests you want, but as long as there's a demand for the stuff, the business will continue to flourish. Some one else moves in where a void is created and sets up shop — until he or she gets arrested or shot.

Of course, do you ever see any drug arrests in affluent neighborhoods in Holyoke or Pittsfield or Springfield or anywhere? Of course not. Yet the problem continues although police concentrate on areas where minorities near or below the poverty line live. This isn't a war on drugs. It's a war on the oppressed.

People don't sell drugs because they're evil, like you've been led to believe by every anti-drug TV commercial aimed at the lowest common denominator intellegence of most TV viewers. After all, dealing is not only illegal but potentially deadly. If the cops don't get you first, someone else connected to the business will. Not exactly the ideal nine-to-five job.

People sell drugs because it's a way out of economic dependence. The demand is always there, profits are tax-free and you don't have to join the army or shell out big bucks for "affordable public higher education" to qualify.

When your back's against the wall, when you've got kids to feed and bills to pay and there's no other alternative except 20 hours a week at the local Burger Mon, selling crack seems like a viable alternative. Illegal money is better than no money at all, or small welfare payments which won't stretch far enough. That's not a defense of drug dealing, that's cold, hard reality. Drive through the North End of Springfield, or through the area surrounding Springfield College and AIC and witness this reality for yourself. Not too pretty, is it?

Maybe it's time we listened to the little voice saying "Gee, if there was more economic opportunity for the poor and oppressed, maybe they wouldn't have to sell drugs to get by."

Can't beat simple logic, can ya?

Hydro-Quebec is destroying bay

Have you heard of the James Bay and what's happening there? If you have you may wonder why Hydro-Quebec, and the disruption of a wildlife area greater than that of New England and New York state combined isn't in print everywhere you look.

The James Bay lies at the southern tip of the Hudson Bay and is an essential part of the largest remaining wilderness in North America. Things that live there include caribou, moose, beavers, seals, beluga whales, many species of fish and birds and also the Cree Indians. As we have all been shown in recent years, nature on our planet is a complex and fragile system, and in the region north of New England the James Bay is one of that system's most important facets.

Hydro-Quebec is a three phase project to generate hydro-electric power via a system of dams in Quebec and Ontario. This power would go to its own region, to New York and to New England. What this project proposes is to build several dams along rivers that feed into the James Bay and thus generate "safe, clean" power. However, though it would not create toxic waste or noxious smoke which we know would threaten our future, much of the damage resulting from the project will skip that ambiguous time phase of accumulation of toxins and go right to the final result. The dams proposed will flood over 25,000 square kilometers and impact over 350,000 square kilometers. It will drown entire regions that are habitats and vital migration routes.

The first phase of the project, which was completed in 1985, dammed or diverted five rivers. This has already led to mercury poisoning of waters and has caused the release of gases which contribute to the greenhouse effect. It has destroyed many habitats for all manner of mammals, fish and birds and has necessitated the breakup and relocation of tribes of Cree Indians. In 1984, 10,000 migrating caribou were killed crossing the Canaipiscau River during a Hydro-Quebec water release.

The second stage, proposed for this year, is predicted to destroy fifteen major rivers. It will cause most of the flooding resulting from the project and it has been said that it will complete the destruction of the Cree culture. This phase will also no doubt cause much more damage as yet unknown.

The third stage is the $100 billion Grand Canal which will consist of a 100-mile dike across the mouth of the James Bay to enable freshwater to be pumped to the Great Lakes and to the Midwest and Southwest of the United States. There is not enough space in this entire paper to list all of the destruction that will be caused by this "safe, clean" source of power.

It has been realized by many that what Hydro-Quebec officials call "safe, clean" power is neither. So far Maine has abstained from contracting to receive power from the James Bay. Vermont has agreed to receive power only from existing dams and has in fact extended the time on its option to terminate the contract without financial penalty. The present deadline is November 30.

Do you feel that this is what you want to be generating the power used in your home? Is cheaper electricity worth the destruction of thousands of square miles of wilderness? If you don't, write to your representatives and other government officials and tell them. Your opinion is valuable only if you make it heard.

Persistence is the answer

I own a cat who has a strong fascination with the long lacy curtains in my family room. This fascination trigers a desire or urge to climb to the top of these curtains until the weight of this fat cat pulls the entire display down.

Although this may be an obsessive act of my feline, he has never quite reached his goal, for everytime he reaches a quarter of halfway up his stairway to heaven a loud, evil, screeching voice yells "No Bugsy!"

So in fear of the hand or foot that may be behind this almost inhuman noise, my cat runs to hide, contemplating the cause of his failure and the closeness to his death.

Manejah Morad

Amazingly enough as soon as this danger is gone this courageous cat is once again at the base of the curtains staring at his hopeful future.

Despite the fact that this cat causes my blood pressure to rise a few hundred degrees, I admire him greatly for his dedication. The cat has been told "No" probably almost a million times, but remarkably he still continues his pursuit of happiness remaining loyal to his dreams.

Throughout my life I had one dream. I had a dream to be a famous, and maybe even wealthy, singer. I wanted to win a grammy and meet Michael Jackson. So basically, I wanted it all. When I was told in high school that college was where I could finally develop the person I wanted to be, the thought of hundreds of people watching me cheering and clapping suddenly did not seem so far from reality. I could do this. For a small fee I could actually make all my dreams come true.

Unfortunately within the first few weeks of my college career, this dream faded away quietly. I immediately found out that with my dream were a hundred other people with the same dream(except, of course, for the part of meeting Michael Jackson). So with my first college rejection, I abandoned my dream. Despite this, there was not a total vacancy inside of me, for I developed another dream. A dream to be a journalist. A dream, in fact, to someday be the best journalist I could possibly be. I felt a sudden spark of life erupting within me. This was it; a practical dream where the boundaries for reaching any goal I might have were unlimited.

Unfortunately once again my dream was rejected. But this time "No" could and would not be accepted. I wondered what right did any human being have to tell me that I was not good enough? What right did they have to try to throw my dream away as if it was trash? If I wanted something so much that I was willing to pay for it how could they still tell me "No"? After my first couple rejections, thoughts ran through my head of maybe changing my dream, not entirely but maybe just altering it a bit. But then I thought of my cat. Would my cat alter his procedure? Would my cat give up on the curtains and instead try to pick the furniture? No.

No one should have to settle. No one should have to be told what their future would be. And I personally refuse to be. Even if I'm eighty years old and still trying to win acceptance I will remain loyal to my dream.

Because this University is so large and because there seems to be a million and one things to indulge one's self in it is hard to keep one's goals in mind. It is hard to keep a clear perspective on what we are all here for (well most of us). We are here to fulfill our dreams, to finally make our future what we, through our childhood and adolescent years, imagined it would be. This University should not be here to hinder these dreams, financially or academically, but rather to provide for its positive outcome.

Although I've faced rejection many times and plan to face many more within the next year and a half, I hope that each will only give me more courage and strength the next time around.

And as for my cat, if he ever fulfills his dream I have a feeling there won't be a celebration.

Sororities don't condone hazing

Being the President of Panhellenic Council, the governing board of the nine member sororities on campus, it is my duty to dispel any fallacies directed at our organization. It was brought to our attention as a Council that a pornographic voice mail message has been circulating throughout the dormitory phone system. The seven minute message contained a scene in which three sorority pledges were sexually hazed by members of their chapter. I would like to take this opportunity to inform the undergraduates of the University of our stance on hazing.

All forms of hazing shall be banned. Hazing is defined as any action taken or situation created, intentionally, whether on or off fraternity premises, to produce mental or physical discomfort, embarrassment, harassment or ridicule. There is also a Massachusetts State Law and a University policy against hazing. The point is that the scenario depicted on this tasteless phone message, which circulated to many students, never had and never will occur among the sororities on this campus. Our pledge programs are carefully constructed to stress academics, campus involvement and sisterhood. It is no sorority's policy to demean an individual in any way. We do not appreciate or condone this type of slander and sexual harassment directed at our organization.

MR. QUAYLE, BRETT KIMBERLIN IS SAID TO HAVE BEEN A MODEL PRISONER. IN FACT, HE HAS A SHEAF OF COMMENDATIONS FROM VARIOUS OFFICIALS...
AND YET RIGHT AFTER HIS PRESS CONFERENCE WAS CANCELED AND HE WAS THROWN INTO SOLITARY, THE NATIONAL PAROLE COMMISSION ADDED FIVE YEARS TO HIS SENTENCE. A CONSERVATIVE JUDGE WAS SO OUTRAGED HE STRUCK DOWN THE RULING.
SIR, DO YOU THINK THERE'S ANY CONNECTION BETWEEN KIMBERLIN'S ALLEGATIONS ABOUT YOU AND HOW HE'S BEEN TREATED BY THE PAROLE COMMISSION?
WELL, I'M NOT A LAWYER, BUT...
ACTUALLY, YOU ARE, SIR. NO OFFENSE.

Multicultural Affairs

The travesty of UMass multiculturalism

The struggle for survival in this institution by Puerto Ricans has not been on a bed of roses, ever. Despite Puerto Ricans' transmigration into this nation since the turn of the century, it was not until 1969 that the University of Massachusetts at Amherst admitted its first five Hispanic students.

Upon their admittance to this University the students were confronted by an abundant stockpile of obstacles consisting of a less covert and more vociferous racism, no support services, and no guidance as to how to attain Financial Aid — particularly at a time when such aid was not readily available to certain groups, specifically Hispanics. The justifiable and legal request of these legendary students (take into account that these students emerged from a disadvantaged socio-economic setting), were met by labyrinth-like bureaucratic solutions and often no response whatsoever. An imminent deadline, a shadow of frustration, and a sense of powerlessness threatened to annihilate their one and only opportunity towards upward mobility in the highly structured ladder of this society — a college education. Thus, when the first organization for the primarily Puerto Rican community on this campus was created, by these students, it adopted the proper name of AHORA (meaning NOW).

These five stoic students not only took on the responsibility to recruit other Hispanic students, but as a team ultimately became the responsible entity for the creation of a committee called the Ad Hoc Committee of Hispanic Affairs; an organization that on numerous occasions presented the then provost with an array of recommendations similar to the ones that the Latina/o Students' Committee presented to Chancellor O'Brien on Nov. 7, 1991 (See Collegian Nov. 13 1991).

On Aug. 10, 1974, under the auspices of Educational Program & Outreach, a director was hired for a Hispanic (or shall it be Puerto Rican), support program thanks to the intransigent pressure exerted by the primarily Puerto Rican community as well as that of the Ad Hoc Committee. This support program is what many of you know today as the Billingual Collegiate Program. The director, then and now, Dr. Benjamin Rodriguez, had however, no guidance counselors, functional space, staff, budget, indispensable office/working material, and his contract encompassed no medical insurance, no benefits, and no union recognized by the state or the University. Nonetheless, the generous administration did provide him with a box of folders in one of the corridors of the New Africa House — his office!

With massive support from the community, the Hispanic students occupied the fourth floor of the Goodell building for two days in 1975. A resolution agreement was reached in which the administration committed itself to grant the community the space. Shortly after, the Puerto Rican support program was ordered to vacate the premises until the Goodell building was renovated. However, to this day our program (BCP) continues to patiently await to be relocated back to Goodell despite the fact that since 1979 new space has been allocated to the Everywoman Center, and new buildings have been built for the following: the Placement office, Admissions, the New Student Program, and a sports arena to house a non-existent hockey team. In addition, thousands of dollars were invested in the renovation of a complete section in Whitmore to be occupied by the Financial Aid Office and renovations have systematically been made to change offices at Whitmore for new staff as well as each time a new provost, vice, chancellor or dean comes around! In addition, it is important to denote that paradoxically BCP has been in the list of priorities for space at this University since 1979.

Elliot Monteverde Torres

Currently, there are files with hundreds of proposals, recommendations, complaints, memos, suggestions, official studies/researches and letters that fundamentally outline the struggle that Puerto Ricans and Latino Americans, altogether, have endured here at UMass while we maintain one objective in mind — to uphold and defend our rights, our civil rights! In fact, this is the same documentation that is playing an essential roll in the attempts by Chancellor Richard O'Brien to further the travesty of "Multiculturalism" in this our University.

It is precisely the token support or gestures of generosity on the part of this administration, that today, motivates us to question the granting of statutory conditions. It is, in fact, these ill-gestures of generosity that have sophisticatedly conditioned Puerto Ricans and all traditionally disadvantaged groups in this institution to "stay in their respective places and not to go beyond the established boundaries." However, the showdown can no longer be postponed.

In one way or another the administration has and will undoubtedly continue to hamper our efforts to develop ourselves to full capacity. In point of fact, this is the ideology that gave form and shape to the Cultural Centers. To cut X percent from any educational program such as the one to which you may owe your own presence here at this University (i.e., BCP had a 10 percent cut for Fiscal Year 1991), is by all means, deliberately carrying out the sabotage of the existing substandard educational programs as well as your inalienable rights to enhance your future.

The closing of a Cultural Center, as insignificant as it may seem to some of you, encircles more than our collective attitude of intolerance and unacceptance towards this University's racist behavior. It is also a means in which to reiterate to the Chancellor and the administration that our dignity is inviolable, our convictions unbending, our SOLIDARITY indivisible and our commitment to the betterment of future generations — through a process that accentuates education in all of its ramifications — is above all, intransigent!

In virtue of the preceding comments I would like to mention in passing other reasons propelling this action:

- The immediate need to restructure the core curriculum to emphasize our distinct concerns, achievements, and history.
- The necessity of an introduction of an academic program not only in Latin American but also in Puerto Rican Studies.
- An aggressive program that recruits in the following order: Latina/o faculty, administrators and, students in distinct geographical areas within the state.
- That BCP's efforts in outreach programs for schools in the Puerto Rican communities of Holyoke, Springfield and Eastern Mass. are financially crippled by the administration.
- Ultimately, our utmost recalcitrant commitment not to remain on our knees under the discriminatory governing yoke of Chancellor Richard O'Brien and his administration!

Mi gente, in time, when the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has been unveiled and stripped of its mask of oppression, Puerto Ricans and all traditionally marginalized, disadvantaged and under-represented ethnic groups will have much to celebrate. The University has an opportunity now to set sail towards the 21th Century through submission of a proposal delineating actions and procedures to the 17 demands that New World Theater and the Latino/a & Asian Students' Committees presented to the Chancellor O'Brien on Nov. 7, 1991.

In conclusion, the possibilities do exist for improving the general socio-educational situation here at Umass and the opportunities should not be missed. It is quite obvious that no one will retrogress as result of the implementation of the Asian & Latino/a Students' Committees' and New World Theater's demands. Indeed, everyone, regardless of ethnicity, will benefit from such a program. The faster the program is translated into the language of practical action, the more secure life on our campus will be.

For now, may the struggle for equality at this University, not accept compromise or defeat but. . . VICTORY! Viva GEO!

Panel discusses role of law, education for Indians

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

Since the voyage of Columbus, where he enslaved the Lucayan people of the the Bahamas to the Oka confrontation of 1990, serious problems and obstacles have emerged from outside and within the Native nations scattered across North and South America. Last Thursday night in the Campus Center a panel of four discussed some of these obstacles namely the law, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, education, and stereotyping.

"In North America the Law has taken the place of the Cavalry as far as Indians are concerned — people cannot escape the movie image," said Lou Gurwitz, the guest speaker and 1968 graduate from UMass.

Gurwitz along with Peter Dericco, of the Legal studies department, Louis Gwynn, Native American recruiter for the University and Fred Tillis, author of the Tillis report and the associate Vice Chancellor, spoke at an open meeting to a crowd of six.

Says Gurwitz "The biggest enemy that the Indian people have is the Hollywood imagery. Everyone wants to think that Indians are standing on a hill with smoke in the background saying 'ugh.'".

Charging that "Hollyweird" is responsible for the perpetuation of negative stereotyping, Gwynn reflected upon personal encounters with stereotype images.

Said Gwynn, "Did you know that 'Hollyweird' says that real Indians have braids," for which he countered "Who is to say what an Indian person looks like?" He used as an example the imagery behind Thanksgiving as another form of perpetuating a negative stereotype saying "With each Thanksgiving, another generation hears the same thanking God for it."

In 1776 the first Indian agent was commissioned by George Washington for the purpose of securing Indian allies. After the Revolutionary War, Native American Education was under the control of the war department until 1919.

In 1924, said Gurwitz, the U.S. Government said "All you Indians are Now Americans." And to control them, boarding schools, missionaries and the law became the tools.

"The effect of education is the way Indian people are controlled in North America," said Gurwitz.

For those native Americans forced attend boarding schools hundreds of miles from home indoctrination occurred.

Said Gwynn, "They got the Indian beaten out of them, and Elders who lived through this can no longer take a stand against the Great White father, or the BIA — they say 'be quiet, you're wrong, they will get you.'" These Elders fell victim to the Boarding schools and that propaganda."

"The Bureau of Indian Affairs presently in Washington," said Gurwitz, "is full of well educated Indians who don't do a damn thing except receive a paycheck and go to Redskin games. And when they do decide policy they answer only to themselves."

Said Gwynn the biggest problem with this reality is that people say tell me the truth, but they really don't want to hear the truth.

Charging the U.S. government with recognizing puppet governments, Gurwitz said "Tribal government is a joke. By in large there are a few exceptions. The biggest families usually get the jobs and nothing goes on that the BIA doesn't approve of whether it be land claims or uranium mining." To emphasize the lack of power Native Americans have over themselves Gurwitz compared the BIA to a high school where students reach an accord and decide upon an issue and take it to the principle who then laughs and sends them back to class. "Indian people have a right to self Government," he added angrilly.

Drawing the picture closer to home at the University level, Gwynn praised the University for giving Natives a strong voice and listening to demands but emphasized that further steps were needed.

"Two years ago we addressed the University with steps we felt needed to be taken, and they gave us a maybe. Now Cultural Centers are closing and people have to make a decision on where they stand," he said.

Said Tillis, education is " a game of inches," and that students "needed to know that the system was not in their favor." He added "In America, the people who don't have still don't have and the people who have, have more."

Gurwitz ended the discussion saying that most Americans were not aware of the actions of their Government and the system using as an example U.S. foreign policy.

"If the American people could see what they are supporting in the Middle East, they could never go to sleep from all of the nightmares."

Grogs could really help Hugh Millen break some of his bad habits, namely standing still awaiting a sack. Get rid of the ball, run, do something Hugh or you'll always be a second-rate QB.

• The early speculation here is that Coach John Calipari will garner Best Dressed College Coach honors. The guy has a tie collection that rivals Bill Cosby's sweater ensemble.

Speaking of ties, there seems to be a competition commencing among some of the UMass hoop media and various regulars. I took the early lead Friday night for the title of "Cravat King" (hey, it's my contest) but the Lipton Tea guy came through with a slick Bill Blass special. "Bore-us" Morris wore a dirty dish rag that was useful for one thing, wiping sweat off the floor. Stay tuned, the race is sure to heat up after the holidays.

• Lou Roe is going to be something special and that's a guarantee. "Sweet" Lou can certainly clean the glass and he flat-out hustles. Dickie V is going to love him.

• Is it too early for me to complain about the lack of a playoff system for Division I-A college football? There's got to be a way for the National Champion to be decided on the field and not by ballot. We're heading for two undefeated teams in Miami and Washington but the bowl match-ups won't create a head-to-head, winner-take-all game for the upteenth time. Ever hear of March Madness? How about a January Jubilee?

• Syracuse South, aka the Miami Heat, are sitting atop the Atlantic Division along with the Celts. As my good friend Bob Dylan once said, "The times they are a changin'."

By the way, the Celts turned off the Microwave, but former Pitt star Jerome Lane is a possibility. With all the Celts' injuries, it can't hurt to bring in a solid rebounder.

• I hate to be a pessimist but if UMass is going to shoot fouls shots like they did against Keene State (19 of 32), they're going to be in trouble facing the Kentucky's and Oklahoma's of the world. Just ask Jim Boeheim at Syracuse.

• Boston College had images of the Miracle in Miami last Saturday in Chestnut Hill, but no dice. Regardless, Tom Coughlin's boys in maroon have a bright future.

• Mario Cuomo's decision-making process is about as quick as that of Raymond Berry and Rod Rust, the major difference is that Cuomo has a personality.

• Baseball trades are starting to roll and it's not a stretch to imagine the Red Sox pulling the trigger on some blockbuster deal. You get the feeling Mike Greenwell might be racing to another team before Christmas.

• I think I'm addicted to saying, "Tony Barbeeee for threeee," and Mike Patrick's "Goood."

• How do you like our new contributor to the sports page, Gayle "I'll be at Sports Illustrated before too" Long?

• Keep your stuffing in bounds and your eyes on the turkey.

Minutemen face Santa Clara in Alaskan Shootout

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts basketball coach John Calipari grins after saying his team has no chance of winning the Great Alaskan Shootout this weekend in Anchorage, Alaska.

Meaning, two things. First, he does think his team has a shot at winning the tournament. Second, he's only saying what is "politically correct," so there is no added pressure on his team.

University of Massachusetts shooting guard Jim McCoy should heat up the Alaskan tundra this weekend as the Minutemen face Santa Clara in the first round of the Great Alaskan Shootout.

"We're one of the top three teams in the tournament," Calipari said. "We're right behind New Orleans and Oregon State."

Coincidentally, or not so coincidentally, the Minutemen have a chance of meeting both teams. UMass faces Santa Clara in the first round (Friday at midnight EST) and the winner takes on the Oregon State-Alaska Anchorage winner in the semifinals. Barring an unforeseen event, Division I Oregon State will defeat Division II Alaska-Anchorage.

Santa Clara (0-1 on the season, a 79-68 loss at Fresno State) returns all five starters, including Ron Reis. Reis, a 7-1 wide- body possesses great touch for his size. Against Fresno State, the senior had 10 points and 10 rebounds. His career field goal percentage is .606.

"It's going to be competitive," said UMass center Harper Williams, who has the dubious assignment of bumping frames with the 285-pound Reis. "It'll give us some stiff competition."

Santa Clara's leading scorer after one game is Rhea Taylor, who netted 16 points and pulled down eight rebounds. Taylor was an All-West Coast Conference pick last year, averaging 19 points and 6.5 rebounds per game. He is a threat to hit the 3-point shot, as he connected on 2-of-5 in the opening game.

"I don't know what to say," said UMass assistant coach James "Bruiser" Flint. "We've got some big games coming up."

The other four teams in the eight-team field includes Eastern Michigan, Coastal Carolina, New Orleans and Idaho.

"We're excited about the tournament but not the long trip," said UMass guard Anton Brown.

In their two games, the Minutemen have looked impressive to say the least. In fact, invincible might be a better word. UMass is 2-0 and currently ranked 34th by the Associated Press after two routs, 94-59 over Siena and 94-45 over Division II Keene State.

"The most important thing about the ranking is to improve on it and be ranked around 34th at the end of the season," Flint said.

UMass' all-time leading scorer Jim McCoy has not found his shooting touch yet. He is 3-19 from the floor thus far and has scored just 12 points. McCoy says he's not worried about the slump and vows to turn it around in Alaska.

Minuteman Minute: The finals of the Great Alaskan Shootout will be televised at midnight, Monday on ESPN.

Time to de-feather the sports turkey as Arlo Guthrie sings one of the all-time greatest holiday songs, "Alice's Restaurant."

• The electricity in the Cage last Friday night/Saturday morning was something to behold, but someone's got to explain why the band was playing CBS's hoop theme song when the game was on ESPN.

Best sign of the night was "Every Siena Player's Nightmare," followed closely by the informed fan who printed "Donta Bright," on a placard as a plea for the highly touted high school recruit.

• Sure Buffalo will be in the playoffs while the Pats are cleaning out their lockers, but Sunday's win will do more in the long run for Coach Mac's crew than any win in the past three years. By the way, give Coach Mac the Coach of the Year award now and throw in a Nobel prize, too.

The Pats defense is really looking good and a lot of it has to do with the play of Vincent "The Undertaker" Brown. He's taking a page from Andre Tippet's vintage collection of good sticks and hard hits.

Women's hoop at Cornell Tournament

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team, having already won more games in its first weekend this season than it did all of last season, travel to Ithaca, N.Y. tomorrow for the Cornell Sheraton Tournament.

Joining the Minutewomen in the Thanksgiving weekend tournament will be the Cornell Big Red, the Loyola Lady Greyhounds, and Division II UNC-Greensboro Spartans. It is the first opportunity for UMass to play any of the schools.

Last weekend the Minutewomen beat St. Francis 44-40, and lost to Pittsburg 65-56 in the St. Francis Red Flash Classic.

"When they play their role," said UMass coach Joanie O'Brien, "and do the things that they're physically capable of doing, they feel like they can be a pretty good team."

After the first two games Trish Riley leads UMass in scoring with 13.5 points per game. Kim Krisrofik leads with eight rebounds per contest.

Cornell, a 5-21 team a year ago, will provide the opposition in UMass' first game, at 6 p.m. Friday night. The Big Red return two starters from a team that finished 3-11 in the Ivy League, good for seventh place. The top returners include senior guard Angie Rodriguez, who scored over seven points per game, and junior center Cheryl Ames, who averaged 5.5 points and five rebounds per game.

Friday's second game has Loyola playing UNC-Greensboro. Loyola returns all five starters from from a 2-24 (1-16 in the Metro Atlantic Conference) team. They are led by senior forward Jennifer Young's 10 points and four rebounds per game, and senior center Justine Shay's nine points and seven rebound average.

Spartans head coach Lynne Agee, who has an impressive 220-62 in her 10 years at Greensboro, returns two starters from their 21-9 squad. Top returners include senior guard Gail White, whose 12.8 points and five rebounds per game are team highs, and senior forward Julie Bright and her 10.2 points and 4.6 rebounds.

O'Brien said her troops are "just now starting to realize what it is that each individual player does the best. That's going to be our [the coaches'] job for the rest of the season; to make sure they continue to do that, and that they keep on improving other areas of the games."

Minutemen swimming dominates BC, Maine

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Correspondent

The men's swimming team began its campaign to defend its New England title for the sixth consecutive year by scoring impressive victories over Boston College and Maine last weekend.

Coach Russ Yarworth said the two wins were the result of a complete team effort.

"I was pleasantly surprised with the overall performance of the team," Yarworth said. "It was nice to see them come out and swim as aggressively as they did. The freshmen have big shoes to fill, but they responded well to the pressure."

Although the Minutemen ended up defeating Boston College by a hefty margin in total points scored, 137-104, the meet did not turn into a rout right away, as the Eagles led 39-35 after the fourth event. However, this was never a real cause for concern.

"The kids didn't panic," Yarworth said. "We knew we had our strength coming up and we swam tough. BC was surprised by the strength of our freshmen, but I didn't know that we had it wrapped up until we won the fifth event."

The critical fifth event was the 200 individual medley, in which the Minutemen took four of eight places, with Jay Peluso finishing first (2:00.10), Tim Milbert taking second (2:01.84), Adam Reich placing fourth (2:03.33), and Mark Dewan taking the eighth spot (2:11.28).

From there, UMass proceeded to outscore the Eagles in five of the next eight events to ensure the victory.

Other standout performers were: Scott Reed, who finished second in the 1000-yard freestyle (10:07), second in the 500 freestyle (4:55.52), and swam a 48.85 leg in the 400 freestyle relay.

Jeff Wicklund finished third in the 200 freestyle (1:48.07), third in the 500 freestyle (4:56.20), and swam a 48.02 in the 400 freestyle relay.

Marc LeFrance took fifth in the 1000 freestyle (10:30.35), first in the 200 butterfly (2:01.52), and swam a 52.84 in the 400 freestyle relay.

Adam Reich took fourth in the 200 individual medley (2:03.33), fourth in the 100 freestyle (49.90), and swam a 48.29 in the 400 medley relay.

With one win under their belts, the Minutemen were more than ready to take on the University of Maine.

"We had a lot of confidence being 1-0, and we hammered them from the outset," Yarworth said. "Overall, I was pleased with the maturity that the team displayed. We performed well from top to bottom."

Unlike the Boston College meet, this one was never in question. UMass dominated Maine in nearly every event, winning by a final score of 147-94.

With these two wins in hand, Yarworth plans to begin preparation for the New England meet earlier this season instead of waiting until later in the year. The preparation is a process called "rest and shave" where his men shave off their body hair and rest more before they build up the training routine again.

The purpose of this procedure is to see who will react best to the new sensitivity to the water brought about by the loss of hair. Judging by the results of this process, Yarworth plans to decide which 18 of his 30 swimmers will compete in the New England Championships this February.

Schools fail under economic crisis

Recession spells trouble for Holyoke

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

HOLYOKE, Mass. — In something of a case study in what ails American communities, Holyoke is watching its schools fail, and neither the governor, the mayor nor the voters are ready to dig into their pockets to help.

Severe economic problems are faulted, but some say racism is also to blame. The town's aging population, a school officials said, is reluctant to fork out because two-thirds of the children at Holyoke's schools are Hispanic.

Twice this year, voters rejected proposed overrides of the state's tax-cap law, forcing layoffs of 220 teachers — a third of the staff — and elimination of libraries,, and foreign language and art classes.

Economic crises are not new to this old mill town of 44,000, which once made textiles for much of the country. Students have marched on City Hall in protest. A school committee member vowed to hold classes until money runs out, than to close the doors.

And, with a flood of Hispanic newcomers accounting for a third of the population, the schools' troubles have raised the specter of racism.

"When people say it has nothing to do with racism, I say, 'Oh, come on.' It sounds like a duck, it looks like a duck let's call it a duck," said Betty Medina Lichtenstein, the lone Hispanic on the School Committee.

Anti-Hispanic prejudice, she said, is at the root of much opposition to higher taxes for education in Holyoke, which lies northwest of Springfield.

Mayor William A. Hamilton vehemently rejects talks of anti-Hispanic backlash. He also discounts suggestions that voters, who approved a tax hike for garbage pickup, give more priority to trash than children.

Residents are troubled by low test scores, and "the people do not believe the money is being spent effectively," he said.

Hamilton said he will keep a close eye on school spending and consider more layoffs

...the people do not believe the money is being spent effectively...
–Mayor Hamilton

of janitors and other ancillary workers, if necessary. But he said the schools, with about 7,500 students, may not improve until the economy revives.

Opponents of the overrides deny ethnic bias, though they have complained of the school administration's emphasis on bilingual education.

"There's no reason why children who have an education in English in Puerto Rico should come here and not speak English," said Geraldine Barrett, a homeowner who works two jobs and voted against the overrrides.

"English is the international language. Business in in English. So it's hurting these children in the long run," she said.

Student senate sponsoring registration drive this week

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate is sponsoring a voter registration drive this week in an effort to mobilize students for the February race to fill the state representative's seat vacated by State Sen. Stanley Rosenberg, according to the chairperson of the SGA budget committee.

Sen. Rob Witherell (Moore), chairperson, said a voter registration drive will be held on Dec. 3 through Dec. 5 from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. in front of the Campus Center Munchy store.

Witherell said most University of Massachusetts students are of legal age to be registered.

What is different about this drive, according to Patterson Sen. Matt Pavesi, is that Amherst town officials are helping the University community by deputizing students as town officials.

Deputized students are legally allowed to register students to vote in Amherst or their hometowns.

"Anyone can be deputized — all they have to do is talk to me first or the town clerk," said Pavesi, chairperson of the Senate's Public Policy Committee. "One would have to be registered in Amherst to be deputized, because they would actually be working for the town."

"Anyone who is going to be 18 years old before the Feb. 18 primary election for state representative can register," said Witherell.

"People who register to vote in December will be able to vote in the next election. People who moved since they last registered to vote in Amherst and didn't tell the town might be on a voter suspended list," he said.

Witherell said students could come to the voter registrar's table and fill out a change of address form.

Witherell said many students may not register because they believe their votes make no difference, but he believes the state representative race between Democrats Terry Franklin, Jon Hite, Norman Page and Ellen Story and Republican Paul McGonnigal may be decided by student votes.

"[This race] is very important for students, because if students get out in a block, they'll make a big difference — it's going to be a very tight election," Witherell said. "This is very important for the University in the future, because we're in a recession, and there are rumors of a $1.6 billion state shortfall.

"So, we're going to need a state representative fighting for students who is specifically able to do something for students and the community as a whole," Witherell said.

Pavesi urged students to register as quickly as possible.

"The deadline for the race is mid-January," Pavesi said. "We'll all be home then, so we're urging as many students to register in December as possible."

Pavesi said the importance of the February election to the campus cannot be under-emphasized.

"Basically, in the race for state representative, it's important that students make a difference because the representative will fight for this University," he said. "It's important that the state representative has students' backing, because then we can pressure him or her to fight for us."

Witherell said the most recent "get out the vote" drive — held last spring to fill the First Congressional District seat vacated by the death of Silvio Conte — was successful, and he hopes this effort will also be worthwhile.

"Once it gets started, people start paying more attention to students," he said. "The power is in the hands of the students. Voting is power, and it's their right to do it."

Altantis shuttle has safe landing at Edwards AFB

By LEE SIEGEL
Associated Press

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — Space shuttle Atlantis sailed through an overcast desert sky and returned home with six astronauts yesterday, ending a military mission cut short by a failed navigational unit.

Atlantis landed on the dry lakebed at 2:35 p.m. The ship's arrival was heralded by its customary twin sonic booms.

"Welcome home Atlantis and congratulations on a great flight," Mission Control's Bob Cabana told shuttle commander Frederick Gregory after the orbiter rolled to a stop.

Atlantis circled the world 109 times and logger 2.9 million miles during the journey, which began a week ago. The shuttle successfully deployed a $300 million satellite a week ago to provide early warning of enemy missile attacks, space launches and nuclear explosions.

The astronauts were "all in excellent health," after their flight and planned to stay in California overnight before returning home to Houston today, said Steve Nagel, acting chief of NASA's astronaut office.

The shuttle's condition "looks very very good — very few dings on the tiles" that protect it from the heat of re-entry, he added.

Because of the prospect of high winds, NASA decided to skip the shuttle's first landing opportunity, which was one and a half hours, or one orbit, earlier than the actual touchdown. "AS it turned out, they could have landed on the first opportunity," Nagel said.

NASA shorted the mission by three days after a navigational unit failed Saturday. Nagel said the spaceship's two other guidance units worked "just fine" during re-entry and the crew was never in any danger.

Flight rules stipulate that a shuttle return as soon as possible to Edwards, rather than one of the other landing sites, when a navigational unit fails.

Ex UMass prof, 78, passes away in California

Byron Earle Colby, professor emeritus of veterinary and animal science at the University of Massachusetts, died at his home in Fallbrook, Calif. at age 78.

Colby taught at the University for 31 years before his retirement in 1978.

A native of Helena, Mont., Colby graduated from New Hampshire's Kimball Union Academy in 1932. He received a degree in animal husbandry from the University of New Hampshire in 1936. He later received a master's degree from Michigan State University.

Colby worked for 11 years as a 4-H Club county agent before joining the UMass faculty. He served for 28 years as editor of "Beef and Sheep Highlights and Pointers for Pork Profits."

He is survived by his wife, Esther (Norris); sons Alan of Fairfield, Iowa, and Bruce of Carlsbad, Calif.; sister Bertha Cameron of Barrington, R.I.; and two grandsons.

A memorial service for Colby is planned in South Hadley.

Cuts reach Univ. Bridgeport

31 programs slated for elimination

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. (AP) — The University of Bridgeport, struggling to keep its doors open, will eliminate roughly one-third of its degree programs, school officials announced Tuesday.

The announcement comes one day after the university's law school decided to secede.

Interim president Edwin G. Eigel told students and faculty members that 21 undergraduate and 10 graduate degree programs will be eliminated after the spring 1992 semester.

The school has a total of 90 graduate and undergraduate programs.

Programs to be cut include English, mathematics, history, art, biology, political science, sociology and others, mostly liberal arts.

Students would still be able to take courses in the subjects cut, but not advanced courses needed to obtain a degree in those fields.

Legislature mulls death penalty

By JOHN DIAMOND
Associated Press

BOSTON — For the first time in a decade, the political ingredients are in place for Massachusetts to enact a death penalty law.

Prodded by its former-prosecutor governor and by an electorate repulsed by several especially gruesome killings, most recently that of a 13-year-old girl by her next door neighbor, the state Legislature will likely begin work on the proposal in January.

Lawmakers predicted Gov. William F. Weld would be able to make good on one of his key campaign promises.

"I think the votes are there in both branches to pass the bill," said Senate Minority Leader David Locke, R-Wellesley. "The chances of it being approved are very good — better now than they have been for very many years."

Even Sen. William Keating, D-Sharon, Senate vice chairman of the Legislature's Criminal Justice Committee and an opponent of capital punishment, said chances for passage are good.

"It's likely to happen next year," he said.

The end of the eight-year reign of anti-death penalty Gov. Michael S. Dukakis with the election of Weld marked a turning point in the state where the death penalty was last carried out in 1947.

Five days after Weld proposed his death penalty bill

It took Galileo 16 years to master the universe.
You have one night.

It seems unfair. The genius had all that time. While you have a few short hours to learn your sun spots from your satellites before the dreaded astronomy exam.

On the other hand, Vivarin gives you the definite advantage. It helps keep you awake and mentally alert for hours. Safely and conveniently. So even when the subject matter's dull, your mind will stay razor sharp.

If Galileo had used Vivarin, maybe he could have mastered the solar system faster, too.

Not even toy stores are safe from the profit motive

When I was searching for a summer job a year and a half ago, I wasn't too sure what I wanted to do. I only knew what I didn't want to do.

I didn't want to push carts in a parking lot or bag bread and soda at the local Price Chopper. It just wasn't an option.

I didn't want to work around food at all. Flipping burgers would tell me more about fast food than I cared to consider, and waitressing tables required too much smiling.

I didn't want to work at the mall. The glittering mirrors, the crowds of people, all those stores pressed anonymously together. . . I just didn't like them.

After a few weeks of careful consideration, I figured out where I wanted to work. A toy store.

I pictured a corner store, dusty windows facing dirty streets. A rickety, peeling door squeaks opens slowly, a chiming bell and the smell of sawdust. Soft footsteps cross the wooden-planked floor to the shelves: hundreds of painted, hand-carved toys crowded together. Dolls, games, rocking horses, music boxes and carousels. . . An elderly man comes out of the back room into the dim light, searching the pockets of his faded green cardigan for his spectacles. . .

I don't think shops like that exist anymore. Well, I couldn't find one within commuting distance. Discouraged but not defeated, I decided to look for the next best thing.

The next best thing was at the mall. "That's okay," I rationalized, "it's still a toy store." I put in an application and was hired within a week.

I showed up for work in my new clothes — jeans and Chucks were against the dress code. The manager took me to the back room and handed me a small book detailing the rules and regulations I was expected to follow. No problem. Half an hour later, I was behind the register feeling dumb. Really dumb.

There I stood, surrounded by obscenely bright colors, New Kids on the Block bubble gum, Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle pencils, and Boogers candy. A grinning name tag was pinned to my shoulder, and the music of M.C. Hammer and Paula Abdul entertained a counter of gaudy dancing flowers. A Nintendo advertisement played repeatedly above me, and I was ringing up over forty dollars worth of Barbie dolls and accessories.

With the manager lurking behind me, I smiled cheerily at each new customer and said, "Hi! Welcome to [trademark]! What can I help you find today?" After three hours of repeating the same line, I switched to my own greeting: "Hi! how are you is there anything I can help you with?" The manager hissed, "That's not what you're supposed to say. And be perkier."

I sighed to myself and decided I could lose a little dignity for the sake of some money. However, a few months later after I said, "Thank you for shopping [that trademark again]. Please come again" for the zillionth time, I began to have questions about my employer.

The corporation didn't seem to care that the toys were junk. Over-priced, low-quality, boring and uncreative. They didn't seem to care that most of these toys ended up in the bottom of a closet a few weeks after they were brought home.

The company's national headquarters were a scant fifteen minutes from the store in which I was working. The president and other VIPs stopped in regularly to check on sales and figure out new, more effective ways to push merchandise. They sometimes talked to the plebeian sales associates like myself, asking what we thought was selling best, how the new storefront design was working, was that sign out front luring more people in to the store, did we have any suggestions about how a slow-selling toy could be more enticingly displayed.

Just once, once, I would have liked one of them to ask me if the customers liked the toys being sold. I suppose the answer could be found by asking what was selling well, but the point is not the same. The store was always focused on customer service, but only to maximize profit.

I stayed there through last summer. When I thought about working over Christmas break, I thought about working elsewhere. Although Bush says there isn't a recession, employment opportunities are rare. I'll be back in the toy store December 22. The latest corporation press release says they're hoping to top a record $1 billion in sales this year. Enjoy. . .

Some trash is just trash

After working for UMass' Residential Recycling Program for a year, I had thought that I'd seen and heard it all. You would not believe what some people think they can recycle. It really makes you wonder after a while. Do people really believe that somehow we can take an old pizza and make it into something else, or what about all those used condoms? I don't even want to think about what people expect us to do with those. But just this month, the students of UMass have come up with a new twist on recycling: tampon applicators.

Jamie D. Weeks

Just about everything that students and employees recycle at the University makes its way to the Materials Recovery Facility (MRF) in Springfield. Once at the MRF, the load of recyclables is examined for contamination. After it passes the initial inspection, the load is dumped onto big conveyor belts where it is separated by hand. Yes indeed, there are people who pick through your garbage for a living. Not a glamorous job, but it pays the bills.

The last load that went to the MRF from UMass passed the initial exam. Once the hand sorting was well underway, however, things weren't looking so hot. The guys doing the sorting got off the line to call UMass and complain about the amazing number of tampon applicators, both the cardboard and the plastic variety, that they were picking out of our load.

As you can imagine, the men picking these things off the line by hand were more than a little irritated. Let's be blunt; it's disgusting. Try to imagine how you would feel if you had to pick up hundreds of used tampon applicators. Well, the guys at the MRF felt the same way. They yelled and screamed, and told UMass that the next load of recyclables was going to be examined VERY closely.

Not to wax philosophical or anything, but who on earth is saving those things!? Carrying a soda can or a newspaper around in your backpack is one thing, but I don't know about this. While it's good to know that so many women at UMass are into recycling, I think this could easily be classified as ridiculous. Thanks but no thanks; honest.

I can almost understand why someone might think that tampon applicators are recyclable. Although I'd like to point out that the Residential Recycling Program has repeatedly posted that the only kind of cardboard we take is the corrugated type or pizza boxes. And there are lots of big, brightly colored signs hanging all over campus that state that the only kind of plastic we want is soda bottles and milk jugs. Somehow, I just don't see the resemblance. Sorry to disappoint everyone.

In all seriousness, tampon applicators in the recycling barrels are a bona fide health hazard, as are condoms and other such fun things. It's bad enough that the recycling areas are attracting insects because people refuse to wash their cans and bottles. There is no reason to have our recycling collection areas turn into a breeding ground for disease.

If you thought tampon applicators (and condoms) were recyclable, you were mistaken. If you were just dumping your trash in the recycling barrels, don't. There are receptacles provided for that purpose. Tampon applicators shouldn't even be in the regular trash. All you women out there have seen those little white boxes in the bathrooms; our suggestion in that you utilize them.

If you have doubts about what you can recycle, read the signs over the barrels, refer to that little green book you got when you moved in, or call us (5-1153). We don't mind. Respect yourself as well as the people living around you (and don't forget the guys at the MRF!). Please, think before you toss!

HOW DO YOU THINK PRESIDENT BUSH IS DOING?
TERRIBLE!
WHY?
HE HAS NO DOMESTIC AGENDA.
SIX MONTHS AGO YOU GAVE HIM THE HIGHEST APPROVAL RATING IN HISTORY. HE HAD NO DOMESTIC AGENDA THEN EITHER.
BUT NOW IT'S NOT WORKING.
SO YOU WOULD PREFER AN UNNAMED DEMOCRAT?
YES, BUT ACTUAL DEMOCRATS ARE ANOTHER MATTER.

Yet another note from ed/op

The world is waiting for your opinion. Write a letter to the editor and tell 'em what you think.

Letters should be typed, double spaced and less than fifty lines in length. You must sign your letter and include your address and phone number. Cartoons are fun, too — draw them with flair pen on 8 1/2 by 11 paper.

Send your stuff or stop by the* Collegian, *113 Campus Center Basement. Go on. We're looking forward to it.

Don't assume she wants to have sex; ask her first

Men, imagine this scenario: you are sitting in a room with someone who you are attracted to. The door is closed, and there is music playing. The two of you are talking. Somewhere along the line, you start to kiss. The kiss becomes more intense, and you start to feel around over each other's clothes. Eventually, you are both lacking certain articles of clothing. She wants to have sex, right? She's getting into it, and breathing hard, so she must want to have sex, right?

Emily Woller

If you assume that sex is the next step — the inevitable one — you are assuming too much. If you proceed to that "next step" without knowing that she wants you to, you may be guilty of date rape.

I realize that we've all been beaten over the head with flyers regarding date rape. Some of these flyers list the statistics of date rape, etc. I realize that people nod their heads and say, "yeah, yeah," and pass them on their way through the halls, or that other people read them while on the toilet — but the honest truth is that date rape happens more often than you can imagine. Date rape breeds rampantly on college campuses.

So, how do you know if she wants to have sex or not? Honey, let me tell you — you must ask her. There is nothing unromantic about verifying intentions, especially when you consider the romance level of rape. If she says "no," take her word for it. Even if you do not plan on ever seeing this girl again (say you meet at a party one night), take her word for it. You might find sex more gratifying if it is between two consenting individuals.

Although I started this with a focus on males (as they are often the ones with the bulk of physical strength), I do not hold them solely responsible. That would not be fair.

It is also (to a great extent) within a woman's control over what takes place in an intimate situation.

Women: clarify in your mind your intentions. Decide how far you want things to go, and then be resolute in your convictions. In other words, stick with your original instinct, and do not let him push you. Also, you must tell him how you feel, point blank. If he still tries to sway you against your will, even after you voice your preference, do not hesitate to make a scene or to get out of that room — fast.

So men, women: the message I lay before you is to think first, then communicate. (This is also a neat way to avoid "blueballs.") You may discover that you actually want to have sex!

Now children, play nice — and use a condom.

calling for lethal injections, a Plymouth County jury on Nov. 23 convicted Henry L. Meinholz Jr. or the suffocation murder of his neighbor, teen-ager Melissa Benoit.

Meinholz heightened the furor when, in trying to establish his innocence by reason of insanity, he testified with graphic detail about his crime.

"It was certainly a murder committee with extreme atrocity and cruelty," said Weld, a former U.S. attorney. He said it was "hard to imagine a more appropriate case," for the death penalty.

It was the latest in a series of crimes that had shocked and angered Massachusetts residents, including the 1989 killing of Darlene "Tiffany" Moore, an 11-year-old who was an innocent bystander to a drug-related shooting in Boston; the 1987 murder of a mother and the drownings of her tow children in Townsend by Danny LaPlante; a 1988 assault on a family by a furloughed prisoner, Willie Horton, made an issue in the 1988 presidential campaign; and the sensational 1989 murder of Carol Stuart.

"People sense the system doesn't work and in some cases they're right," said state Rep. James Brett, D-Boston, House chairman of the Criminal Justice Committee.

Brett has voted against past death penalty proposals but says he's keeping an open mind on the Weld bill.

The judge in the Meinholz case said he was opposed to the death penalty, but wished he could invoke it in sentencing Meinholz to life in prison without parole. Gubernatorial candidate Francis X. Bellotti, former defense attorney who had doubts about the racial fairness of capital punishment, said he'd be willing to pull the switch on Stuart's killer.

Among others who have changed their opinions are Democratic presidential candidate Paul Tsongas, who says he now supports capital punishment in certain cases. U.S. Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy II, D-Mass., is another death penalty supporter.

State Sen. Paul Harold, D-Quincy, a leading death penalty opponent, said the Stuart case was an argument against the death penalty.

Inspiring author signs

By EMILY MARINO
Collegian Correspondent

Last week, Northampton's Globe Bookshop hosted internationally renown children's storybook writer and illustrator, Eric Carle. Carle is winding down a fourteen-day, thirteen-city tour to promote his two latest books, Polar Bear, Polar Bear, What Do You Hear? and Dragons Dragons and Other Creatures That Never Were.

Carle's new books add to his collection of over three-dozen works, which includes such classics as The Very Busy Spider, Brown Bear What Do You See? and his most famous book, The Very Hungry Caterpillar, of which seven million copies have been sold internationally.

In addition to magnificently colorful drawings of lively characters and entertaining stories, Carle's books provide children with various learning opportunities.

Carle said within each book there were many layers of the story, and that his goal was to let each child select his/her own level and draw from it. Carle said his books hint at things that can become the basis for discussion among parents, peers, and teachers.

He said he feels his favorite of his books, Do You Want to be My Friend? is not only his best work graphically, but it stresses the importance of friendship, love, and companionship, all of which he believes are important to both children and adults.

Carle also said many of the younger children benefit from learning page turning skills, or simply enjoy the colorful graphics.

He said parents should not push their children to learn at a specific rate, and that whichever aspects of his work inspire children to think, that catch their interest, or give them some form of pleasure contribute to a child's development.

He said this attitude toward learning is a reaction to the strict education that he received as a child.

Carle was born in Syracuse, New York, and moved to Germany with his parents when he was young. After graduating from the Academy of Applied Arts in Stuttgart, Carle returned to the United States and worked as a graphic designer for the New York Times.

After working in advertising for a private company, Carle's friend, author Bill Martin, asked him to illustrate Brown Bear, Brown Bear What do You See? which turned Carle onto writing and illustrating his own books.

A special edition of Brown Bear, Brown Bear What Do You See? which celebrates 25 years of writing and illustrating since the original publication, will be available in bookstores this spring.

Presently, Carle lives in Northampton, and continues to entertain people of all ages, from all over the world with his enchanting stories.

Eastside Grill is no myth

By PAUL DEGEORGES
Collegian Staff

Sometimes a restaurant will get a reputation for something and if enough people start to think it's true, it becomes mighty difficult to shed that image.

For some reason, popular legend has it that The Eastside Grill, located on Strong Avenue in Northampton (down by Pearl Street Nightclub), is a high-priced, glamorous dining establishment. Surpirise, kids! The Grill is not that haute-stuffy-pompous maison de cuisine which it's reputation has made it infamous for being: hey, they don't even take reservations.

Dining Out

It's possible that some of its clientele have spread the word about its food and perhaps that's how the whole rumor got spread. Their gastronomical offerings are superb, but just because a restaurant offers up magnificent meals doesn't necessarily entail an ornately elegant starched clientele — and the prices that accompany such types of restaurants.

So, having established the fact that you can, as a fiscally unstable college student, afford a meal at the Eastside grill, it should be of interest that you also needn't own a tux to attend. The atmosphere is relaxed and casual, but still retains an air of classiness. That's probably because it seems to draw a relatively thirty-somethingish crowd looking for a quality night out with no strings of formality attached.

The Eastside Grill has a huge menu and lives up to its self appointed classification. They grill everything you would expect to be able to get — chicken, beef, lamb and seafood. There are a few vegetarian offerings but carnivores will probably have to leave their strictly-soy-bean buddies at home for this evening out.

Creative appetizers like Lobster Toasts, Artichoke and Red Pepper Salad and Roasted Garlic Bulb all come with a basket of warm sour-dough bread. There are a lot of appealing items available of the hors d'oeuvre nature, but it's probably wise not to go crazy on these as the entrees are twice as filling as the appetizers. But if you come back on another occasion make sure you try something different. (I plan on returning simply to sample the Smoked Shrimp Potato Cakes).

As for the entrees, don't worry about variety. You can get your basic ingredient cooked so many different ways, they had to make a huge, and somewhat unwieldy, menu just to fit them all. Chicken Louisianne is sauteed in lemon butter sauce and topped with mushrooms, artichoke hearts and crabmeat. I had that, but with so many options it took a long time to decide.

Anyway, you'll be able to find something that will make you go "Hmmm," and every entree is served with a House Salad, bread and a vegetable.

By the way, this review is assuming one were to eat dinner at the Grill. They also do serve a luncheon menu which is essentially an abbreviated dinner menu served Monday through Saturday from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

Moving on in standard eating order to the dessert offerings, one will find among others Chocolate Chunk Pecan Pie, New Orleans Bread Pudding, Key Lime Tart and Mud Pie, which is coffee ice cream on a chocolate cookie crust with chocolate syrup and whipped cream.

If you take coffee after your meal you won't be rushed out the door by a pushy waitperson. The Eastside Grill isn't quite big enough to accommodate all who want to eat (hence a twenty minute to half hour wating list during busy hours) but once inside, you'll find a mellow, clean, and reasonably relaxing atmosphere.

Prices for entrees average around $10 and everything else is scaled accordingly. Overall two people can go out for an evening, eat their hearts out on a lot of good food and leave with a little less than forty dollars missing. But hey, for a dinner that tastes good and leaves you so full you can barely walk, the less weight the better, right?

The Eastside Grill: it's in Northampton and it's not what you've heard, so maybe you should judge for yourself.

Bills clinch division with 24-13 win

By Barry Wilner
AP Sports Writer

Bruce Smith is back and the Buffalo Bills are back in the playoffs.

Smith, the 1990 Defensive Player of the Year, saw extensive duty for the first time this year in Sunday's 24-13 victory over the New York Jets. The Bills clinched their fourth straight AFC East title and won their 17th consecutive game at Rich Stadium as Smith had five tackles and a sack.

"My strength was good," he said. "I was a tad slow, but I was able to protect myself."

The Bills (11-2) are not into protecting so much as attacking. Their no-huddle offense has ravaged most opponents.

Recently, however, the defense has stepped up. Against New York, it was solid, stopping the Jets (7-6) on 10 of 11 third downs and forcing three turnovers that led to 17 points.

"For the last three weeks, we really have been starting to come into our own," nose tackle Jeff Wright said. "Hopefully, we can keep it going down the stretch."

Jim Kelly was 21-for-38 for 251 yards and threw touchdown passes to Andre Reed and James Lofton. Thurman Thomas finished with 124 yards on 23 carries.

If Buffalo wins the rest of its games, it would have homefield advantage throughout the AFC playoffs, just as it did last year in making the Super Bowl.

New York saw its wild-card hopes damaged in losing for the ninth consecutive time to the Bills.

"It makes it so frustrating to know that, yeah, we can play with them," defensive lineman Scott Mersereau said. "The last three times, we really played them pretty well."

Elsewhere Sunday, it was Miami 33-14 over Tampa Bay; Atlanta 35-31 over Green Bay; and Cleveland 31-0 over Indianapolis.

At Miami, the Dolphins moved over .500 for the first time this season behind their biggest offensive output of the year.

Mark Higgs replaced fumble-plagued Sammie Smith and rushed for 131 yards. He gained 103 yards in the first half and sparked a 24-point second-quarter. The Dolphins (7-6) scored on six consecutive possessions and had a season-high 468 yards against Tampa Bay (2-11).

"My patients paid off," Higgs said. "In Dallas, I backed up Herschel Walker and I never played. In Philadelphia, I waited until Keith Byars got hurt. So I'm used to it."

Dan Marino was 20 of 32 for 307 yards, including touchdowns of 6 yards to Mark Duper and 26 yards to reserve Tony Martin, who caught five passes for a career-high 106 yards. Pete Stoyanovich kicked a career-high four field goals.

Vinny Testaverde was sacked four times.

At Atlanta, the Falcons (8-5) needed a late rally for their third straight victory and fifth in the last six games.

Chris Miller, who didn't play until starting the second half because of a 103-degree fever, hit on a 16-yard pass to Andre Rison with 41 seconds remaining to win it. The score was set up when Green Bay punter Paul McJulien bobbled a snap and was forced to keep the ball, running out of bounds on his 41.

The Falcons struck for two touchdowns in 11 seconds to erase a 28-14 deficit early in the final period.

Broncos drub hapless Patriots 20-3

By JOHN MOSSMAN
AP Sports Writer

DENVER (AP) — John Elway, shrugging off a sore shoulder, threw a 21-yard touchdown pass to Vance Johnson and kept New England off-balance with a versatile attack as the Denver Broncos drubbed the Patriots 20-3 Sunday.

Elway, a doubtful starter because of tendinitis and a bone spur in his throwing shoulder, came out throwing. He went to the air on six of the Broncos' first seven plays on an opening scoring drive that saw Denver take a lead it never relinquished.

Apparently calling most of the plays in a departure from the previous six games, Elway completed 18 of 25 passes for 215 yards as the Broncos raised their record to 9-4 and took a half-game lead over the Los Angeles Raiders in the AFC West. The Raiders met San Diego Sunday night.

New England (4-9) was throttled by an aggressive Denver defense that sacked Hugh Millen three times early in the game and held the Pats to 13 total yards on their first five possessions. By that time, the Broncos had taken a 17-0 lead.

Elway's TD pass to Johnson capped a 70-yard drive to start the game and represented Denver's first touchdown in the first quarter since its season opener.

The Broncos made it 10-0 on their second possession, marching 61 yards for a 20-yard field goal by David Treadwell. Elway hit Michael Young on a 16-yard pass during the drive, which included a 37-yard interference penalty against cornerback Maurice Hurst.

Denver, beating New England for the seventh straight game and the ninth straight at Mile High Stadium, blew another scoring opportunity early in the second quarter. Dennis Smith intercepted a pass and returned it 11 yards to the New England 29. But Rookie Greg Lewis fumbled the ball away three plays later.

The Broncos later put together a 67-yard scoring drive to go ahead 17-0 at the half. Elway passed 16 yards to Derek Russell and 12 to Ricky Nattiel, and Lewis burst 12 yards off the left side, breaking three tackles for the score.

The Patriots finally crossed midfield just before intermission as Millen completed six passes, but Smith intercepted a pass in the end zone on the final play of the half.

New England used big pass plays to start a pair of third-quarter scoring threats. Millen hit Irving Fryar for 33 yards as the Patriots drove to the Denver 9. But safety Steve Atwater hit Leonard Russell and forced a fumble that was recovered by the opportunistic Smith.

Treadwell's 24-yard third-quarter field goal, capping a 67-yard drive that included four completions by Elway, accounted for the rest of the scoring.

Minutemen reach finals of Shootout

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff and
The Associated Press

It's nice to come back from Thanksgiving break and know that you have a legitimate excuse (not that you need one) to skip classes Tuesday morning.

This courtesy, the University of Massachusetts basketball team which is in the finals of the Great Alaskan Shootout, (tonight at midnight on ESPN) against New Orleans.

Friday, the Minutemen beat up on Santa Clara in the first round, 87-65, and Saturday they disposed of Oregon State 74-65 to advance to the finals.

William Herndon and the University of Massachusetts basketball team face New Orleans in the finals of the Great Alaskan Shootout, tonight at midnight on ESPN.

WHAT YOU MISSED:

UMass 85 Santa Clara 64 —

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Jim McCoy's 16 points led five players in double figures Friday night as the University of Massachusetts downed Santa Clara, 85-64, in the opening round of the Great Alaskan Shootout.

Santa Clara (0-2) led, 34-32, at the half, but the Minutemen went ahead to stay at 18:04 in the second half on a jump shot by Tony Barbee that made it 38-36.

On the same play, Santa Clara's standout scorer, Rhea Taylor, went down with a concussion and had to be carried off on a stretcher.

The Broncos watched their deficit grow after that, to as much as 22 points with 1:20 to go. They went more than 8 minutes in the second half with just one field goal.

UMass' balanced attack included Barbee, Harper Williams and Anton Brown with 12 points each, and freshman Louis Roe with 11.

Santa Clara was led by 7-foot-1-inch, 285 pound Ron Reis, with 15 points and 13 rebounds.

Pete Eisenrich added 13 points for Santa Clara, including three 3-pointers.

The lead switched throughout the first half. Santa Clara'a biggest lead of the game came when Reis hit two free throws to make it 25-19 with 9 minutes remaining in the half.

UMass 74 Oregon State 65 —

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Harper Williams had 15 points in the first half and Jim McCoy scored 16 in the second as Massachusetts rolled by Oregon State 74-65 in the semifinals of the Great Alaskan Shootout.

After their Saturday night victory, the Minutemen (4-0) advanced to the championship game tonight against New Orleans, which defeated Eastern Michigan 76-60 Saturday.

Oregon State started strong on the shooting of Scott Haskin and Chad Scott, compiling a 21-14 lead with 9:30 remaining in the first half.

But Massachusetts went on a 19-4 run and never lost the lead. They led 38-28 at the half, and came back in the second half with McCoy taking up where Williams left off.

Williams had 21 points in the game and McCoy 19. Tony Barbee contributed 13 points.

Scott led the Beavers with 20 points and 12 rebounds.

The Minutemen effectively kept the ball from Haskin in the second half, limiting him to four of his game-total 11 points.

Charles McKinney added 11 for Oregon State.

TONIGHT'S KEY MATCHUPS:

Harper Williams vs. Ervin Johnson — Johnson, a 6-foot-11-inch center averaged 12.7 points and 12.2 rebounds per game last season. Williams managed to tire out Santa Clara's Ron Reis, holding him to 15 points and 13 rebounds, however, Johnson is as good a center as Williams will face throughout the regular season.

Tony Barbee or William Herndon vs. Melvin Simon — Simon, a 6-8 forward is only a sophomore, but as a freshman he scored 11.6 points per game and grabbed 6.6 rebounds a game.

Anton Brown vs. Dwight Myvett — The battle of the seniors, point guards and tempo. Which ever team wins the tempo war, may walk away as tournament champions. Last season, Myvett averaged 8.6 points per game. Brown, will get help from Mike Williams off the bench. This is a good test for both UMass point guards.

THE SERIES:

This is the first time these schools have met. Last season, New Orleans was 23-8 and played in the NCAA Tournament. UMass went 20-13 and played in the NIT Final Four.

Game notes: The game can be heard on WHMP (99.3 FM) with George Miller and Kevin Kennedy.

Women's basketball splits weekend games at Cornell Tournament

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

For the second time in as many weekends, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team split their two games and earned the title of runner-up at the Cornell Sheraton Classic.

Saturday the Minutewomen lost in the championship game to UNC-Greesnsboro, 72-59. They earned a trip to the final by beating host Cornell Friday, 60-47.

The game against UNC-Greensboro was decided early as UMass was down 34-15 in the first half due to 22 percent shooting.

They picked up the shooting in the second half, but even scoring 44 points in that frame wasn't enough as the Spartans shot 48 percent for the game.

Jenny Moran led the Minutewomen with 17 points and 8 rebounds. Trish Riley scored 14 points, and Maleeka

Valentine scored 9 points and added 5 boards.

For the Spartans, Gail White scored 14 points, Kymm Elliot scored 12 and Julie Bright scored 11.

"We went back to old habits," said UMass coach Joanie O'Brien. "We didn't screen people, we didn't rebound, we didn't box out. Whether we were tired or kind of feeling sorry for ourselves for being a little beat up from the night before, I don't know. We had a lot of shots. If you score 15 points in a half you're not going to win many basketball games."

Friday's game against Cornell saw UMass down 27-25 at the half, but the Minutewomen combined a tough defense with aggressive team rebounding on their way to their second win of the young season.

UMass center Kim Kristofik was immense, scoring 21 points and adding 14 rebounds, and Riley scored 12 points. Moran had 8 points and 9 rebounds, and Gloria Nevarez scored 6 points and hauled down 9 rebounds.

"The kids played probably as hard as they've played all season," O'Brien said. "Kim came up big. She did things that I hadn't seen her do as of yet. She took control of the game for a 10 minute stretch.

"Any time you keep a team under 50 points you're playing some good defense. It's a credit to the kids and what they've done."

So the Minutewomen's record stands at 2-2 as they prepare to travel to Boston University tomorrow to play the Terriers, and O'Brien is pleased with the team's progress.

"Slowly but surely we're getting there," she said. "Every now and then we go back to some old habits. Old habits are hard to break and it takes more than four games to do it. We're getting better. Against UNC-Greensboro it was more of a problem with us than with them. As long as it's you, you can work on it and get better. If it's someone that's just totally better than you there's not much you can do."

Ex-hostage credits U.N. for releases

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — Former hostage Frank Reed says the recent release of hostages in the Middle East is the result of United Nations intervention, rather than any U.S. policy.

Reed also said today that Joseph Cicippio faces a more difficult time than many coming out of captivity because he has lost a number of relatives while in captivity.

"One of the problems with Joe coming out is he faces great tragedy," Reed said.

Since his kidnaping five years ago, Cicippio's eldest son, a sister and a brother-in-law have died. Another sister is battling cancer.

"I'm overjoyed," Reed said about reports that the other remaining American hostages would be released within 10 days. "But why did (U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez) de Cuellar do all this is three months, and why didn't we do it all six years ago?"

Cicippio was released early yesterday and the Paris-based Radio Monte Carlo reported from Tehran that Alann Steen would be freed by Wednesday and Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, may be released within 10 days.

This morning, Cicippio's brother, Thomas, said he got word from the State Department that Joseph Cicippio was released and was en route to Damascus.

Reed, 56, of Malden, was released April 30, 1990, after spending almost four years in captivity in Beirut. Since his release, he has been highly critical of the United States' actions.

Perez de Cuellar is credited with initiating a breakthrough in the hostage impasse by arranging swaps of Western hostages held in Lebanon, Arab prisoners under Israeli control, and Israeli soldiers missing in Lebanon.

The umbrella group for the kidnappers has said linkage among those issues has been ended.

With Cicippio's release, now seven long-time hostages have been freed since Perez de Cuellar began his efforts in August, and he predicted earlier this month that all the Westerners would be out by Christmas.

"We've got a legitimate leader in the world who began negotiating, and things began to happen like they should have done years ago," said Reed.

Radio Monte Carlo reported that the anticipated release of all the hostages was linked to the settlement earlier this week of a financial dispute between Washington and Tehran at an international tribunal in the Netherlands.

U.S. officials had denied any linkage between the hostages and the document, signed Tuesday in The Hague. It stipulated the repayment to Iran of $278 million for weapons impounded by Washington 12 years ago.

"In May 1990, I said we've got to make a deal," said Reed, who was director of the private Lebanon International School. "It's all come true. We did have to make a deal."

Church of England envoy Terry Waite and American Thomas Sutherland were released Nov. 18 after spending more than three years in captivity.

Weld considers reforms

Pledges "no new taxes" for education

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — All year long, Statehouse Democrats have bashed Gov. William Weld on education.

So after months of rhetoric, expectations were high last week when Democrats unveiled their reform package, which was crafted by various task forces over months. What would the Republican governor's response be?

Weld liked most of the Democrats' plan — which wasn't terribly surprising, considering that a large portion of their proposals were dressed-up versions of an earlier plan unveiled by Weld.

Both proposals suggest empowering teachers and parents and bringing control down to the local level. Both packages also suggest more standardized testing, both of

UMass receives grant to assist Holyoke students

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst was awarded a $194,265 grant to help encourage 850 low-income and other eligible Holyoke students to further pursue their education.

Last December, the Upward Bound Program at UMass applied for the funds from the Talent Search Program. "During the first week of August, we were notified that we had been approved for September [grant]," said Gloria Guevara, associate dean for Academic Support Services and principal investigator for both Upward Bound and Talent Search at UMass.

Talent Search is one of three federally-funded programs at the University connected with the U.S. Department of Education, known as TRIO. TRIO, which consists of the Upward Bound Program, Talent Search and Special Services, is part of the federal Educational Opportunity Program, according to Guevara.

"UMass became involved with the Talent Search Program because of our relationship with Upward Bound," said Guevara.

All TRIO programs share the goals of keeping seventh through twelfth graders in school, then helping these students pursue further education, Guevara said. "The difference is where you place the emphasis," added Guevara.

Each program works with different age groups: Talent Search, with seventh graders and up; Upward Bound Program, with freshmen in high school; and Special Services, with college students.

The Talent Search Program will help Holyoke students with post-secondary educational decisions and opportunities. These services will include admissions assistance, financial aid, special academic support services systems and programs, and exploring various career options.

The schools involved are Linch and Beck Middle Schools and Holyoke High School.

"These students must be provided with supplemental academic support services to stay in school,

PLO delegates receive visas for Arab-Israeli peace talks

By JAMAL HALABY
Associated Press

AMMAN, Jordan — Palestinian delegates to the Arab-Israeli peace talks resolved a dispute with the United States over visas for seven PLO advisers and decided yesterday to participate in the next round in Washington, a delegate said.

"The problem was solved and we will be traveling to Washington," said Samir Abdullah, a member of the 14-man Palestinian team to the talks, which the Bush administration scheduled to begin tomorrow.

The visa issue had threatened to become a second potential snag for the next round of negotiations.

Israel has objected to that date, complaining it was not consulted ahead of time, and said its delegation would not arrive until Dec. 9. The Israeli Cabinet reaffirmed that stand Sunday.

Jordan, the Palestinians, Syria and Lebanon all accepted the U.S. invitation for the talks scheduled for tomorrow, which are a follow-up to the peace conference that began in Madrid, Spain on Oct. 30.

Abdullah refused to say whether the U.S. Embassy in Amman approved visas for the seven officials of the Palestine Liberation Organization who planned to advise the Palestinian team in Washington.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Jonathan Owen declined to comment.

Another Palestinian delegate, Shassan Khatib, said earlier yesterday that the Palestinians would not go to Washington unless the advisers were allowed in.

The United States generally bans entry of PLO officials, but has allowed some in on previous occasions.

Abdullah said the Palestinian delegation would fly to Washington with the Jordanian delegation aboard a government-chartered plane that delayed its departure until the Palestinians made a decision.

A senior member of the Jordanian delegation had said earlier the Palestinian objections about PLO visas would not affect his delegation. Jordan's group "will surely travel to Washington as scheduled, even if the Palestinians balk," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

At the Madrid talks, Jordanians and Palestinians formed a joint delegation for the initial conference, but they are functioning as independent groups in the bilateral talks with Israel.

The threat by the Palestinian delegation to stay away from the Washington talks underscored its attempts to highlight a negotiating role for the PLO, which is regarded by Arabs as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

Israel refuses to deal with the PLO, which it regards as a terrorist group.

But a shadow delegation of PLO officials advised the Palestinian delegates to the Madrid conference.

PLO leaders also gave the go-ahead for Palestinian representatives from the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip to form a joint delegation with Jordan to circumvent Israel's refusal to deal with the group.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir has objected to the United States setting a date and place for the bilateral talks without consulting the parties. The Israelis say Washington signaled to the Arabs that they need not discuss such problems with Israel because the United States will make the decisions.

Israel also wants the talks spread out over several days so it negotiates with only one Arab delegation at a time. Otherwise, Israeli officials say, they could face simultaneous pressures for territorial concessions on several borders.

Truculent tots taunt Santa Claus

KAIKOHE, New Zealand (AP) — So much for the Christmas spirit.

Children turned nasty when Santa Claus, alias John Field, ran out of the candy and balloons he was passing out in this small North Island town during the annual parade marking the start of the Christmas season.

The young ones began swearing and kicking at Field.

Some adults also became rude and aggressive, he said, asking sarcastically, "Is this another government cut?"

Field said he was amazed and saddened by Saturday's incident, which he called a product of hard times.

Haitians fight to return home

MIAMI (AP) — Lawyers trying to stop the forced return of Haitians to their homeland returned from a U.S. refugee camp in Cuba with evidence they say shows the Haitian boat people are not getting a fair chance to seek asylum.

The lawyers returned late Sunday with the sworn statements from immigration officials and Haitians that was used in a crucial hearing last night on a federal judge's order temporarily barring the forced return of Haitians.

"We have more than enough information to establish the claims that we've been making," said Ira Kurzban, attorney for the Haitian Refugee Center in Miami.

The number of Haitians trying to enter the United States has increased sharply since the military coup Sept. 30 that toppled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. Many have attempted the 500-mile crossing in rickety, overloaded boats.

The Coast Guard has rescued almost 6,000 Haitians in the last month.

UM prof. discusses Latinas in education

By MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

Minorities within academic institutions are offered less recognition for their work, have fewer mentors, must struggle to overcome cultural differences and are constantly affected by racism, said the director of cultural affairs at the University of Massachusetts last night.

Sonia Nieto, 48, an associate professor of education at UMass, said "I think Latinas, people of color and other minorities are restricted and hampered as to what they can do within academic institutions."

Sonia Nieto

"To be a mentor of [minority] students is everyone's responsibility, not just my responsibility," said Nieto, who is Latina. The only way for a professor to be recognized is to do research or get published, she said.

"Most of my time is taken up being a mentor to minorites because I have a minority background," Nieto said. This leaves more time to her white colleagues do to do the research that earns the awards, she said.

"Rewards given to good mentors are almost nill, said Nieto, who earned her doctorate in education at UMass," Nieto said.

Minorities with expertise are not acknowledged by their white colleagues, she said. "When [minorities] do get published, the journals are not recognized by the university," Nieto said.

The percentage of minority faculty is also disproportionate to the population of the state, she said. "Only 2.8 percent of the faculty at UMass are Latina," said Nieto, who has taught education at UMass for 11 years.

There are very few minority mentors in education, she said. "I grew up in New York City and I never met a Puerto Rican until graduate school," said Nieto.

Due to the lack of minority mentors in education, minority students have no one to inspire them, she said.

"I didn't think Puerto Ricans could become anything. I just knew I didn't want to work 16 hours per day like my parents," said Nieto.

"The thought of just going to college thrilled me. What to study was the least of my concerns," she said. Minorities often have no one to help them decide what their career goals are or which school would offer the best education for what they want to study, Nieto said.

"When whites are assertive, minorities are aggressive. When whites are self-assured, minorities are arrogant," Nieto said. There is always a barrier to cultural attitudes minorities must face, she said.

Nieto believes everyone must put themselves in a situation where they are the minority to truly understand what it is like. "When I walked into a senate faculty meeting one time I was the only woman there. I asked myself what I was doing there," she said. "Now I realize I also have important things to say," said Nieto.

"The only way to shatter these glass walls surrounding minorities is to find people who give a damn and for people to overcome their fear of talking about minority problems," said Nieto.

GEO to lobby legislature for funding

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Although members of the Graduate Employee Organization are still relishing last week's victory of acquiring a tentative contract, union leaders are planning to take the fight for affordable higher education to the Legislature in Boston.

Next year, union officials plan on lobbying the Legislature and the Board of Trustees to increase graduate employee stipends and to increase funding in higher education.

A week-long strike ended when the University of Massachusetts agreed to pay the union a percentage of health costs for graduate employees.

Nevertheless, the union agreed to end the strike although they did not receive a demand which turned into a major rallying cry for the union during the strike — agency fee.

This is a benefit other campus unions use to collect a weekly fee from graduate employees unwilling to pay regular union dues.

In place of the regular agency fee provision, both sides, with the help of an outside mediator, agreed to pay eight graduate employees to organize union activities and help the union conduct regular business.

The administration agreed to waive 21 percent of the health costs for individuals and families for this year, 42 percent of the costs for next year and 79 percent for the following year.

University officials said this provision will cost the University $500,000 next semester, $1 million next year and $2 million in 1993 in a fiscal climate where money is tight.

Union leaders said the money to pay for these health costs will not be collected by raising undergraduate fees but will come out of all campus accounts.

The state cut appropriations to the campus by 12.5 percent this year, forcing the administration to raise the mandatory student fees by almost $1,000.

The Graduate Employee Organization represents 2,200 graduate employees including teaching and research assistants, interns and fellows. Union officials said about half are dues-paying members.

School fits 200 in room

WALES, MA (AP) — Three teachers and a principal on Monday began teaching language skills and math — but little else — to 200 elementary students at perhaps the nation's most over-packed school.

"I feel squished," said Ashley Mardis, a second grader at Wales Elementary School. "I got all different people around me."

She was one of 75 kindergarten, first and second grade students shoehorned into one classroom taught by a teacher with help from volunteer parents. The town's 53 third and fourth graders were sharing a class space, and 58 fifth and sixth graders were crammed into another room.

The nation's ailing economy has forced school systems aound the country, especially in Massachusetts, California and Texas, to increase class sizes. However, this cash-strapped town is getting a lot of attention.

Nancy Kochuk, a spokeswoman for the National Education Association in Washington, D.C., said of Wales, "We've not heard of anything this severe before in terms of numbers of students in one class."

She said the teacher's group has set 15 as the ideal class size.

graduate and enter post-secondary education," Guevara said.

Holyoke was chosen because of its current financial situation. Guevara said 230 Holyoke teachers had been laid off resulting from "diminishing funds and materials throughout the public schools."

Holyoke also suffers from a high drop-out and unemployment rate, which is among the five highest in the state, said Guevara.

The Talent Search Program is especially designed to aid children whose parents have not attended college, said Guevara. "These first-generation children are a key to the program," she said.

According to Guevara, Talent Search rules state that at least two-thirds of the participants must be first-generation students.

This is the first year of Upward Bounds' 25 years on the UMass campus that it has applied to be part of the Talent Search Program. The Talent Search Program has changing cycles of applicants, and the Upward Bound program took the first opportunity to participate when the Talent Search program was accepting new cycles, said Guevara.

"It is very difficult to get these funds. It's very competitive," she said. Guevara said she is very pleased that UMass did so well in obtaining Talent Search funds on its first application.

The grant is for three years, and the funds will allow UMass to hire a director, an administrative assistant and four counselors.

The Holyoke program has been in effect since this September. "An interim director has been hired for a couple of months, until a permanent director is hired," said Guevara.

Guevara hopes to have found a permanent director by the end of February.

"There is a lot of room for volunteers," said Guevara, which include providing workshops and presentations.

Exuberant homecoming for ex-hostage

FORT COLLINS, Colo. (AP) — With the snow-covered Rocky Mountains as a backdrop, Thomas Sutherland savored the Colorado sunshine and fresh air after 6 1/2 years as a hostage.

The 60-year-old Scotsman got a hero's welcome of balloons and bagpipes Sunday, two weeks after he was freed by Shiite Muslim kidnappers.

"To see the sunshine and fresh air, I can't tell you how good it is. Words can hardly express how I feel about being here, honestly," Sutherland said at the airport.

He said he spent much of his captivity in dank, dark surroundings.

What women really want

Oh, Romeo, Romeo, wherefore art thou not, my Romeo? Where, oh where, has the romance at UMass snuck away to? What happened to the days when men brought flowers to their desirable? Now it seems females get a slap on the back and the guy says, "Wanna watch me guzzle this one down?" Having been asked this question more than enough times, I decided it was time for another escapade around the dorm to see what it is that we, women, really want.

Seana Barnhill

There was some debate as to whether or not chivalry was still alive at all. The ending consensus was that it isn't dead, but most guys just don't do it at all, or enough, anymore. An interesting comment was that we (girls) shouldn't expect it, and the chivalry should go both ways. We shouldn't expect them to open a door for us when his arms are holding a load of books. We should also do things for them, like bring them flowers for a change.

The most craved, unanticipated gift was of course, flowers. What is surprising is that almost every girl thought that roses were definitely overrated. Kelly said that, "You can tell something about the character of a guy by the flowers he chooses." Roses pretty much show a lack of creativity.

Before you guys start freaking about about costs for other flowers, and what kind, another friend said that she thinks the best would be a bunch of wild flowers (synonymous with pretty weeds and free) hand picked and chosen by him personally.

What if you are nowhere near a big open daisy-filled field? Never fear my dear (or buck) — there are more things that we said we'd love. Poems (yes, written by you) were rated higher than jewelry. Nifty, eh?

Drawings, tapes with sentimental songs, or a collage of photographs. Overall, the biggest thrillers that made our hearts beat faster were things that costed nil. Okay, so the things we want do cost something, which is nerve enough to go through with it.

Are you in a rut and have no place to take her that special moonlit night? Stop shakin' bacon, what we want is pretty simple. Go to the beach for a nightly stroll, wade through the waves, and feel the sand and little hermit crabs swirl between your toes. Bikerides are big and kite flying is too, especially if there's a picnic included. Take us out one day and show us something that you're really into, not your boxers, but a pastime. If you like photography, take us to a museum and teach us about it through your appreciation.

Here is a scary suggestion, but a most appreciated one, for all of you hulks out there — a love letter. In it, although it wouldn't hurt, we don't want to hear that we are beautiful as much as we want to hear that you care about us because of who we are. So if that's a bit too scary, you can hold off on that temporarily. Instead give your special boog-a-ly bear a call just to say you care about her. Don't call every second of the day though. Erin said that it was ". . . more of a hassle if it exceeded four." When we say we're fat, and even if we did gain 10 pounds, pretend not to notice and tell us we're beautiful. Of course if we begin reaching cow stage, it would probably be better to help us with our diet and not make us jealous by eating tons of food in front of us.

Okay, so we do want to be treated like princesses. But did you notice all of the things we want and like are free? The way we can really tell that you care about us is when you spend time on it not money. We want to see part of you in your little surprises.

Magic Johnson is very alive

I am writing in reference to Mark Preston's article addressing the danger of AIDS in the Collegian dated Nov. 20, 1991. Although I fully commend the very real and important point he is trying to drive through to us all, I find some of his comments to be incorrect and misleading.

First and foremost, Earvin "Magic" Johnson is NOT dead! He is very much alive and he is trying to help us benefit from his misfortune, and here we are saying and thinking he is already dead. Some of us speak of him in the past tense, use "was" to describe what he still is, and some even that he disappointed a lot of people.

Man, give the guy a break! No person, much less Magic Johnson, deserves this kind of treatment and pessimism from anyone! He is not dead and does not have AIDS. Surprised? Some say that it is inevitable. He tested positive for the HIV virus and yes, he is definitely at extremely high risk for developing AIDS.

But the fact remains, he does not have AIDS at the moment, and you know what? He may never have AIDS because the HIV virus has a tendency to remain in a latent state for unknown periods of time. So many other internal and external factors are involved.

God forbid, he may die next week, or he may luck out and never develop AIDS. Who knows? Does Mark Preston know? Most certainly not. So why the hell is he asking us to feel sad and angry over Magic Johnson's "death"?

True, we should all feel sad for it to have happened to such a good person, but we should not be surprised because it can happen to anyone. No one is exempted.

Another comment Mr. Preston made was that everyone who has unprotected sex with an HIV-positive person will receive the HIV virus. This is not true. The risk rises exponentially in such circumstances, but the bottom line is, it is a high risk factor, not a cause. Again, who knows? There is even a theory going around that HIV does not cause AIDS! We know so little about AIDS, but what we do know is that AIDS kills and there is no medical cure.

But there is prevention. So, take Mr. Preston's advice: don't possibly throw away your life for a few minutes of ecstasy. The risk is just too high and the price too dear.

Women are not being listened to

I am a new graduate student at UMass and new to the area. After my number became accessible through the student directory, I received an obscene telephone call. The caller said my name and said, "You are now my slave, you will do everything I command." I hung up. A week later there was another call. He said my name, wanted to know if I was alone and identified himself as Bob Smith, and said he wanted to stick it in me. If the asshole who called is reading this I suggest that you take your poor tired little thing and put it out of its misery.

Since I know how far women go in this "justus" system of good old boys (Anita Hill being a recent case in point), I did not report the call to the police.

Last night at dinner, though, I changed my mind. I heard that another female grad student had gotten the same call, same lines. So this morning I decided to call the UMass Police Department to ask them to warn women on campus that someone is using the student directory to make obscene phone calls. The receptionist (a woman) asked why I did not report it earlier. I guess she hadn't absorbed Anita Hill's experience with blind "justus." I asked to speak with the sergeant on duty, Sergeant Grader. He refused to speak with me. The calls are stemming from the UMass phone directory, being targeted at UMass female students, but Sergeant Grader early Sunday morning would not even speak with me.

Since I am here for an education I took the police receptionist's advice and reported the call to the Amherst Police Department and, dear reader, you will be surprised to know that they can't do anything. UMass is not in their jurisdiction.

So we, as women, once again have the opportunity to figure out how to live safely when the only justice system is a "just-us" system for the rich, White and male (with some exceptions like poor Clarence). I would like women to know we are not alone and to figure out how to creatively respond to the obscene phone calls and to the UMass Police Department's unwillingness to talk or listen to women complaining about sexual harassment emanating from UMass. Thanks.

Blueballs said to be non-existent

In regard to Emily Woller's editorial of Monday, Dec. 2 ["Don't assume she wants to have sex; ask her first"]: I applaud Emily on a composition that is clear, fair and insightful.

There is only one (minor) disagreement I have with her — the existence of so-called "blueballs."

The term exists only because of men's need to rationalize the sexual frustration resulting from not masturbating enough. Please, don't give them that much credit. "Blueballs" are nothing more than a ridiculous myth.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Attention! Attention! Once again Marc Elliott has been lazy and had to be replaced for this column by Debra Kriegsman, that lovely lady, who has been kind enough to do Marc's job.

Hello all, and welcome to my second version of the basement notes. Before I begin, I'd like to remind everyone about the column I wrote three weeks ago for the lazy Mr. Marc. Feel free to re-read that masterpiece in case you are worried about keeping up with today's column.

At this point I'd like to thank the one person who actually responded to my first column. I'd like to say that I was delightfully surprised to hear that a letter was written praising my writing abilities, and that I had such pleasure gloating to Marc Elliott about it. Thanx Amy.

The invitation for graduation gifts to moi is still open. However, I no longer want things. Just send money, and lots of it.

Last week I went home to New Jersey for the Thanksgiving holiday. Is it me or do other people find the thought of watching others gorge themselves a disgusting daydream? Most people think of Thanksgiving as a time to give thanks and a time to eat. I just see it as a long day of listening to other people chew, belch and groan. Yuck!!!!!!!!!!!!

Hanukkah is here and I'd like to wish everyone a happy holiday, except to all those who neglected to give me a present. Call me selfish, call me greedy, but don't call me stupid. True, giving gifts is a gratifying experience, but knowing that others spent money on me is orgasmic.

This week's graffiti of the week comes straight from the exciting Collegian offices located in the Campus Center Basement.

Debra Kriegsman

Written in brown ink on one of the baroque-like room dividers comes the quote of the week . . .

"Georgia, a place where you can marry your own first cousin, but not a member of your own sex." Yes, this lovely sentence comes to you from none other than . . . Me. I said that, and it is true. Talk about a strange place. And everyone makes fun of New Jersey. I think everyone should think twice before mocking my home, the place I am proud to be from.

Oy vey! I've typed 39 lines so far and now my editor has upped the ante by telling me that I have to write 65 lines. He originally asked me for 60, now it's five more. Greg, what do you think I am? A writer, perhaps? NOT!!!

It's not just a bus, it's Peter Pan (thanx to Brooke Wheeler for that one).

To all fans of the Partridge Family, come on get happy!

Why isn't it cold out? I came to this school because I thought I'd be able to take classes such as Snowpeople 101, Frostbite 260 and Igloo Economics 210. But this heat spell hasn't been conducive to snow. I suggest we make our own. Everyone go out and buy an ice cube tray, fill it with water and freeze it. When frozen, bring to the Student Union steps for a noon snow rally and two radical speakers lecturing on the hazards of water.

Jason George, the Barry Manilow fan I outed three weeks ago, would like to thank the person who returned his lost check. Whoever you are, wherever you are, remember that you did a nice thing for Jason. You're welcome to a home-cooked meal at Jason's free of charge if you let him know who you are.

Here's to all people who worship me like the goddess that I am. You should all know that Debra Worship is a form of community service.

Here is where I promote a friend: Felice Cohen will be selling ties on the concourse on Friday. They are works of art. I'll be there helping out, so for all my fans, stop by and let me know of your devotion (or just give me money)!

Debra Kriegsman is a Collegian goddess

teachers and students, increasing the private sector's involvement in public education and having principals and school superintendents run things like CEOs rather than bureaucrats.

But what Weld didn't like was some talk about how to pay for the changes.

True to his "no new taxes" pledge, the governor bristled when the Education Committee's chairpersons, Rep. Mark Roosevelt and Sen. Thomas Birmingham suggested maintaining the state income tax at 6.25 percent, which they say would raise $250 million a year. It is now scheduled to drop to 5.95 percent Jan. 1.

Or, the pair said, how about hiking the corporate tax? Or upping the sales tax 1 cent?

Weld merely repeated "no new taxes" and said structural reforms should come before more money. Other Republicans came down hard on the Democrats, charging them with using education as an excuse to hike taxes — in effect, holding school children hostage.

Both sides seem to agree that funding education through property taxes has become outdated and unfair.

Roosevelt, D-Boston, and Birmingham, D-Chelsea, along with House Speaker Charles Flaherty, D-Cambridge, make a persuasive argument — if quality education isn't worth paying for, what is?

Ukrainians vote for freedom from Kremlin control

Kiev, USSR (AP) — Ukrainians voted overwhelmingly for independence, according to unofficial figures yesterday, in a referendum that could wreck Mikhail S. Gorbachev's efforts to hold together the Soviet state.

"An independent Ukraine is born," said a beaming Leonid Kravchuk, the former Communist who reportedly won a presidential contest held Sunday in the second most populous Soviet republic.

In Washington, the Bush administration said yesterday the United States is "moving toward full diplomatic recognition" of the Ukraine. President Bush asked Secretary of State James A. Baker III to visit leaders in Moscow and Kiev later this week to discuss the Ukraine's transition to independence.

"We want to be supportive of the positive change," said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater. He said Bush had discussed the US position over the weekend in calls to Gorbachev and Russian Republic President Boris Yeltsin.

Fitzwater said that, while the United States remains concerned about many issues, including the fate of nuclear weapons now in the republic.

Kravchuk, the republic's parliamentary chairman, told a news conference that 92 percent of voters had endorsed independence and that he had won the presidency with 55 percent of the vote.

Election officials said Kravchuk won a clear first-ballot victory, allowing him to avoid a runoff against any of his five opponents.

Releasing preliminary figures, the Central Election Commission said 83.7 percent of the republic's 37.5 million eligible voters cast ballots.

With the passage of the referendum and pledges by all candidates in the presidential election not to sign Gorbachev's proposed treaty on retaining the central government, the Ukraine has shown its determination to break from Kremlin control.

It is not clear whether the Ukraine, whose population of 52 million accounts for nearly a fifth of the Soviet Union's, can legally secede from the union without recognition by the national legislature or Gorbachev.

But if the economically and politically powerful Ukraine succeeds, its independence would severely cripple Gorbachev's efforts to preserve the union.

The three Baltic states are the only other republics to have broken completely from the country.

Raising another concern about secession, Kravchuk also reiterated his position that the Ukraine should receive joint control of nuclear weapons on its territory, and eventually wants them dismantled.

Although some Soviet republics, such as Georgia, have said they will recognize the Ukraine's independence, president Gorbachev's central government is resisting.

Gorbachev has said Ukrainian independence would be a "catastrophe," arguing that the Soviet republics have grown too interdependent. The Ukraine depends upon the Russian republics for oil. Russia's president, Boris Yeltsin, has not taken a position.

The US ambassador to Moscow, Robert Strauss, said Sunday that the United States would not act "precipitously" to recognize an independent Ukraine but would start moving in that direction if Ukrainians voted for freedom.

Sweden, meanwhile, was preparing to establish diplomatic relations with the Ukraine, Swedish Foreign Minister Margaretha of Ugglas said yesterday. But she said the government would wait to see how the republic proceeds.

In a statement yesterday, the European Community also welcomed the "democratic manner" in which Ukrainians chose independence.

Feminist cartoonist to give lecture

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

Nicole Hollander, creator of the cartoon, Sylvia, will present a lecture, sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, on what she seems to know best: Women and humor.

"I remember one time I went to a movie with my mother and my sister and we started kidding around as the credits were rolling and a man turned around and said,'Is this going to continue?' We said 'Yes,' and he got up and left," claims Hollander

A little of this wise-cracking cattiness is seen in the character, Sylvia, who can appreciate a good quality Minnie Pearl hat as well as self-help counseling while in her bathtub.

"Sylvia and I are a lot alike," said Hollander. "We both like to take baths. Like vintage clothing. Have cats — in fact the same cat. Johnathan. He's 16 and still running around like a maniac."

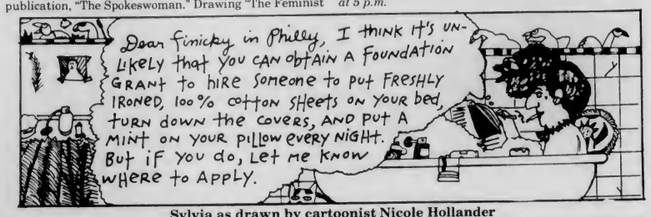
After obtaining a master's degree in painting at Boston College, a Hollander went to California to teach art part-time at a junior college.

"I went to California, which was what I always wanted to do because I wanted to be warm. It was beautiful — I went to Berkeley. But people didn't understand about suffering there. I had to come back," Hollander said.

In the late sixties, Hollander joined the National Organization for Women. She redesigned a national feminist publication, "The Spokeswoman." Drawing "The Feminist Funnies" in this publication got her into the mainstream.

"I did 'I'm Training to be Tall and Blonde' in 1979," said Hollander, and the character, Sylvia was born.

Nicole Hollander will be speaking at the Student Union Ballroom on Wednesday, Dec. 4. at 8 p.m. A book signing will be held at Food for Thought Books on Tuesday, Dec. 3 at 5 p.m.



Dear finicky in Philly, I think it's UNLIKELY that you can obtain A FOUNDATION GRANT to hire someone to put FRESHLY IRONED, 100% cotton sheets on your bed, turn down the covers, AND put A MINT on your pillow every NIGHT. But if you do, Let me know WHERE to Apply.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Problems in a relationship may be resolving themselves rather swiftly. Avoid bringing up old grievances. Off-again, on-again business talks resume. Dispel uncertainty by pointing out the facts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Secret exchanges and decisions could lead to trouble or upset the status quo. A blessing in disguise will cause long, overdue improvements. A platonic relationship intensifies.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Apply your imagination in positive ways, tapping your originality and inventiveness, and you will speed things along at work. Smoother sailing lies ahead. Romance blossoms.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Changes you are experiencing are for your own good; do not try to hold back the tide! End a relationship that is going nowhere. A platonic alliance takes on new meaning.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Work through your feelings about previously blocked emotions and unfulfilled desires. Honesty is the key to improving a close relationship. Level with your loved ones; they need to know your true needs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A great day for socializing and pursuing romance. Stop nursing an emotional wound and seek out fun-loving companions. A disappointing experience will soon be put in its proper perspective.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Trust instinct over logic now. You may be hurrying something that should be taken one step at a time. Adversity gives you a better understanding of your weaknesses and strengths. Focus on the latter.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Channel your dynamic energy into both your work and your personal relationships. Tackle any job problems with gusto. Seize a chance to help a teen-ager with a dilemma. Curb your tongue.

SAGITARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Listen to your heart! Trusting someone is essential for lasting peace of mind. Be more tolerant of your loved ones' foibles. An understanding attitude will bring you closer together.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Reflect carefully on the major influences of the past few weeks. You may have ignored or overlooked something important. Past experiences provide a good guideline for the future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You will profit both financially and emotionally from a learning experience. Do not be afraid that you are opening up Pandora's box! Your ESP is right on target. Protect your resources.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be careful not to sound too skeptical! Sweeping changes are needed. Accept an exciting new challenge. A career upheaval will shake, rattle and roll you in an exciting new direction.

UNITED CELEBRATION — Children and elders watch a satellite hook-up of Chanukah celebrations worldwide at the Lubavitch headquarters in Brooklyn, New York Sunday.

Networks plan live coverage of Smith rape trial

With a tight-lipped smile, Smith greeted some 200 journalists and spectators outside the courthouse, then walked in with his mother, Jean Kennedy Smith, brother Stephen Smith, sister Amanda Smith, his defense team and other supporters.

Just after 9 a.m. EST, Circuit Judge Mary Lupo welcomed the remaining 37-member jury pool, which both sides were ready to cut to six jurors and three alternates to hear what may be the most publicized rape trial ever. At the outset, the selection was delayed when Ms. Lupo told a potential juror she had received information about his "extra-curricular activities involving betting."

At the man's request, the courtroom was closed while he answered questions about the reports.

Ms. Lupo also was considering final motions, including one of the most critical rulings — whether prosecutors may call as witnesses three women who claim Smith attacked them in the 1980s.

If allowed to testify, their stories could lend credence to the claim of Smith's 30-year-old accuser that he raped her March 30.

Smith, a 31-year-old medical school graduate and nephew of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., could get up to 4 1/2 years in prison if convicted.

Defense attorneys say the woman, whom they depicted as mentally unstable, consented to sex, then cried rape in a bid for vengeance and attention.

The case has fascinated the nation with its elements of sex, money, power and prestige.

The allegation — leveled after Smith went drinking with his senator uncle — reinforced Sen. Kennedy's reputation for carousing and stirring debate over whether the media should identify complainants in rape cases. NBC, The New York Times and a few other news organizations have identified Smith's accuser.

Prosecutor Moira Lasch disclosed July 22 that the three women had come forward with allegations against Smith. Under Florida law, such evidence is admissible if it shows a specific pattern of behavior by the defendant.

One of the women, a medical student, alleged Smith raped her at his Washington apartment in 1988, while she was drunk. Another, now a doctor, said she talked Smith out of attacking her at his home in 1988. The third, a former girlfriend of Smith's cousin Matthew "Max" Kennedy, said she fought off Smith at his parent's home in New York in 1983.

Under the law, such evidence cannot be used to prove a defendant is of "bad character or propensity." Court rulings also say judges shouldn't allow such evidence if it is likely to inflame the jury and become the major feature of the trial.

Minutewomen seek third win

O'Brien's squad journeys to BU

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Not many people around the University of Massachusetts sports scene thought the women's basketball team was going anywhere. But as the Minutewomen travel to Case Gymnasium in Boston to battle the Boston University Lady Terriers tonight (7:30 p.m.), they're also heading up the ladder in terms of respectability.

UMass (2-2) is playing solid basketball, and the go-to players have been performing exceptionally. Center Kim Kristofik and guard Trish Riley were named to the Sheraton Classic All-Tournament Team for their outstanding performance.

Kristofik had 21 points and 14 rebounds in the win against Cornell, and Riley hit double digits in points in both games last weekend.

For tonight's game, UMass coach Joanie O'Brien will again be looking for the two to step up to the challenge.

"Trish and Kim are our go-to players," she said. "Trish 11

Boston University will offer some stiff competition, something UMass' schedule seriously lacks. The Lady Terriers (1-0) return four of last year's starters. O'Brien said she expects BU to try to work their fast break.

"I know they like to run up and down the floor," she said. "They've got two or three good players . . . if we can slow them down, we've got a good chance."

Returning players for the Lady Terriers include guard Richele Van Zandt, who scored 20 points in BU's opening game. Last year, Van Zandt averaged 9.9 points and 7.1 rebounds per game.

Andrea Higgins complements Van Zandt at the other guard position. The junior averaged 11.2 ppg and 2.9 rpg last year. Her 18 points against Central Conn. helped the Lady Terriers to a 73-67 win.

The Minutewomen need to stop the break and win the half-court game. To do this, they must win the mismatches, especially down low. Enter Kristofik.

The junior converted-center will probably match up against Fannya Manchak, who was able to score 9 points in her limited 19 minutes of action. Other matchups include Maleeka Valentine and Jenny Moran versus Julie Schmidt and 5-11 sophomore Jill Sosnak.

Sosnak led the Lady Terriers as a freshman, scoring 12.7 points and tearing down an average of 8.0 rebounds a game. Her size and height may wear down an already weak UMass team.

The Minutewomen lack any depth past the starting five. The possible return of Cherie Muza tonight will help UMass' bench.

"Cherie's coming back from a sprained ankle, so she might see a little playing time," O'Brien said.

The only bench depth that UMass has shown thus far has been from Riley. The senior has been a big playmaker, and her back has held up so far. The question arises to why she hasn't started.

"I like to have her as a spark off of the bench," O'Brien said. "I want to control her minutes . . . not just put her in for 40 minutes. But that doesn't mean she's not going to start sometime."

The Year in Sports, according to Greg

It was a year of missed field goals at the buzzer, tournament upsets, Mike Marshall, no-look dunks, Cinderella championships, just desserts and the courage of a man who's looking uncertainty in the face and keeps on living.

It was 1991, the year in sports.

Since I've only got two columns left before finals, I figured I'd take a risk and try and sum up the best and worst bits 'o' sports on a national scale. Next week, look for "UMass 91: the Minutemen strike back," available where finer college newspapers are given away for free.

Well now, how do you prioritize an entire year? You don't — it's just impossible. Essentially this list is made of the stuff I remember, sport by sport. Yes, I left out monster truck racing, yet somehow we'll survive.

Superfight I: the real thing. Foreman vs. Holyfield, Las Vegas. What was supposed to be a laugher became one of the best bouts of recent memory. Holyfield retained the title, to the surprise of few, but did Foreman ever give him a battle.

Superfight II: the undercard. Fenech vs. Nelson, Las Vegas. The very best fight of the year was this lower weight class title match-up and it never disappointed, as Fenech and Nelson beat the what not out of each other 12 rounds straight.

Nelson held off a late charge from Fenech to retain the title in a controversial split decision. The irony was that the fight after this one — the much-hyped Tyson-Ruddock rematch — absolutely paled in comparison. Quite simply, Fenech and Nelson stole the show and I'm still awaiting the rematch eagerly.

How lucky can you be? Just ask the New York Giants. Without taking anything away from last year's world champions, outside forces were definitely on their side.

Look at the record and decide for yourself. Joe Montana just happens to get hurt and give up the ball on the same play, making a game-winning field goal and the NFC title possible for the Giants? Scott Norwood's 47 yarder to win one of the greatest Super Bowls ever played has the distance but just happens to sail wide?

Greg Sukiennik

The Red Sox could never be this lucky. Nooooo. Who would have guessed Danny Darwin and Matt Young would be non-entities for most of the season? What compels Mike Greenwell to risk his life repeatedly in episodes such as racing cars at Seekonk or picking fights with Mo Vaughn? The cars I can understand, but you'd have to be a moron to start with Big Mo. I think Gator played football without a helmet one time too many.

Speaking of blatant stupidity and the Red Sox, two items come to mind. Yes, only two. The first is the Mike Marshall soap opera, which is old news best forgotten to most. Why Lou Gorman didn't waive the guy outright from the start (which is what he eventually did) is beyond me. Not even triple-A teams wanted him.

Secondly, why oh why oh why did they fire Joe Morgan? What could he have done differently? Here's a team with enough talent for a division title, yet they underachieve all season long. There's only so much a a manager can do about such dilemmas in an era of high-priced egos. Best of luck, Butch Hobson.

Dee-struction: See Dee Brown. See Dee pump up his sneakers. "Pfft, pfft, pfft." See Dee dunk. "Clang." Damn, Dee can dunk. Brown's high flying act was certainly one of 1991's highlights, especially for Celtic fans. They may not have won the title — and many still feel they were the only team capable of knocking off eventual champion Chicago — but Dee breathed life into a moribund, walk-it-up-the-floor squad.

Every so often, something so unexpected and incredible happens that you think, "This could only happen in the movies." John Daly lived out such a sports fantasy.

Daly virtually came out of nowhere to win the PGA Championship in late summer. He can drive a ball further than humanly thought possible and makes a great ambassador for the PGA with his down-home, friendly personality.

Speaking of Cinderella stories, who could equal the Minnesota North Stars or Atlanta Braves? Both teams went from worst to first in their respective leagues, just missing out on winning the whole box of cereal. Life may be unfair, but in sports, if you believe and work hard enough, good things invariably happen.

Magic Johnson certainly must dominate any end-of-year discussion of what's important in sports. Everything else seems trivial compared to what Johnson has gone through and will go through in his battle with HIV.

Magic has HIV and everyone's somber about it but him. Just maybe, we should follow his example instead.

Thoughts from around the rim

I really don't have an idea what this column will be about . . . guess I'll just fill the page with some random thoughts.

I'm sure that I'm not the only one who read the Sports Illustrated article on Christian Laettner and came away with the taste of sour grapes in my mouth. While Laettner and roommate Brian Davis might be great basketball players at a great school, they are certainly not great at making first impressions.

The article portrays Laettner and Davis as two in their own world, thinking only about their own feelings and in dire need of two slices of humble pie.

The SI reading tells of how Laettner dominated much- publicized center Shaquille O'Neal of LSU when the two teams met last season. I only hope that O'Neal and LSU get another crack at Laettner and Duke. Perhaps Shaq would gain revenge and show Christian the "Real Deal."

Speaking of Shaquille, when he does decide to enter the NBA, the league will then have quite an assortment of talented centers. Along with the already established pivot dieties (David Robinson, Patrick Ewing, Hakeem Olajuwon, Brad Daugherty, and of course, Robert Parish), the development of such centers as Pervis Ellison, Dikembe Mutumbo and Rony Seikaly gives the league a plethora of big men.

Wasn't it just a couple of seasons ago when the so-called "experts" were bemoaning the fact that the NBA no longer had many "true" centers? I wonder what those experts are harping about now.

While basketball is the subject, wouldn't it be fun to put together a hoop team made up of the NBA's fattest players.

Jeff Crofts

The Bullets' John Williams would start at power forward, while his real-life teammate Ledell Eackles could man the shooting guard spot. As for small forward, the mad bomber from Orlando, Dennis Scott, would be just fine with his rotund build. Golden State rookie Victor Alexander would fill the center spot to a T due to his 270-pound frame. Need you ask who would run the point for this squad of overeaters? Of course it would be the Celtics' own John Bagley, who gives new meaning to the phrase "poetry in motion."

While the team might not win many games, the payroll would be low, seeing how salaries would be paid in Twinkies and not moolah.

Since when is the homecoming of two traded Hartford Whaler stiffs more important than the heavyweight championship? Well, on Saturday, November 23rd that was the case.

You really have to wonder sometimes . . . After Holyfield's poor showing against Cooper I have concluded that there are indeed better heavyweights than Evander (unfortunately, including Mike Tyson), but none more deserving or better suited to wear the heavyweight crown and all that comes with it, than the current champ.

Let's head back to the basketball court for a moment or two . . . In his first few games, UMass freshman Lou Roe has proved that he is already among the Atlantic 10's most impressive and imposing physical specimen.

Minutemen fans shouldn't assume that this is the year that the team finally beats Temple. Even though the Owls did lose starters Mark Macon and Donald Hodge to the NBA, the team still returns many veterans along with the addition of one very impressive freshman, Rick (formerly Eric) Brunson from Salem, Massachusetts. I've seen Brunson play in postseason all-star games in addition to the Boston Shootout, and must say that he is a player, plain and simple.

Worse off, Brunson is the type of player who likes to take, and make, the big shots. Still, the chances of Massachusetts winning the A-10 are better than ever.

American hostage freed, Anderson release possible

By EILEEN ALT POWELL
Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria — The Lebanon kidnapping ordeal seemed headed for an end with the release of another American on Tuesday, and reports said Terry Anderson, the last American captive, could be freed Wednesday.

The freeing of American Alann Steen was the latest in a series of dramatic releases since August that has been orchestrated by the United Nations. Only three Westerners still are being held captive by Shiitie Muslim radicals.

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said in new York after meeting with Iranina ambassador Kamal Kharrazi that he expected yet another release within two days. "I know it will be very soon but I cannot say when," he added.

Kharrazi said it was his understanding that Anderson would be freed by Wednesday, and sources in Damascus who are close to the hostage negotiations made the same prediction. There were indications that the United Nations was working on a separate deal to gain the freedom of two German hostages.

Steen, a Boston native, spent nearly five years in captivity.

"It's great to be out," the 52-year-old journalism teacher told reporters at a news conference at the Syrian Foriegn ministry.

Steen wept as he was turned over to American ambassador Christopher Ross.

"I don't think I can find the words right now to express how I feel, except that it's wonderful," said Steen, who was kidnapped on Jan. 24, 1987 at the U.S.-supported Beirut University College by extremists posing as Lebaneese police. "Five years is no fun."

The pro-Iranian organization of Islamic jihad for Liberation of Palestine said it freed Steen in Beirut under a U.N.-brokered agreement. Syrian army officers drove Steen across the border to Damascus.

Steen was flown Tuesday night to Germany, where he will undergo medical examinations and be debriefed by intelligence officials.

Nearly 100 people turned out in subfreezing temperatures to greet Steen as he arived at the U.S. Air Force hospital in Wiesbaden.

Steen punched his fist in the air in jubillation as confetti showered down around him and the crowd cheered wildly.

Weld to endorse opponent of gay rights, abortions

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. William Weld plans to endorse a friend's bid for U.S. Senate in Utah even though the candidate opposes gay rights and abortion rights, which Weld supports.

Brent Ward, a former U.S. attorney for Utah, is one of four candidates for the Republican nomination for the Senate seat now held by Jake Garn. Garn, a third-term Republican, is not seeking re-election.

Weld, a former U.S. attorney for Massachusetts, is going to Salt Lake City for a three-day Republican governors' conference. He will deliver the keynote address at a fund-raising dinner for Ward there on Saturday.

Ward told The Boston Globe he is a conservative Republican who opposes abortion in most cases and legislation guaranteeing civil rights to gays.

He also said the other three Republican candidates for the nomination oppose abortion rights and gay rights.

Ward said he and Weld both are fiscal conservatives. Weld's press secretary, Ray Howell, agreed and said the two also are personal friends.

"This is an emotional issue on which people have deeply held beliefs, but he's not about to tell anyone to change their position on it," Howell said. "The Republican Party embraces people with different points of view on this."

Pam Nourse, executive director of MassChoice, an abortion rights organization that endorsed Weld for governor last year, said it was "disappointing" that Weld would endorse an anti-abortion candidate.

"It's very critical we elect senators who support the right to choose," she said.

Snow delays buses; classes unaffected

WHADAYA MEAN, NO BRAKES? — Marching band members take advantage of yesterday's snow/sleet/freezing rain, sledding near the Old Chapel.

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

Classes were virtually unaffected yesterday by snow and sleet, while PVTA buses ran off-schedule.

University Police Chief and acting Director of Public Safety John Luippold said only one car accident was reported on campus. A minor accident, he said, occurred around 1:00 p.m. with no personal injuries.

"I think we have been pretty lucky," Luippold said. "In the morning commute we did not have any problems."

Students reported late and no-show buses throughout the morning.

A PVTA official said there were some accidents in the morning, some including buses. He said there were no injuries or damage to buses.

Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance Paul Page said the decision to cancel class comes from a variety of information. This includes weather conditions, road conditions, information from a weather service and an evaluation conducted by physical plant workers. Yesterday between 3:00 and 4:00 a.m. it was decided that the roads would be alright for travel at the beginning of classes, Page said.

School closings are broadcast over several local television and radio stations. These include WMUA, the Housing Service Cable Network, WTIC in Hartford and WFCR, WRNX AND WTTT in Amherst.

According to the emergency closing policy, classes can be either delayed, closed all day, closed for a period during

Sununu stepping down

Chief of Staff resigns under pressure

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — John H. Sununu, the combative White House chief of staff whose abrasive style earned him enemies in both parties, resigned Tuesday, telling President Bush he didn't want to be a "drag on your success."

The resignation came after weeks of rumors that Sununu was on his way out. The 52-year-old former New Hampshire governor had come under increasing criticism for his role in what they saw as ineffective White House action on the faltering economy.

Speculation immediately centered on Transportaion Secretary Samuel K. Skinner as a likely successor, although the White House said no decision had been made.

One GOP congressional source called the decision to give Skinner the job "definite but not official."

Sununu handed Bush a five-page, handwritten resignation note on Air Force One while Bush was on a trip to Florida and Mississippi.

Bush accepted the resignation, effective Dec. 15, and said in a statement that Sununu would remain as a counselor with cabinet rank through March 1.

Later, standing beside Sununu on Air Force One, Bush told reporters "He has taken a lot of hard shots that would have landed on my chin."

Sununu noted that Bush was heading into his reelection campaign and said, "He doesn't need an extra political target folks will be shooting out."

Administration and Republican sources said they expected Skinner, a close political ally of the President who played an active role in his 1988 election effort, to get the top White House staff job.

White House spokeswoman Judy Smith said that as far as she knew, Bush had not offered Skinner the job.

Skinner is well-respected by other Cabinet members, GOP members of Congress and Republican campaign workers.

Speculation that he would get the post was fueled by revelations that he had a private dinner with the president on Sunday, and breakfast at the White House with Bush's son and chief political trouble shooter, George W. Bush.

It was Bush's eldest son who delivered the bad news to Sununu last Wednesday that there was wide opposition to him among Bush's top advisers, administration and Republican sources said Tuesday.

In his letter, Sununu said that until recently he had been convinced he could be a strong contributor to Bush's efforts.

"But in politics, especially during the seasons of a political campaign, perceptions that can be effectively dealt with at other times can be converted into real political negatives," Sununu wrote.

"And I would never want to be not contributing positively , much less than be a drag on your success."

Bush wrote to Sununu, "it is with great reluctance, regret and a sense of personal loss that I accept your resignation as chief of

Cambodian factions compromise

By NATE THAYER
Associated Press

PATTAYA, Thailand — The four Cambodian factions reached a compromise agreement yesterday on providing security for Khmer Rouge leaders, who were driven out of Cambodia last week by an angry mob.

"We have settled all the problems," Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen told reporters.

His announcement came after daylong talks involving the Cambodians, U.N. representatives and the five world powers that brokered the peace accord that formally halted 13 years of civil war.

Asked when the Khmer Rouge would return to Cambodia, Hen Sun said: "Within the next few days. You can be sure of that. The Khmer Rouge have agreed to Phnom Penh."

Two leaders of the Communist Khmer Rouge were beaten, and one of them was nearly lynched, on Nov. 27 by a mob that broke into their villa in Phnom Penh and forced them to flee to Thailand.

The attackers were seeking revenge for massacres of hundreds of thousands of their relatives during the 1975-78 Khmer Rouge rule, which attempted to turn Cambodia into an agrarian utopia.

Vietnam invaded Cambodia in late 1978, ousted the Khmer Rouge and installed a new government in Phnom Penh.

As Cambodia's largest guerilla group, the Khmer Rouge is a key part of efforts to bring peace to Cambodia. The other factions are rebels under Prince Norodom Ranariddh, the non-communist Khmer People's National Liberation Front and the government, which still is backed by Vietnam.

The factions agreed that the Khmer Rouge delegation will be housed in Phnom Penh in the compound of the Supreme National Council, according to sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The meeting was called by council chairman Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Ranariddh's father, to resolve the Khmer Rouge security issue.

Alleged mob boss enters guilty plea

By TONY ROGERS
Associated Press

BOSTON — A former reputed mob boss in New England stunned a federal court Tuesday when he pleaded guilty to racketeering and conspiracy charges but then said he wouldn't admit to being in the Mafia.

U.S. District Judge Mark Wolf accepted the pleas from Raymond J. "Junior" Patriarca and scheduled sentencing for Feb. 18.

Patriarca was one of 21 accused mobsters indicted in March 1990, after federal authorities obtained a secretly taped Mafia blood initiation ceremony that confirmed an underworld of solemn oaths and codes of silence.

Patriarca allegedly presided over the ceremony, which was held in a house in suburban Medford in October 1989 and recorded by the FBI.

According to the tape, the mobsters fussed over the seating arrangement of a buffet lunch before inductees had their trigger fingers cut for a blood oath.

Patriarca, 46 and ailing from bladder cancer, took the witness stand Tuesday in Federal court to enter his pleas as Wolf read the seven counts against him.

But at one point Patriarca told the judge, "By admitting my guilt I am not admitting membership in the mafia."

"I had not anticipated that answer," Wolf admitted.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jeffrey Auerhahn quickly objected that Wolf could not accept the guilty pleas without Patriara's admission to being a member of La Cosa Nostra, or the Mafia.

After a brief recess, Wolf decided to accept the pleas, based on the weight of the evidence against them, and the fact that Patriarca had admitted to being part of the criminal enterprise outlined in the indictments.

"He had tendered a plea which is a strict guilty plea," Wolf said of Patriarca. "It's in the interests of administration of justice to accept this plea."

The charges against Patriarca include racketeering, conspiracy and crossing state lines to further unlawful activities. Patriarca faces a maximum of 65 years in prison and $1.7 million in fines.

Charges against some of his associates included murder, kidnapping, drug trafficking, gambling, obstruction of justice, and witness intimidation.

Eight Patriarca members and associates were convicted in August, including three found guily in the 1989 slaying of William "The Wild Guy" Grasso, the family's feared boss

A Tower Library check-out desk employee was assaulted by a male person last Friday evening. Police said he became "irate" when he was informed he couldn't check out his books because the library computer was down.

Security officers patrolling the Fine Arts Center last Friday saw several people enter the building. After the police arrived, five Amherst men were arrested and charged with breaking in with intent to commit a felony.

Stephen C. Pearlstein, 18, Andrew C. Winternitz, 19, Gabriel F. Johnson, 19, Neil P. Carpenter, 18 and Jeremy B. Holstein, 19, were all arrested.

A woman reported to the police on Monday evening a man masturbating in front of her on the 20th floor of the Tower Library.

A studded bracelet was confiscated from a male subject last Wednesday evening because it is illegal, police said. The bracelet will be destroyed.

BURGLARY:

University staff workers in the Hamlin Residence Hall reported to the police on Friday morning a lock broken from a Janitor's room and a reciprocating saw stolen.

The estimated value of the saw is $300.

VANDALISM:

Housing staff reported to police Friday morning slashed tires on two Housing vans. The estimated value of damage is $250.

Tax resister evicted and arrested

Resident of Colrain protests U.S. military policy

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — Federal authorities today evicted and arrested a Colrain tax resister who refused to pay income taxes since 1977 in protest of U.S. military policy.

His backer quickly vowed to reoccupy the home Wednesday.

Randy Kehler, 47, was arrested this morning for continuing to live in the house, which the U.S. Internal Revenue Service legally seized in March 1989 for non-payment of taxes.

Federal marshals and local authorities arrived around 8:30 a.m. and padlocked the house before leaving, according to Mark Link, a member of the War Refusers Support Committee in nearby Deerfield.

The U.S. attorney's office said Kehler was scheduled to appear in federal court later today in Springfield. However, a spokeswoman for the office said it would make no comment on the case until then.

A court spokesman said Kehler was expected to face civil contempt charges before U.S. District Judge Frank Freedman.

Link said Kehler's backers plan a series of reoccupations of the house in the northern Berkshires starting Wednesday morning.

"Their intention is to reenter the house," she said. "What way they will do that — whether they will cut locks or get in through a window — its not clear how they will do it yet."

Kehler and his wife, Betsy Corner, have refused to pay about $45,000 in federal taxes since 1977 to protest American military actions in Nicaragua, El Salvador, Panama and Iraq. "It's no different than if the Mafia demanded money from us to buy guns to go shoot people," Kehler said in an earlier interview.

Instead of paying their U.S. taxes, the couple has contributed the money to groups that help war victims, shelter the homeless, and perform other charitable work. The pair does pay state and local taxes.

Corner and the couple's 13-year-old daughter were not at home when the authorities arrived today.

Nominee for USGA discusses Shoal Creek

By ED GOLDEN
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mass — The first black nominated to the governing body of American golf says his name wouldn't have been put up if it had not been for the membership uproar at Shoal Creek during the 1990 PGA Tournament.

"My nomination was a result of Shoal Creek," said John Merchant, adding that a black probably would not have been nominated to the board of the United States Golf Association for another five to 10 years without the controversy at the private club in Birmingham, Ala.

And Merchant said he doesn't expect much progress to occur from Shoal Creek when it comes to opening up country club membership around the country.

"I'm not optimistc about that," Merchant said in a speech Tuesday to the Associated Press Sports Editors Northeast Region meeting. "I don't think there's going to be any great outflow."

The nomination of Merchant, an attorney in New Britain, Conn., is expected to be approved by the USGA in January. It would be the latest in several firsts for Merchant, 58. He was the first African-American to graduate from the University of Virginia Law School and he also helped break the color barrier at the Rolling Hills Country Club in Wilton, Conn., in the mid-1970s. Merchant said the issue of color would no longer exist if country clubs dropped it as a membership consideration. He said that even so it would probably have little impact on black membership.

"If you were to open up every country club in Connecticut and Massachusetts most would probably not have any black members," he said. "Most blacks would not be able to afford the membership fees."

Referring again to Shoal Creek, which eventually did admit a black member, Merchant wondered why a person living in Birmingham would want to be a member of the exclusive club.

"If they are accepted they need to put 20 big ones on the table and that just gets you in the front door," said Merchant, who started playing golf when he was 26 and in the Navy.

He said the only minority he has nominated for membership in Rolling Hills was rejected after a questionable rules change by the club's governing council, but he admitted he remains a member in part for business considerations.

"It's been good business for me, I have not broken tradition in that respect," said Merchant, referring to the business contacts he has made through golf. "I paid for the cost of my membership out of that business and also made a tidy profit. If I didn't have that business motivation I would not belong. It costs too darn much money."

As a member of the USGA executive committee Merchant said he hoped to promote amateur golf at the state and local level.

"That's the part I hope to change. A lot of the important stuff happens at the state level," he said.

Merchant said he also hopes to see more open participation on the Walker Cup and Curtis Cup amateur teams.

"If you can tee it up, keep it on the fairway, and get it in the hole, that's what decides who gets on the teams," he said. Merchant, who sports a handicap of six, said he was attracted to golf because of the need to observe the rules. "No matter what the rule is that's what you play by."

With that in mind, Merchant said one of the changes he would work for at the national level would be "allowing golfers to repair spike marks around the cup.

"That's one of the things I will make my mission," he said. "But I don't know if I will ever be able to say to you 'Mission accomplished.'" in Connecticut. Six others await trial in Boston. Six others pleaded guilty earlier in return for reduced sentences.

Authorities say the Patriarca family, based in Providence, R.I., has controlled organized crime rackets in New England since the 1940s. The FBI estimated that at its peak during the 1970s, the family had more than 100 members and active associates.

Patriarca is believed to have inherited control of the family in 1984 following the death of his father, Raymond L.S. Patriarca, and was apparently demoted after his indictment.

Wolf wrote in an earlier ruling that Patriarca was "a reluctant and ineffective mafia boss ... and that he has no penchant or personal aptitude for violence."

Editorial/Opinion

The needy won't disappear when the holidays are over

With the holiday season already upon us I feel that it is my obligation to bring people down off of their cloud and tell them about reality. I do not intend to ruin your holiday cheer, but rather make you appreciate it a little bit more.

Although some of you might wonder who am I to tell you what to do or how to feel, just stop and take a minute to read on. You might become enlightened, and actually learn something from this column. There is a slim chance you won't, but then this is the U.S.A. and you are well entitled to your narrow-minded opinion. The season of giving begins, by my estimation, about two weeks before Thanksgiving. For the most part everybody begins to think about Christmas, Hannukah and all the neat gifts they are going to receive. Also about this time people begin to think about the needy.

This is the time of year that most of us, including myself, begin to become self-conscious about the needs of the less fortunate. Suddenly we have an urge and are compelled to give our time and money to those who are in need. The mass media does not help very much, and is much to blame for this false sense of happiness.

Each year they inundate us with stories about people who give up their precious time to help spread some cheer to those who are in destitute situations. These stories are supposed to make us feel good. People helping people, this is the "true American way."

After watching one of these heart warming stories, you might find it in your heart to send off ten dollars to some organization that Sally Struthers is promoting on television. Boy, you think to yourself, "I really am making a difference." If you truly believe this, then you are narrow-minded.

Mark Preston

For two months out of the year charity seems to reign throughout the world. We all begin to give to those less fortunate. But have you ever wondered about what happens to these people the other 10 months of the year?

If you think they go away, you are indeed ignorant. But I am sure most of you don't, although some of you I wonder about. I had a conversation with a friend of mine over Thanksgiving. It dealt mainly with this issue.

He told me of a cartoon that he had recently seen depicting a homeless man in four boxes. The first box represented Christmas, and it showed him eating a big meal. The next box showed him in February sitting out in the cold trying to get warm but wearing nothing more than an old ragged coat and drinking a cup of coffee.

The next box showed him in the springtime sleeping on a park bench with nothing but newspapers as his blanket. The last box seemed to sum it all up when it showed him begging for money on the street corner.

What I am trying to say is that most people block out the growing homeless problem that is slowly taking over our country. Although I realize that most of us do it subconsciously, nevertheless it is a growing problem.

Although I am not a Whitney Houston admirer, she did say one thing that I feel says it all. Her quote went something like this: "If everybody was to give two hours of their time to a charity the world would be a better place."

I guess if this quote were to come true we would be living in a Utopian society. Realizing that this will never be possible, we should make do with what we have. Or should we?

Maybe this column will wake one of you up. Maybe it won't. Maybe you will realize that the homeless problem is a year round concern, but then again you probably won't. Have a happy holiday, and don't worry about anything. After all it hasn't affected you. . . Yet!

Hometown friends can grow on you

If you are from Massachusetts, or a nearby surrounding state, did you ever notice that there are a lot more people from your hometown milling around all over our beloved UMass campus? One reason I did not want to attend UMass for my freshman year (aside from the fact that I was accepted for admission only as a transfer student) was that I did not want to be surrounded by the people I grew up with because high school was so miserable. It's not easy being known as "that girl who wore hats all the time." The psychological effects of that abuse have yet to be erased from my damaged and impressionable mind.

Not.

Lorrie L. Cozzens

But on a more serious note (oh no!), I noticed that there are a lot of people I know here. A lot. A day does not go by when I don't see someone I recognize from way back when, or vice versa. And you want to know something? I like it.

For example, at the beginning of this semester, I just returned to my dorm after a grueling and sweaty search for my lost Federal Express package when I heard over my shoulder, "Hey! Didn't you go to Milford High?" I turned around and discovered that it was Josh, a friend I used to hang around with during lunch and gym. I had never been so happy to see someone in my entire scholastic career. It made that hellish day a lot better. It's amazing what a "I'm so happy to see you" hug will do for a nasty and trampled mood.

Remember all the little cliques people used to be in? The way everyone would herd around like sheep and conform to whatever one person did, said or wore? (Sounds like Orwell's Animal Farm, eh?) Even I, who was a part of a very tiny anti-clique clique, looks back on it and cringes.

I'll tell you what happened though. We all grew up. (Well, most of us did anyway. There's exceptions to everything.) Adulthood. What a concept. The benefits are astounding. For one thing, knowing lots of people means you always have someone to talk to about hometown things. What better way to keep up with what is going on with people you lost touch with, or temporarily forgot about? (It's not very nice, but it does happen.)

Plus, if you are stranded in Amherst for the weekend, there is probably someone who is going home for a little while and would gladly share a ride home with you. Unless you used to kick their dog or sibling, I don't really foresee a gigantic problem.

Maybe you are thinking, "Well, I wouldn't want to run into John or Jane because they know some deep, dark, heart-harbored secret about me." Come on! With finals and the holidays around the corner and pushing us all toward the brink of insanity, most people are lucky if they can remember what they had for lunch yesterday, and they are probably too busy shopping or studying to care about what you did in your wonder years.

Speaking of the holidays, what better way to encounter the start of these joyous occasions than to pick up the student directory and call that long-lost acquaintance? Hey, if I, little Miss Stubborn, can do a complete 360 revolution on my hometown co-dwellers, than so can you. I mean it. Believe me, no one was more anti-Milford than I. Even when I lived there full-time.

The moral of the story here, kids, is that there is nothing to fear but fear itself. I'm sure (pretty much) that they won't bite you. And if they do, ask if they've had their shots recently.

So to all Milford natives currently at UMass, "Hello, and good luck on your finals!" To the rest of you, today is cause for celebration because I am now an official Collegian columnist! I am really psyched! To my floormates, break out the Absolut, because I'm in a really good mood.

Signing off. . .

Student government urges UM students to register to vote

I am writing this letter to inform the campus community that the SGA is sponsoring a voter registration drive on Dec. 3,4 and 5 in front of the Mini-Store in the Student Union between 11:00 a.m. and 3:00 p.m.

The goal is to register as many students as possible for the upcoming state representative primary to be held February 18, 1992 and the Presidential primary to be held March 10.

With tuition and fees on the rise, it is crucial that we elect legislators who will fight for the University. Public higher education has been cut and slashed by 50 percent in the last few years, and many legislators in the State House have used students as the scapegoats for the budget deficit the Commonwealth is facing.

The administration hasn't lobbied against tuition and fee increases due to a little thing called tuition retention.

So who pays for it? The students and their families — by about $5,000 more in tuition and fees in the last four years.

One of the way to fight back is by registering to vote either in Amherst or in your hometown. With a large voting block of students, candidates will be forced to fight for education, or be turned away by student votes.

Having your parents lobby your respective state representatives and senators will also help enlighten them to fight for education.

Remember, the only real power the students have is through voting. Power is within your reach. Vote!

Greeks call for equal coverage

We, the undersigned, feel that the Collegian does not represent the campus sufficiently. Every day there are AP articles, photos and many editorials. But what is happening on campus? We want to know about what is affecting the thousands of students who attend UMass, not just the few who are regularly favored by the Collegian.

The Greek Area has made repeated proposals and suggestions to provide more articles about campus life — none of which have been accepted. Our latest proposal, requesting a "beat" (commitment of two or three articles per week) was initially met with interest by the editors. However, the Board of Editors concluded that the Greeks would be too biased toward events that happened in the Greek area or on campus.

Fraternity and Sorority members comprise ten percent of this campus and are involved in many non-Greek activities, from area government politics (Southwest Area and Northwest area presidents are Greek) to much of the business staff at the Collegian. We are actively involved with other organizations such as the Boltwood Handicap Project, the Friends of the Library and the Index. Since we are involved in campus activities we feel we should be represented in the campus paper accurately and consistently.

Besides Greeks, there are many other different clubs and organizations that are active both on campus and in the community. These groups take part in philanthropies, fund raisers and educational activities. It is unfortunate that these groups are also under-represented in the Collegian.

For example, the Alumni Association and the Greek Area co-sponsored Homecoming for the first time ever at UMass. In the Haigis Mall, there were carnival booths, three bands, a hot air balloon and food and beverages sponsored by the Top of the Campus. Not only was the event fun, it was newsworthy. The Top of the Campus was selling beer and wine along with other food. This is the first time that a UMass Chancellor has ever waived the alcohol policy for an event. The confidence in the Greek Area and the Alumni Association to run a safe, controlled event with alcohol present is significant news for this campus and may pave the way for similar student-sponsored events in the future.

Greeks and student organizations are a large part of this university. They should be a large part of our student newspaper.

Media descends upon Palm Beach

By MITCHELL LANDSBERG
Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — One floor beneath the courtroom where William Kennedy Smith is on trial for rape, 150 people are hard at work in two cluttered, clattering rooms where no time or expense is being spared.

This is the "media center," where long folding tables hold a jumbled assemblage of computers, cables, televisions, tape recorders, newspapers, court documents and coffee cups.

It is no different in appearance from any number of such temporary offices thrown together for political conventions, World Series, diplomatic summits and the like. But it is safe to say that no previous rape trial has ever attracted this level of news coverage.

Is it worth it?

Altogether, there are probably about 500 people working on new coverage of the trial. Sixteen sit in the courtroom, 150 more in the press rooms. Court TV, which is running gavel-to-gavel coverage, has set up an alternative viewing room for the many reporters who don't have credentials for the media center.

Several dozen photographers, producers and sound technicians are encamped behind yellow police tape outside the entrance to the sandy brick courthouse. They have brought ladders, the better to see over each other's shoulders, and folding chairs, the better to wait the long hours for a fleeting glimpse of the defendant or a member of his family.

In a parking lot just north of the courthouse, 25 or so mobile homes equipped with satellite dishes are sending television coverage around the world. The lot is filled with the rumble and smell of diesel generators.

"I have no doubt that people will be well informed about this case," Smith's attorney, Roy Black, said in an interview with Court TV. "My concern is that they will be too informed."

Putting aside Black's own interest in limiting news about his client, the question still arises: Have news organizations gone too far?

It is a question most reporters and editors have probably asked themselves at some point. Perhaps not surprisingly, most say their presence is justified.

"We've had three to four people spending most of their lives for the past six weeks on it, and today we have four — five including a photographer," said Tom O'Hara, managing editor of The Palm Beach Post.

"The fact is, its a fascinating case dealing with very important issues ... and of course it involves the Kennedy family. I don't see any overkill by papers from around the country sending representatives to cover it. I think they'd be negligent if they didn't."

There are naysayers. Ben Bagdikian, a professor emeritus of journalism at the University of California, Berkeley, has watched the trial coverage with alarm from afar.

"I think this is a perfect demonstration of overkill," Bagdikan said in a telephone interview. He added that its defenders are confusing "self-indulgent pandering with Serious Journalism, with a capital S and a capital J."

Another journalism professor, Stephen Isaacs of Columbia University, disagreed, at least slightly.

Egads Spock, more Star Trek on HSCN!

By JAMIE GORNSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Attention Trekkies! If you missed the first time that HSCN showed the first three Star Trek flicks, don't fret! They're back this week with many other picks and pans, so keep that TV tuned to channel 7! And now, for the movies that will be shown beginning Wednesday, Dec. 4.

All About Eve — Bette Davis, Anne Baxter, George Sanders. Based on the story The Wisdom of Eve, by Mary Orr, this brilliant script takes a close, cynical look at the life of the theater. Six Oscars were won for this accomplishment. ****

Chinatown — Jack Nicholson, Faye Dunaway, John Huston. Nicholson is a private detective who is led into a complex case by Dunaway. A mixed up and bizarre mystery, not up to Nicholson's usual genius, but a good film nonetheless. **

The Chosen — Maximillian Schell, Rod Steiger, Robby Benson. Based on the novel by Chaim Potok, the movie eloquently and truthfully describes life in the Hasidic neighborhood. Benson, although I usually despise his character personalities, is excellent in the role of a young Hasid who is yearning to break tradition so that he can be a lawyer. First rate. ****

The Freshman — Marlon Brando, Matthew Broderick, Maximillian Schell. An NYU student falls in with a mob family in this light comedy. Brando is his wonderful "Godfather" self. ***

From the Hip — Judd Nelson, Elizabeth Perkins, John Hurt. A pathetic lawyer whose courtroom antics are clever enough to induce a yawn finds that he must defend in a murder case. Hurt's performance is the only bright spot of this disastrous movie. *

Heathers — Winona Ryder, Christian Slater, Shannen Doherty. One of these days, Christian Slater will realize that there is already a Jack Nicholson in the movie business. This movie is a startlingly truthful portrayal of high school snobbery. ***

Home Alone — Macaulay Culkin, Catherine O'Hara, Joe Pesci. Okay, is there anyone out there who hasn't seen this one yet? Hello? Anyone? Okay, okay, if you haven't, tell me you don't know the plot. There was (and still is) more hype to this movie than I thought humanly possible, and I thought I was the last one to see it. I loved it anyway, despite its cutesie-pieness. Sigh. ***

I Love You to Death — Kevin Kline, Tracey Ullman, Keanu Reeves. A slick womanizer (Kline) thinks his extramarital affairs are unknown to his wife (Ullman), but she does find out. She attempts (unsuccessfully) to murder him. Some hysterical scenes make this movie enjoyable and fun.

Jacob (Tim Robbins) cannot understand why, or by whom, he is being tortured in "Jacob's Ladder." The film, directed by Adrian Lyne and produced by Alan Marshall, will be shown on HCSN this week.

Ullman'll leave you in stitches. 1/2

Working Girl — Melanie Griffith, Harrison Ford, Sigourney Weaver. Cute film about a smart, ambitious secretary who can't get a break into the "big time" jobs until she manages to outwit her sly, villainous boss, played superbly by Weaver. The ending is predictable but, hey, you'll smile despite yourself. Griffith is just so, well, cute, that you can't help but love her character. ***

L.A. Story — Steve Martin, Victoria Principal. A somewhat confusing and bizarre story about extreme "yuppiedom" in Los Angeles. Martin fans will like it, but it's just mediocre for the average movie-goer. **

The Omen— Gregory Peck, Lee Remick, Billie Whitelaw. Directed by critically-acclaimed horror master Richard Donner, The Omen deals with the coming of the anti-Christ. Who would have ever thought the devil to manifest himself in an adorable little boy? Some intensely gripping moments, such as when Peck discovers the "666" brand under his son's hair, and the ensuing physical conflcit, and the scene in the hospital, and well, I won't give it all away — just watch it. (Oscar winning score by Jerry Goldsmith.) 1/2

Some Kind of Wonderful— Eric Stoltz, Lea Thompson, Mary Stuart Masterson. Director Howard Deutch and producer John Hughes have made Hughes' Pretty in Pink with a sex reversal. This time, Masterson is in love with Stoltz, and it takes him the entire movie to realize that she is better for him than rich and glamourous Thompson. Not bad, and better than average music. 1/2

Star Trek, The Motion Picture — William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley. The crew of the starship Enterprise embarks on a journey to battle a deadly force field headed for Earth. Slow and wordy, but dazzling special effects and an amazing score by Jerry Goldsmith. 1/2

Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan — William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley. The Enterprise crew comes up against the evil villain (Ricardo Montalban) shown originally in the 1967 "Space Seed" episode. Cute but somewhat pretentious. Recommended mainly for Trekkies. **

Star Trek III, The Search for Spock — William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley. (Surprised?) Nimoy directed this film, picking up where the second one left off. No great surprises in this one, but it's put together much better than the previous movie. ***

sex, lies and videotape — James Spader, Andie MacDowell, Peter Gallagher. Writer-director Steven Soderbergh took first prize at the Cannes Film Festival for this spicy flick. Intriguing movie about a snotty, successful lawyer who takes his frigid wife's sister as his lover, and welcomes his old college friend for a visit. Little does he realize the effect all this will have on him. 1/2

School Daze — Larry Fishburne, Giancarlo Esposito, Tisha Campbell. Director Spike Lee describes life on a black college campus in the South where one student fights a battle against the admisistraion as well as his fellow students. Entertaining and insightful. ***

Jacob's Ladder— Tim Robbins, Danny Aiello, Macaulay Culkin. A Vietnam vet goes though nightrmarish psychological deterioration induced by drugs, where dreams become reality and vice versa. This confused me incredibly, and I was thoroughly disappointed overall. *

Labyrinth — David Bowie, Jennifer Connelly, Toby Froud. Directed by Muppet master Jim Henson, this take-off of Alice in Wonderland is a fresh, honest movie. Connelly's baby brother is kidnapped by the king of the Goblins (Bowie) and she must embark on a journey through a seemingly impossible labyrinth to rescue him. 1/2

Madonna: Truth or Dare is also showing on HSCN this week, but is not reviewed.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): A domestic squabble could upset you, but it also teaches you an important lesson. People at a distance may be a source of financial backing or moral support. Dress up tonight.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Search for facts and figures. Even a small shred of information can point out a solution to partnership problems. Long-distance phone calls and fax messages are worth the cost. Romance sizzles.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Remain calm and observant today. Although you are raring to go, it may be smarter to take things at a snail's pace. See how the land lies before making the significant moves. Remember traffic lights while driving.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): You will have good luck in reaching an agreement now. It could be exactly what you have desired for a long time or the start of something big. Romantic relationships grow stronger.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): You are able to touch people's hearts in a direct and positive way. Make more public appearances; they can turn out lucky for you. At home this evening, everything feels right.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Harsh words may be spoken in haste or anger. An apology is the only way to patch things up. Put on a happy face and spread some sunshine. Mate follows your lead.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Someone from a faraway place helps you along the road to success. The tiny seed of an idea could grow into a plan for great progress. Recognize your own weaknesses and strength.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Alliances that have not been going well should be soft-pedaled today. Other relationships are moving along beautifully and hold great promise. Put your best foot forward at any social gatherings.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Decide what issues are most important, then settle them. A secret financial transaction or talk benefits you or someone in your immediate family. Address your holiday cards.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may have a brilliant idea for solving long-standing problems; put your thoughts into action. Loving words rekindle romance. Marriage enjoys favorable influences.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Postpone making any major statements and decisions. There is a danger of your being a little too bullish. Less publicity and more time alone proves productive. Give a pet more pats.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): Good luck and romance move into full swing today. Go ahead and take a chance at a social event. Your presence and words will attract the attention of an admiring stranger.

Public Enemy brings the noise tonight

By PAUL DEGEORGES
Collegian Staff

Yeah boyeee . . . this Wednesday night in Springfield, Public Enemy, with guests Queen Latifa, Naughty By Nature and Tribe Called Quest will perform live at the Civic Center.

Public Enemy is currently on tour supporting their recent release Apocalypse 91 . . . The Enemy Strikes Black (on Def Jam Records), their latest catalog of Black reality.

"The word 'apocalypse' refers to the prophecy of a final battle between good and evil," explains Chuck D (head rapper of the PE), "the final destruction of evil forces. On the album, we acknowledge that those evil forces can lurk in places you might never suspect . . . even among your own."

Public Enemy is set to turn the Civic Center into the Terrordome and the show should last for several hours of strong rap militantism.

"My motto," he observes, "is that black people need fewer adolescents over 18. The point being that once you are 18, you're a man, and you got work to do."

Chuck D and Public Enemy will get the job done at the Springfield Civic Center tonight at 7 p.m. For more info call 787-6600.

• Get the feeling Reggie Lewis is about half a season away from the upper echelon of the NBA?

• Did anybody see the Huggies halftime show on Thanksgiving Day on NBC? My man Xavier (The X baby) was humiliated in the five yard crawl dash, but I know the race was fixed.

• Reports out of Syracuse are that Conrad McRae was recruited in violation of NCAA rules. Surprise, surprise, surprise. Allegations like that aren't even news anymore. A college sports program cannot compete on the "big-time" level without engaging in some sort of shady dealings to lure top recruits.

• I appreciate the fact that deer population is becoming too large, and if the Quabbin Reservoir deer hunt must continue I only ask one thing of the men and women in the flourescent orange chapeaus: spare Bullwinkle and Marty Moose, or you'll be dealing with me.

• The invitation is still open to Bore-us Morris and his canine (feline) Loser Bruiser to grapple with my dog, Bo. Bo found a new sparring partner in Simsbury, CT, a Rottweiler by the name of Ebony, who has helped train some of the great boxing hounds of our time including Deputy Dog and Scooby Doo.

• A source close to Boyden Pool claims that there is too much chlorine in the water. However the source's red, blurry eyes could also be attributed to frequent mid-afternoon swigs from a flask hidden in her desk, behind the AP Stylebook.

• A writer from "The Racing Times" was banned from the Rockingham Park press box by the park's management after writing a controversial column. The best reaction came from a Patriots representative who said if the Patriots banned writers for derogatory stories, there would be no one in the Pats' press box.

• Be sure to tune into WMUA for tonight's UMass-Kentucky match-up, when Bore-us Morris trades in the notepad to team with "Have no Fear" Tamir "Is Here" Lipton for what promises to be an entertaining description of what could be the first BIG upset of the year.

• What was the story with Giants Coach Ray Handley last week? The guy stormed out of his own press conference after a question about the Giants quarterbacking situation. Imagine George Bush pulling a similar stunt?

"Mr. President, is it true that the recent release of hostages is tied in with Israel's release of hostages?" a reporter might ask.

"What kind of question is that," the President would retort. "That's unfair, you're out of line. There's no quid pro quo. I'm outta here, go ask Sununu."

• I took the billards show on the road this past weekend and the legend of "Minnesota Scotts" is quickly spreading throughout the land.

Keep your feet in bounds and your eyes on the snowballs.

Six-foot-5 junior guard Jeff Brassow, who scored 23 points against West Virginia, and 6-foot-9 freshman forward Aminu Timberlake round out Kentucky's well-ballanced starting five.

Deron Feldhaus, a 6-foot-7 senior forward should be the first off the Wilcats' bench. He grabbed 12 rebounds against Pittsburgh and scored 15 against West Virginia in only 17 minutes of play.

The Minutemen will display their own balanced offense. In UMass' three games in Alaska, it had at least three players in double digits in every game.

Calipari said, "We're just going to let the guys play."

UMass wins 1991 Great Alaska Shootout

• Beats New Orleans, 68-56

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

Jim McCoy rediscovered his jump shot in Anchorage, Alaska and the University of Massachusetts basketball team continued its winning ways, defeating New Orleans 68-56 in the finals of the Great Alaska Shootout early Tuesday morning.

McCoy, whose shooting touch has been one of the only things missing from the team's first four wins, scored 10 of his game-high 17 points in the first half. He shot a torrid 8 for 14 for the game and made some difficult shots.

Leading 44-40, with the momentum swaying to New Orleans (2-2), the Minutemen (5-0) staged a surge of tenacious offensive board work and forward Will Herndon finally tipped in a missed shot on the team's fourth chance.

Right after that, McCoy nailed a 16-foot jumper and then one of his many off balance leaners to put the Minutemen comfortably ahead by 10.

The Privateers pulled to within 8 at 50-42, but the Minutemen salted the game away with an 8-1 run to go ahead by 15 with just over five minutes to play.

In the first half, it looked as if New Orleans' Ervin Johnson (12 points, 8 rebounds) was on his way to a 40-point night as he scored 8 of his team's first 13 points, giving the Privateers a 13-10 lead.

Then, UMass freshman Lou Roe (12 points, 6 rebounds) checked in and mounted a 6-0 run all by himself. Roe hit two 12-foot jumpers and slammed one over a New Orleans defender to put UMass ahead 16-13. After Privateer guard Louweegi Dyer broke Roe's run, to close the gap to 16-15, the freshman from Atlantic City, NJ scored an easy layup off a pretty feed from Mike Williams (5 points), to put the Minutemen back up by 3.

Dyer (16 points) managed to keep the Privateers close by scoring 10 straight points on 5 of 5 shooting at the end of the half.

In the meantime, McCoy was doing his best to turn the game into a rout. He connected on three outside jumpers, one with :03 remaining, giving the Minutemen a 33-24 halftime lead.

The Minutemen shot 64 percent from the floor in the first half, 54.9 for the game. New Orleans shot 53.3 percent in the first half, but were outrebounded 13-7.

Harper Williams did a commendable job, holding Johnson to just 12 points, while netting 12 points of his own. And Herndon scored 11 points while New Orleans' Melvin Simon scored 12.

Minuteman minute: The Springfield Union News reported Sunday that UMass coach John Calipari is rumored to be in line for a head coaching job at Syracuse if Jim Boeheim leaves for a Big Eight school.

McCoy was named the tournament's Most Outstanding Player. Harper Williams was also named to the All-Tournament Team.

Tony Barbee was named the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week for this past week's 15.3 points per game, 8.3 rebounds per game performance in the first four games.

The latest Associated Press poll has the Minutemen tied for 33rd, one spot ahead of where they were last week.

The Minutemen face yet another NCAA Tournament team from last year, this Saturday when they host Xavier (7 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage).

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

After a 12-hour journey to Alaska, three grueling games in the Great Alaska Shootout, and a 4 a.m.-ten-hour flight and bus ride to Lexington, KY yesterday, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team enters tonight's game (8 p.m.) against Rick Pitino's University of Kentucky Wildcats, the 14th ranked team in the nation, as considerable underdogs.

In addition, the Minutemen (5-0) will be playing their fourth consecutive game on the road and must overcome a raucous, 22,000-strong Rupp Arena crowd and Kentucky's explosive 3-point shooting.

In two games, Kentucky has launched 68 3-pointers and landed 23, including 16 in its season opening 106-80 win over West Virginia.

However, UMass is coming off one of its most convincing outings, an impressive 68-56 victory against the University of New Orleans to win the Great Alaska Shootout, which has UMass basketball fans talking upset.

Whatever the case, the Minutemen will be battling all the odds. But, that doesn't concern UMass coach John Calipari.

"I have no preconceived notions about the game," Calipari said. "We'll just see what happens."

But, what could happen . . .

The Wildcats (1-1) have had 11 days to prepare for the game and are looking to rebound from their 85-67 upset loss to Pittsburgh at Rupp Arena in the first round of the preseason National Invitational Tournament. The loss to Pittsburgh snapped a 21-game home winning streak dating back to last season.

Six-foot-eight sophomore forward Jamal Mashburn leads the Wildcats and poses a serious threat to the Minutemen's hopes as he is averaging 20.5 points and seven rebounds in this year's two games. In addition, "The Monster Mash" can hit the trey as he is five for nine from long range. Last year, he started every game as a freshman and was the team's leading rebounder, averaging seven per contest.

John Pelphrey was the team's Co-Most Valuable Player last season and returns for his senior campaign. The 6-foot-7 forward is averaging 19.5 points and five rebounds per game this year, hitting 6 of 15 treys. Last year, Pelphrey was an Associated Press Honorable Mention All-American selection and led the team in 3-pointers with 62.

Look for 6-foot-2 point guard Sean Woods to dish out the assists. The senior is fifth on Kentucky's all-time assists leader list and is averaging five per game this season.

Scott fires sports shots

As the remnants from my "Turkey Blowout '91" make their way towards the back of the refrigerator, it's time to bring more sports leftovers to the front.

• Sleep is usually a precious commodity in my life, but I had a feeling that UMass' Monday Midnight Northern Exposure was going to be worth some lost snooze time. Lou Roe and Jim McCoy proved my hunch correct.

Aside from mediocre foul shooting, the Minutemen are showing signs that this could be a special year. What the team may lack in height they more than make up for in athleticism and hustle.

David Scott

My John Calipari tie spotters inform me that the styling coach has made an early season fashion faux pas by wearing the same tie twice on a nationally televised game. If it's true, let's hope there's some superstition evolving. Also notice Coach Cal's assistants and their cravats. Maybe Stanley Blacker is a secret sponsor of the UMass hoop team.

• It might be better if the Patriots don't win another game this season. One more strong draft for Sam Jankovich and it's Super Bowl time for Coach Mac's boys.

By the way, my cousin Herb has passed the torch (actually the rug) to a new generation, ME. The rug has seen 25 years of the trials and tribulations of our beloved Pats. It reads "New England, This is Patriot's Land," and Herbie can rest assured it will remain by my feet for each and every game.

Men's gymnastics hopeful to improve on fourth place finish

Team opens Saturday at home hosting UMass Open

By KIM ADDESA
Collegian Correspondent

As Roy Johnson prepares for his 14th season as head coach of the men's gymnastics team, he is optimistic that his team is capable of improving on last year's fourth place Atlantic 10 finish.

The team will need to improve consistently throughout the season in order to ensure a successful performance at the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championships, to be held at UMass on March 27-29.

The high number of freshmen on this year's squad may make initial success difficult, according to Johnson.

"We will be a strong team in the first five or six spots," Johnson said. "Our greatest weakness will be depth, the seven, eight, nine spots. We need our younger gymnasts to work on skill development for us to be successful in the long run."

The Minutemen will be able to use the New England Championships, a meet which UMass is hosting on March 8, as a way to judge how much they've improved from the beginning of the season.

Johnson speaks highly of his returning gymnasts, many of whom he is depending on to be leaders of the young team. He has high expectations for veterans Steve Christensen and Joe Haran. Both were regional qualifiers on individual events last year and are aiming to improve enough throughout the season to not only qualify for regional competition in individual events, but also to qualify to compete in the regional All-Around competition.

All of the gymnasts will have ample opportunity to improve throughout the season as a tough, competitive schedule that Johnson considers to be "a good building schedule" lies ahead of them.

The schedule includes a dual meet with Navy on Jan. 18th, a team that, although coming close to beating several times, UMass has not beaten in the last 10 matches. It also includes competition with long time rival Syracuse, who beat the Minutemen by only five tenths of a point last year.

The most difficult match of the year is perceived by Johnson to be the meet against defending Atlantic 10 Champion Temple, which will take place in Philadelphia on Feb. 16.

The team faces its first test this Saturday, Nov. 7th as it hosts the UMass open which includes A-10 rival Temple and Southern Connecticut, a team that finished in the middle of its conference last year.

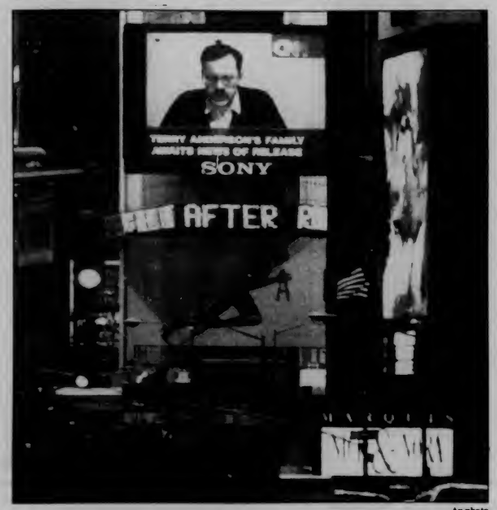
Anderson's release marks end of an era



Ap photo

The giant Sony monitor in New York's Times Square shows Terry Anderson's video-taped statement by his pro-Iranian Shiite Muslim captors Wednesday on CNN. Anderson, the last American hostage in Lebanon was freed Wednesday after his 2,455-day ordeal.

DAMASCUS (AP) — Terry Anderson appeared in public yesterday for the first time since his release at the Syrian Foreign Ministry, wearing a white shirt and black sweater, smiling broadly.

Anderson, 44, the longest-held Western hostage and the last American held in Lebanon and the chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, came to personify the long-running hostage ordeal.

During Anderson's long captivity, he missed out on momentous events in both the world and his won personal life. Anderson's 6-year-old daughter, Sulome, born three montns after he was kidnapped, was in Damascus to greet him with her mother, Madeleine.

At the AP's New York headquarters, a roar of applause went up when Anderson appeared live on television from television from Syria.

"TERRY . . . FREE!!!!" proclaimed a huge yellow banner on one wall of the newsroom.

Anderson's dramatic appearance at the Syrian Foreign Ministry officially came nearly 11 hours after the first report, by Iran's officials Islamic Republic News Agency, that he had been released in Beirut.

The day of the roller-coaster reports about Anderson's release mirrored hopes and fears about his fate throughout his 2,455-day captivity.

The freedom of Anderson marked the end of a hostage saga that haunted two American presidencies.

He was the 15th American captive freed since Shiite extremists in 1984 launched a campaign of seizing foreigners in Lebanon to drive out Western influence which they claim corrupted the nation. Many of the Americans were tortured and beaten during their captivity and many died.

A statement released earlier yesterday by Anderson's captors, the Islamic Jihad group, said the kidnappings made the world listen to the voice of the oppressed peoples and unmasked the "ugly American and Israeli faces."

Relatives were jubilant upon hearing the first reports of Anderson's release early yesterday.

"Oh God, oh God!" Anderson's 36-year-old brother John cried when he heard of the initial reports of his release. "We're overjoyed . . . he's free at last. Nothing better could happen," he said at his Ocala, Fla., home.

"I am estatic," said Anderson's sister, Peggy Say, who was in Wiesbaden to await his arrival. In her dogged campaign to free her brother, Mrs. Say crisscrossed the globe meeting world leaders, diplomats, terrorists and spies.

"We are immensely relieved that Terry Anderson's 6-and-a-half year nightmare is over," said Louis D. Boccardi, the AP's president and chief executive officer.

"He has paid a terrible price for his commitment to stay with his story. We welcome him back with warmth, affection and the deepest respect for what he has endured," Boccardi said.

The Syrian convoy bearing Anderson on the Beirut-to-Damascus leg of his journey to freedom was reported to have been forced by heavy snow to take a longer route that took it to the Syrian city of Homs, then to Damascus, and it was late at night when he finally appeared in the Syrian capital.

Anderson was the third American hostage freed in three days. Eight other Westerners have been freed since August, when the United Nations launched negotiations involving a complex swap of Western hostages, hundreds of Arabs held by Israel, and information about missing Israeli servicemen.

Trustees appoint Gordon provost

Interim provost claims position for next 5 years

By PETER CRONE
Mass Media Staff
UM Boston

BOSTON — At yesterday's Board of Trustee meeting, the trustees appointed Glen Gordon provost of the Amherst campus, at the recommendation of Chancellor Richard O'Brien.

Gordon, currently the acting provost, as been on the Amherst campus since 1964. In 1970, he began his 14 years as the chair of the political science department, after which he was the dean of social sciences. Gordon held the dean's position until last July, when he assumed the roll of acting provost.

According to O'Brien, "the candidates were extensively reviewed by all facets of the campus." Chosen form a field of three candidates, all from the Amherst campus, Gordon will begin his five year appointment on Thursday, Dec. 5.

"The main problem we will have to face is the shortage of resources. Since the shortage is four years old, it is harder to manage the system," said Gordon

"The morale of the students and faculty relates to the amount of money available, and the fact is that the amount of money is going down. We have to maintain the campus community," he said.

The search started when "inside," or on campus candidates, went through an application and interview process. If no internal candidates were found, the search would have been taken nation-wide.

O'Brien said he preferred to select candidates from on campus "because we have first-rate [candidates] already on campus."

O'Brien said the appointment was set for five years. "The term makes a neat time that we can say thank you for what you've done, and then go about getting new faces. If the term were indeterminate, it would be a nasty business to get rid of them," O'Brien said.

"It seems that five years is enough time to work with such difficult issues," Gordon observed. "It's difficult to keep the support of the campus for more than five years."

Chancellor O'Brien said in a statement that he received three names from a search committee consisting of faculty, staff, and students. The other two finalists for the position were Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Norman Aitken, who has also worked at the University since 1964, and Dean of the School of Public Health Stephen H. Gelbach.

New Provost strives to clarify position of flagship campus

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

With the naming of Acting Provost Glen Gordon as the University of Massachusetts' permanent provost, the position is in the hands of an experienced administrator and teacher.

Gordon said in a Collegian interview several months ago that the job of provost is complicated by the fact that Massachusetts has suffered cuts in its higher education budget for the past four years.

"In normal times, the provost's role is to recruit faculty and oversee academic matters on campus," Gordon said. "In abnormal times, the role is to be a close advisor to the

Duke kicks off '92 campaign for president

By JOHN KING
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke today launched a renegade Republican campaign against President Bush, saying the president has "sold out" his party and allowed the nation to become captive to a welfare underclass.

Duke announced his presidential bid less than three weeks after he was thrashed in the Louisiana governor's race. He got just 39 percent of the vote but won a majority of white votes with an anti-welfare, anti-affirmative action message that critics said was thinly veiled racism.

A heckler interrupted Duke's announcement at one point, screaming "Nazi, Goddamn Nazi" before she was escorted from the room.

Duke said Bush encouraged reverse discrimination against whites by signing the recent civil rights bill. And he said raging crime, drug use and poverty in America's "wasteland" cities was a direct result of a welfare system that perpetuated dependence. He called for a workfare program and said he would encourage welfare mothers to use birth control.

Duke apologized for his racist past, and predicted conservative blacks would support him.

Duke said he would not run in New Hampshire's February primary but would run in as many other primaries as possible. He rattled off a list of a dozen or so states, many of them in the South, in which he said he planned to run.

"The grass roots of America must be allowed to speak," Duke said. "They've got to be able to vote for people who really stand up for our principles and our values."

Duke is the first candidate to announce he will oppose Bush in GOP primaries. Conservative commentator Patrick J. Buchanan also is planning to challenge Bush from the right.

The 41-year-old Duke said he's running to win,

Former hostage praises release

MALDEN, Mass. (AP) — Frank Reed, who spent two years in captivity with Terry Anderson, said Wednesday that Anderson's long-awaited release means all former Mideast hostages are truly free.

"For me, today is the first day you can officially call me an ex-hostage, now that Terry's free," Reed said. "Thank God almighty we're all free at last."

After some initial confusion about Anderson's whereabouts, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar confirmed Wednesday that Anderson had been freed by his Shiite Muslim captors.

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, was the longest-held of foreign captives in the Middle East — 2,455 days.

Reed, 59, was abducted Sept. 9, 1986, and freed April 30, 1990. He was held with Anderson in a variety of hideouts, from an apartment to an underground hole with a dirt floor. Reed said he last saw Anderson in October 1988.

UM can't trace calls

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Students living in the University Residence Halls may feel comforted to learn that although their housing contract allows their rooms to be opened and checked during vacations, at least their phone system is inviolable.

Randy Sailer, director of UMass Telecommunication Network Services, said the on-campus phone system designed by Ericcson, a Swedish telecommunications manufacturer, cannot be tapped.

"The Erriccson system is basically a computer terminal that transmits electrical impulses," Sailer explained. "It's designed to prevent folks from listening in."

The issue recently arose when Shawn Cotter, an undergraduate living on campus, reported a series of harassing phone calls to the campus police. Because the University phone system readily identifies the origin of on-campus calls, it was easy to determine the calls were made from off-campus.

The campus police told Cotter it was impossible to trace the origin of off-campus phone calls because of the way phone calls are received and transmitted through the campus phone system.

David Wood, a spokesman for New England Telephone (NET), said his company does not keep a log of local calls made by individual customers. This makes it impossible for campus police to match incoming calls with NET records of local off-campus calls, he said.

Wood said the way NET sends calls to the UMass Ericsson system would make it "much more difficult if not impossible" to "set a trap" to determine the source of a single phone call.

"People get the idea setting a phone trap

although aides said his reach goal is to garner enough support to be a voice at the Republican National Convention next summer.

"I believe very strongly that President Bush has sold out the Republican Party," Duke said in announcing his candidacy.

Duke called for welfare reform, tough trade policies, particularly against Japan, strict immigration limits and laws to limit foreign ownership of American companies and property.

"If the trend continues, Americans will become serfs or renters in their own society," Duke said. To Japan, he said his message would be: "If you no buy our rice, we no buy your cars." He said later he has great respect for the Japanese and was not making fun of them.

Even before the announcement, the White House was criticizing Duke.

"He represents the worst in American politics. He stands for bigotry [and] racism," said White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

AIDS quilt section comes to UMass

By KIMBERLEY A. REYNOLDS
Collegian Staff

A section of the AIDS quilt will be on display in the Whitmore Administration Building through next Friday, thanks to a University staff member who brought the section dedicated to his brother back to the Dean of Students' Office.

Dennis Anello, an employee in the Budget Office, brought the square from the AIDS quilt dedicated to his brother, Richard Anello, who died of AIDS in 1990.

"I'd like to reach out to students with the reality of AIDS; they should practice safe sex and if they know people going through this, students should reach out to them," said Anello.

The AIDS quilt is a collection of these squares made by the family and friends of AIDS victims.

Anello says he brought the square here to the University because, "I'd like to change the rates of transmission and how people with the disease are treated."

The square features pictures of the Anello family, lyrics of the song "For A Dancer" by Jackson Browne, a poem and bits of personal history, all against a background outline of the Alps, which Richard had visited after he found he had AIDS, Anello said.

There are also various symbols, all explained in notes written by Amnello and hung alongside the square, he said.

The quilt has a dedication reading: "To Rich, to acknowledge the unnecessary pain that you and all of us experienced from the community that wasn't there in modern day American life. Your brother, Dennis."

Anello says he is angry at the way his

Negotiations crumble

Latin students cancel Whitmore talks

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

The Latina/o Students' Committee called off a meeting Tuesday with Dean of Academic Support Services Ann Quinley to discuss "issues of multiculturalism" claiming that the meeting would have "little if any relevance."

The cancellation was announced by way of a letter sent to Chancellor Richard O'Brien's office and the Collegian.

"The basis of our action ascribes that under no circumstances are we to allow the administration to attempt to manipulate Latina/o students into discussion sessions reviewing our demands," the Latina/o Students' Committee said in Tuesday's letter.

The Latina/o Students' Committee "closed" the Latin American Cultural Center on Nov. 4 to protest what they called an inadequate committment to multiculturalism at UMass. This closing was in conjunction with the closing of the United Asia Cultural Center by the Asian Students' Committee earlier on Oct. 21.

On Nov. 7, in support of the centers' closings, The New World Theater announced they would no longer allow the administration to use their publicity photographs as a "multicultural advertisement."

The Latina/o committee along with the Asian committee and the New World Theater said they were angered by an unsigned notice announcing the meeting with Dean Quinley sent by the Academic Support Services office.

"It was absolutely disgraceful," said committee spokesperson Elliot Monteverde Torres.

Chancellor O'Brien was in Boston yesterday attending a Board of Trustees meeting and was unavailable for comment.

However, University spokesperson Karin Sherbin said the administration was sympathetic.

"The Chancellor understands the Asian and Latino students' position," she said in a telephone interview. "He even agrees with some of the demands such as additional support services, secretarial assistance and equipment."

Sherbin also said O'Brien "is developing a response that will include a general overview of multicultural activities at the University."

Sherbin said the response will be released in early December. The deadline set by the student groups for an administration

Undergraduate Senate calls for Housing probe

By MICHAEL R. LINSKEY
Collegian Staff

The Student Senate last night unanimously approved a proposal asking the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs to investigate the behavior of the Director and Associate Director of Housing Services. The proposal reflected widespread Senate dissatisfaction with several housing policies.

Senate Speaker Bob Monaghan, who proposed the motion, said Vice Chancellor Jo-Anne Vanin must improve supervision of various University departments, specifically housing.

"I would like to see the Vice Chancellor's office take a more active role in the actions of her divisions," Monaghan said. "Housing has a lot of problems. A lot of those problems stem from the people in charge of Housing."

Monaghan's proposal asks Vanin to investigate housing policies and report her findings to the Senate. It also asks for an investigation of the behavior of Joseph Zannini, Director of Housing Services, and his associate, Larry Moneta.

"These two individuals have not exactly been dealing straight with students," said Monaghan.

"They have, at times, promoted things that do break the law, without question

Program gets grads teaching jobs

The Teach for America program has a 1591 University of Massachusetts Art Education alumna currently teaching at a high school in a rural section of Louisiana.

#6 OF THE TOP TEN USES FOR THE COLLEGIAN — We know you read it so just admit it. Now we know where you read it too. We're not above a little bathroom humor.

Carolyn Ayers, who was placed by the program in Louisiana, describes the Southern state as a place with not much more than sugar cane, chemical factories and alligators. Ayers said she joined Teach For America because she wanted to "Give back to people who I felt might not have the same opportunities I had."

Teach For America is a program which recruits college graduates, trains them to teach, and places them at schools suffering from budget cuts and teacher shortages.

Ayers is in her first year, teaching special education at Assumption Parish High School. She said the district she teaches in has a relatively high illiteracy rate."

Although Ayers majored in Art Education, Teach for America does not require its applicants to have a background in education, she said.

A graduate can apply to teach regardless of their major, although bilingual speakers, people of color and math, science and foreign language majors are in great demand, according to Ayers.

Recruits go through an intense six-week training program which occurs in the summer before they begin their two-year teaching commitment, she said.

The training is tuition-free and Teach For America pays for transportation to the training sessions, room and board, academic materials and transportation to the site where the graduate will be teaching, she added.

Teach For America teachers are usually paid the same salaries as other first-year teachers, which can range anywhere from about $15,000 to $32,000 dollars a year, she said. Also, health benefits are included and student loans can sometimes be deferred or cancelled.

Teach For America was founded in 1989 by a group of recent college graduates. It is the result of the vision that founder Wendy Kopp planned out in her senior thesis, said Ayers

"We will not have a first class education system as long as the public views teaching as downwardly mobile," Kopp said.

"Teach For America is working to show the public that thousands of outstanding individuals are competing to enter the profession of teaching, and that they are finding it incredibly challenging," Kopp explained.

Homophobic death threats haunt student

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

"If I ever came into contact with a faggot I'd kill him. I'd break into your room and make sure you'd never see the light of day again."

Shawn Cotter, an openly bisexual undergraduate living on-campus, says he received this death threat at approximately 6:15 a.m. Nov. 2. He said this is the seventh in a series of nine harassing phone calls he has received since September.

Cotter, who sits on the Steering Committee for the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance, said the death threat "shook" him up and made him angry.

"Just because I speak up for my rights as a bisexual man doesn't warrant this kind of attack," Cotter said.

Earlier this semester Larry Moneta, associate director for residential education, said homophubic harassment in the residence halls is a growing epidemic. But according to statistics gathered by the Program for Gay Lesbian Bisexual Concerns, the number of homophobic incidents reported this fall "is about the same" as last semester, according to Director Felice Yeskel.

"I don't see a huge amount of phone harassment happening," Yeskel said, noting written harassment seemed more prevalent this semester.

Campus police, The Program, and the Dean of Student's Office often feel frustrated about anonymous harassment, Yeskel said, because although "we all want to act on these matters," the investigations often lead to dead ends because perpetrators cannot be identified.

The first of the harassing phone calls received by Cotter occurred during the third week of September, he said, and was clearly intended to harass him because of his sexual orientation.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist, and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Clarifying the letter policy: no reason to be dishonest

Everyone has opinions.

When a letter is submitted to the Editorial/Opinion desk, it is taken on the assumption that not only is the letter a true representation of opinion, but that the signature's attached to it are real and also in agreement of the contents of the letter.

Unfortunately, there has been a rash of columns and letters submitted with pseudonyms and others with names attached where the people have not read the letter.

It's annoying and fraudulent.

If someone has an opinion, or is in agreement with an opinion, then fine. Sign a letter of a petition. Feel free — it's the right of the First Amendment, and it's all yours.

But there is no reason for people to misrepresent themselves or lie about their true identity. That is fraudulent and we are sick of it, to be brutally honest.

We love reading, editing and receiving letters and columns from the Five College community. We enjoy knowing there are people in the community who care enough to share their opinions with the rest of us.

The thing we don't enjoy is calling each and every person on a letter (which we do), to figure out if they really knew what they were signing. We hate it when we have people telling us they "had to sign" a letter because they belong to a certain organization.

In all honesty, that's absurd.

If you have something to say, say it. Don't go around and canvass your friends to sign it for the good of the group. The only thing which is for the good of all is the truth.

No one who lies to their friends and counterparts to get them to sign a letter or misrepresents themselves to the Collegian is telling the truth.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian Board of Editors

Thought, not money, counts

Everyone is doing it.

No, I am not talking about the Locomotion or the Lambada, but shopping. Yes, it's that time of the year again when people second mortgage their homes, rack up huge credit card bills and jump head first into debt. All this just so they can show their family, friends, neighbors, bosses, employees and favorite columnists just how much they love them.

Felice Cohen

And how do they go about showing their gratitude? Through the only way they know how — spending money.

The days following Thanksgiving are lived, by most, in a state of panic. Buying fills people's heads like a bad trip and the only way to come down is by spending, spending and more spending.

All year long people kvetch about how broke they are. Now they complain about how much shopping they have to do. The scary fact is, even though there is less money in people's pockets, they still feel they must spend.

It doesn't matter if the rent is due, the refrigerator is empty or the phone has been disconnected, just as long as the presents are bought and the wrapping paper, ribbons and bows are all in place.

Venturing into a mall last weekend, I watched as hordes of people scrambled around from store to store. Crossing names off lists, they stuffed various objects into their bags as they proceeded to deflate their already squandered wallets.

Somewhere down the line I think someone switched the meaning of the holidays. (And I have a hunch the suit he/she was wearing was not red and white, but instead a blue Armani pinstripe). Our society's tradition of the holidays has long since focused on the time spent with the family, but instead now focuses on the money spent on the family.

For old times' sake, let's take a quick trip down memory lane. You're sitting at your desk in Mrs. Greene's third grade classroom. Piles of construction paper, mounds of paste, broken crayons and hard macaroni lay scattered in front of you waiting to be formed into a beautiful necklace for your mother. You smile contently knowing that no matter how it turns out, the fact that you made it guarantees you she will love it.

Is this familiar to you? Do you remember when making gifts for family and friends was the way to go? When acquiring a gift for someone did not depend on how much money was in your Baybank account, but how many pipe cleaners you had left? These gifts were much more meaningful. The time it took in creating each one was set aside and special, not time spent rushing around a mall searching for the perfect gift.

Now that we are older, are we suddenly forced to buy gifts instead of make them? This seems not only scary, but absurd.

I am here to alleviate your worries. Located across from the Hatch in the Student Union, is the Craft Shop. The thousands of people who pass it unnoticed everyday are missing out on some incredible opportunities. Allow me to explain.

From jewelry to silk scarves to ceramics to stain glass — therein lies an array of gifts waiting to be created and the options are endless. Not only are there all sorts of interesting, creative gifts to be made, but at reasonable, affordable prices.

But if you're one of those people who cannot draw a stick figure to save your life, take heed. For those that are have put together their crafts for the Annual Holiday Craft Fair on the Campus Concourse which runs until tomorrow. (Be sure to check out the cool 100% silk neckties.)

So if you are low on cash (and who am I kidding, this is a college newspaper), before you whip out your checkbook, think about making a gift. For I bet most of your kitchen cabinets are packed with pasta waiting to be turned into works of art.

Don't let the fun of winter pass you by

It's strange how something as inconsequential as snow can brighten up your day.

I've had eight hours of sleep... in the past two days. You've got papers due, too. You can empathize. It's no fun.

But it didn't matter when I walked across the Campus Pond lawn this morning, taking in the crisp air and the sight of a campus blanketed in white.

Greg Sukiennik

Some people hate winter. They can't deal with snow, slushy sidewalks or cold, and they move to Florida where the water smells like sulfur and the only comfortable place at 12 noon is a supermarket.

There's nothing wrong with hating winter. I just happen to like it, that's all. Winter is a good excuse to make hot chocolate or hot mulled cider for yourself after an afternoon of sledding outside.

Remember that? You were seven or eight years old. The sled was twice as big as you. The hill at the park, or in your or your best friend's back yard was slick as ice and steep. But you didn't care. There were worlds to conquer, after all. Someone made sure you had on your mittens, your hat, your snowpants, a scarf and those impossible to put on rubber boots, and off you went into the frozen tundra, being the brave adventurer you were.

Five minutes to trudge up the hill, five seconds on the way down. You took moronic chances, flinging yourself into the air off of jumps your pals made of snow — you know, the ones you gave pet names to like "jump of death" or "the mangler." You and your orange plastic Rosebud came crashing to earth with varying degrees of success. Victory or compound fracture.

Then right back up the hill.

There was always a new variation of sledding to try. Ever make a "train" out of six or seven sleds? Or ride down the hill backwards? Cram six or seven kids into one of those big toboggans and scream your way to a snowy end, where the dog tied outside at the bottom would steal your hat and mittens?

After an hour or two of redefining "unsafe at any speed" at the local Mt. Everest, a good snowball fight was in order. At the school playground, the teachers on duty at recess wouldn't even let you pick up snow, let alone hurl it. But at home, one good snowball deserved lots more just like it, and the war was on.

The first snowfall tells you the holidays are near. It assures you the earth is still spinning and the seasons are still changing. It reminds you to make sure there's enough wood for the stove, to caulk the storm windows, buy a case of dry gas and put away the lawn furniture.

There are only so many winter days one can enjoy before time catches up and snow becomes something standing in the way of you making it to work on time. Instead of playing with the stuff, you get to shovel it out of your driveway and off your roof.

Those "snow days" you used to get off as a schoolkid when a blizzard crippled New England just don't exist for the day-in, day-out working class stiffs we are probably destined to be. The Boss won't give you the day off because it's perfect packing snow and you want to make a snowman.

As my friend and neighbor Jon Chapman is prone to say, "Carpe diem, man. Life is short, seize the day."

Get out there and live it up in this winter wonderland before time runs out. See you there — I'll be the one in the scarf and rubber boots. With the sled, of course.

Candidate urges students to register and vote

As many of you know, I've been running for election to the Amherst-Pelham State Representative seat in the Feb. 18 primary. In my campaigning, I've been advised by a great many people (including students) to "ignore" the three campuses in town, because "students never vote. Even if they promise to, they'll end up forgetting." If this is true, it's not surprising that political leaders don't pay attention to students.

I want to urge people to be different this year. This is your chance. There are a number of important elections coming up, possibly including elections for town offices with college students as candidates. (Why not run yourself?) So, register — either at this week's registration drive in the campus Center, or at the town hall — and then don't forget to vote!

Remember, if students continue to "ignore" voting, politicians will continue to "ignore" student issues and concern.

HIV is not death

As a 27 year-old former student of UMass and an individual with HIV (tested positive in 1986), I feel obliged to comment on Mark Preston's opinions regarding AIDS, Magic Johnson and students' behaviors [Collegian, November 20].

I appreciate Mark's attempt to discuss AIDS and the fact that we all are susceptible to HIV transmission. However, he fails to clarify that AIDS is purely a diagnosis that an HIV positive person receives once they experience two of the sixty-two opportunistic infections associated with a compromised immune system. He repeatedly dismisses the fact that many people like me may remain asymptomatic, without symptoms, for years. I have not been sick, nor have I been diagnosed as having AIDS.

Also, Mark mentions that we are "sad and angry over the death of such a fine and charitable person," referring to Magic Johnson. To my knowledge, neither of us have died.

Mark fails to use complete facts to help students understand how their behavior can lead to HIV transmission. He omits IV drug use such as sharing "works" and needles. Steroid use should be addressed as it covers the athletes who are often overlooked.

In addition, he assumes one must be promiscuous to become infected. I would like to remind everyone that it may only take one act of unprotected sex or use of unclean needles/works. The verdict is still out on oral sex transmission.

To scare students into thinking that one day they are fine (negative), that night they have unsafe sex, the next day they have AIDS, is ludicrous. Using such a tainted scenario will not teach ways to enjoy a normal, protected sex life.

Mark is correct in insisting that we be extra safe. Please assume all people are positive. Let's concentrate on how testing is administered, how to change unsafe behaviors, how to do a risk assessment.

If you test positive, you're not dead. You can still lead a productive, rewarding life. You can take the necessary steps to avoid the possible manifestations of HIV disease.

I am healthy. I have taken the responsibility to protect those with whom I have sex and to protect myself from possible reinfection. I hope others can do the same.

To learn more about HIV disease and AIDS contact the AIDS hotline at 1-800-235-2331 or the health education office at University Health Services, 549-2671.

Holidays bring singalongs and cold apartments to town

Dasher and Dancer and Prancer and. . . Comet? Wrong.

My roommate Moira and I fought about the order of Santa's reindeer last night. It all started when I caught her singing "Rudolph the Red-Nose Reindeer" to one of those Christmas stamps with Santa's sleigh on it.

But I have to forgive Moira for her strange behavior because she was really excited last night. You see, her boyfriend gave her an electric blanket over Thanksgiving break, so now she can be toasty warm at night, like me. So I spent the night answering electric blanket questions. Like, "Are my stuffed animals going to catch on fire?" She's a riot.

An electric blanket is a necessity in the igloo, I mean townhouse, we live in. Yes, we are suckers who have to pay for our electric heat. The electric company lady told us this week to cut down our watt usage. We didn't take this too well, since we don't even use our heat. But hey, I've gotten used to walking around the apartment wearing two sweatshirts, long underwear, a hat, mittens. . . Yeah, all you jerks that live in free-heat Pufton are laughing right now in your shorts and tanktops. I hate you all. . .

Before Moira and I shut out the light last night, we started singing songs from our fourth grade "Snowflake Festival," that fun and corny concert held at our elementary school every December. I'm sure my parents are really sad they will never sit through one of those again. Yes, I have no problem remembering these songs, but I can't tell you one term from my last Greek Myth exam. Wow.

Did everyone have a fun Thanksgiving break? Did anyone eat too much like me? I unfortunately got my annual day-before- Thanksgiving haircut, and as usual, hated it. Isn't it the worst when you have to pretend you just love that new doo the hairdresser/barber just gave you? It's like, "That's o.k., I really didn't need that $100, month-old perm you just cut out of my hair. No, really I love it!"

Amy Prendergast

Isn't it weird to go home and find out those high school couples you thought would last forever have broken up? And isn't it funny how people you haven't seen in two years somehow know everything about your life? Did anyone else skip their high school football game?

Even though I was home, I spent my Saturday morning where I sometimes do when I'm here at school — face down in the toilet — with my 24 year-old sister standing over me saying, "What did you drink last night?

I really am beginning to wonder about this school. Monday night I sat in one of those nifty cubicles on the 11th floor of the library where it is just too damn easy to fall asleep. All of a sudden I see all these cops walking around like they're looking for someone. I hear one of them say "victim." Victim? My mind begins to wander. . . Murder in the Tower Library.

But no! Lo and behold today I picked up the one and only Collegian and looked at the police log — where I always look to see which drunk got arrested this weekend. But, along with the drunks, I see that some sicko was arrested for imitating Pee Wee Herman in front of some poor woman (the "victim") on the 20th floor of the library Monday night. Gross.

Can you imagine? Yeah, I'd take that really well. I can see myself screaming and trying to jump out one of those windows. (Well, maybe not if it was the 20th floor.) And I might ever step on that floor again.

I really can't believe we only have six days of classes left. Where did the semester go? I'm sad in a way, but psyched in another. Sad because I'll miss living without my four roomies for five weeks, and I'll miss those crazy weekends up here, and. . . and. . .

Well, I guess I'm more psyched for Christmas, sleeping late, not having a million papers to write, and of course the spring semester coming up, when I will turn the big Two-One. The day I finally get to discover what beer tastes like.

Shopper finds no Hannukah decorations in mall

Have you ever answered the phone disappointed to find only a survey? Recently, I had the honor of receiving one of these calls and for once I took the time to answer the questions. The questions were on anti-semitism here at UMass. My answers were full of pride and support for the school, denying any form of anti-semitism here. Three weeks later, I look back and realize my answers were full of nothing but ignorance and blindness.

Full of holiday spirit and enthusiasm, my roommate and I decided to journey off campus to the mall. We were on a mission: a mission to buy as many holiday decorations for our room as possible. Being away from home for the first time, we have made a new home here at college and we wanted our room to resemble the holidays back at home as much as possible.

Store by store we went, searching for the most decorative ornaments. We weren't looking for ANY holiday embellishing, but specifically watching for HANNUKAH decorations. Empty-handed after many stores, I began to wonder why our mission was so unsuccessful. Santas after Santas, Christmas trees with ornaments, bells, bows, wreaths and everything else, including Christmas carols played in the stores. I finally realized that one and only one holiday was being celebrated in this mall. Not one store even acknowledged Hannukah as being a holiday. This journey turned into a quest, a quest to find something — anything — affiliated with Hannukah or the Jewish religion. We examined the mall from top to bottom, making inquiries and scanning the stores.

After a long, tiring, and depressing day, we turned up with nothing. Not one store in the entire mall had a single decoration. The closest thing to a decoration with likeness to Hannukah was one store which had wrapping paper. The wrapping paper had stars — not exactly Jewish stars, but close enough.

I JUST DON'T UNDERSTAND! Hannukah begins three days after Thanksgiving as opposed to Christmas, which doesn't start until 27 days after Thanksgiving. Does this make sense? No one could ever say that there was a shortage of Christmas paraphernalia in the stores. Granted, there are more people who celebrate Christmas but does that make Hannukah any less of a holiday? Do people realize to the Jewish people Hannukah is just as much a happy and festive holiday as Christmas is?

The quest was futile. The mall had failed: failed to acknowledge Hannukah as an equal holiday and thereby neglecting not only a holiday, but a religion and a people — the Jewish people. We went to the mall that Saturday afternoon, looking for confirmation: confirmation in the world for our heritage and our home. How can we call this place our home if we are not accepted and acknowledged for who we are?

Sixties idealism comes crashing down at party

When the term "hippie" comes up in conversation, certain images are conjured up in your mind: Woodstock, Summer of Love, Berkenstocks, the Student Union on a sunny afternoon. But behind the superficial imagery there exists an ideal. The "hippie ideal" encompasses a respect for fellow humankind and the preservation of the enviornment. Perhaps central to this "hippie ideal" is an overall open-mindedness toward diversity.

Several weeks ago this ideal "hippydumb" was shattered for us. We heard from some friends of a "really cool" party. This was to be a "hippie party" — laid back, good music, good conversation, genuine people. But little did we know these champions of tolerance and diversity would turn out to be narrow and exclusive.

We entered the gathering with a good sense of optimism and the feeling that we were in for a good night. Our greeting from the party's hostess forbode otherwise. She accosted us not with the open-mindedness we expected, but rather with the latent paranoia of a cornered swine:

"We don't want any trouble. . . We don't know you. . . If you don't like it, you can just leave." Such was our warm, hippie welcome. Our subsequent attempt to convince the hostess causing trouble was the last thing on our mind was dismissed as sarcasm.

But we maintained our composure and placated her with a ten spot for two plastic cups. This turned out to be a steep price for a momentary reprise, for no sooner were we handed the cups than we were set upon by her lackey. He relayed the message: "Hey, man, no one knows you here. It would be a good idea if you guys left."

We had done NOTHING to warrant this derision. Perhaps our only fault was that we were incongruous strangers, and only in a fashion sense. Yet their apprehension spoke clearly that they cared not to look beyond our appearance. So much for the "hippie ideal" and a welcoming of diversity.

That night we left the house peacefully to avoid stooping to their level. Here they were, extolling the xenophobic virtues they supposedly stood so fervently against.

Death and a sense of loss walk hand in hand. The death of our illusion brought about a loss in our faith in humanity. It is actually far less a personal thing, but more a sad commentary on the state of today's pathetically pigeon-holed society. The 60's version of the hippie as vanguard of the universal community has deteriorated to the 90's version of hippie as earthy-crunchy fashion statement. Perhaps old Freddy Nietzche was right when he said "Hell is — other people."

Waste at Whitmore

Preregistration has come and gone and everyone seems to be extolling the virtues of the new "fone-a-fool" system that made our lives so much easier, primarily by the fact that we did not have to see Whitmore or the sloth and treachery that goes on within its tax-money walls. This is not to say that I did not appreciate the ease of this new system, or the clemency granted by my first year devoid of Whitmore, but it does call to mind some disturbing aspects about our fine school and the state itself.

Why did we not have this system sooner? Or more importantly, why was this system implemented at all? For as long as this school has existed, preregistration has been typified by a bevy of belabored bureaucrats, as well as endless lines of infuriated students. Here we ask, which factor had the greatest impact upon the call for change? Any veteran of the fight against government waste will tell you the desire for better student service is rarely a catalyst for action.

UMass does not think that it has to perform in order to receive. The rationale on this campus is based solely on the notion that a bigger budget is a better budget, and God help the state if we don't get it. The administration consistently uses the diminished budget and desire to keep tuition low as a disclaimer for its failure in the most basic of operations and services on campus. Whitmore waste is just the tip of the iceberg.

Since I came here four years ago, the University has offered me less and less, yet the Chancellor's salary still hovers high in the $120,000 range. Let's give him a modest base salary and a commission based on performance: student satisfaction, yearly increases (or decreases) in the University's national ranking, graduate board scores and the amount of revenue raised for the school. Too many chancellors in the past rode their huge salaries and myopic plans for UMass on to careers at other (private) institutions.

And do not stop there. Make UMass employees on campus responsible for their performance. Have the people in Whitmore work on a commission basis, and sign every transaction they make with regard to students — advice, paperwork or otherwise. Can you imagine? No lines, people eager and willing to help you rather than peeved that their coffee is getting lukewarm, and, maybe, even a smile, cathartic in purging the stagnantly stoic cynicism of the Whitmore bureaucracy, and possibly of the whole school.

Writers seek 'change of approach'

O.K. Seana, we've had enough. Fine, your opinions are opinions and are appropriately located on the Editorial/Opinion page of the Collegian but please do not assign your voice as the voice of all women because the women (not "girls," Seana) writing this response do not share your attitudes.

After your piece entitled "The awful truth about men is that they're not so awful — sometimes" [November 19], we were thoroughly disgusted by your warped views on relationships between men and women. Men and women should be viewed in individual terms, not your own pre-established archaic gender roles. Your views on heterosexual relationships must be updated to the nineties, where prince and princess fairy tale stereotypes are no longer prevalent. Wake up sweetheart.

The column was purely your view. We differ, but that's fine. "What women really want" [Dec. 3] ignited such a fiery anger within us that we could no longer go without informing you of your sexist notions.

The 90s present an era of equality. Women need not be pampered, as if we cannot open our own doors. Common courtesy will cover, if you've noticed. Therefore, chivalry is now a mutual act.

Gift-giving is heartwarming. Of course, it's a pleasure to receive flowers, but not as a means to gain affection but to show affection. Men are not the only ones who can write Haiku.

You present men with date options. "Take us out one day. . ." you write. Have you ever initiated a date? Women are very capable of planning and entertaining a romantic evening. Is it beyond your comprehension for a woman to actually take a man out on the town?

Here's a clincher — "If you like photography, take us to a museum and teach us about it through your appreciation." Oh Seana, don't you have anything as a woman to share? Equal sharing of interests and hobbies would have been much more appropriate.

"What women really want" is written in a style addressing men, but does so in a demeaning manner towards women. Seana, as a woman you have your own voice — develop it. We implore you to change your approach.

chancellor.

"I expect to spend a great deal of time with the chancellor, working out short-term and long-term plans as the University carves out its mission."

Gordon outlined his vision for the University's mission in a statement on "The role and responsiblity of the Provost," stating that the University needs to define its role during a period of competition for the Commonwealth's dwindling resources.

"We aspire to be the flagship campus, equivalent to the lead campus in other major state university systems," Gordon wrote. "But first we must decide what the flagship idea implies in the state of Massachusetts as it moves toward the year 2,000, and then convince the public that our vision and aspirations are essential for the well being of the Commonwealth."

Gordon also said both his role and that of the University have been affected by last summer's reorganization of the Commonwealth's higher education system.

The reorganization bill incorporated the former University of Lowell and Southern Massachusetts University into the UMass system, abolished the Board of Regents and establishing the position of Education Secretary in the Weld cabinet.

Chancellor Richard O'Brien said in a statement that he received three names from a search committee consisting of faculty, staff and students. The other two finalists for the position were Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Norman Aitken, who has also worked at the University since 1964, and Dean of the School of Public Health Stephen H. Gehlbach.

O'Brien said although any of the three "would have made an excellent candidate," Gordon's "long experience as dean of the Faculty of Social and Behavioral Science and his highly successful record of many years in administrative positions gave him a particularly good background."

Gordon first came to the University in 1964 as an associate professor of political science after beginning his teaching career at the University of Michigan in 1960.

Gordon's long experience includes serving as head of the political science department from 1970 to 1984 and as acting dean of the Faculty of Social and Behavioral Sciences from 1975 to 1976. Gordon became permanent dean in 1984.

"I enjoyed my years as dean — I had the opportunity to do some good things," Gordon said. "Now, [administration] is not fun in a period of retrenchment. It's not great to be in the Provost's office with no money."

Gordon received a bachelor's degree in commerce from New York University in 1952. After receiving two master's degrees from the University of Chicago, he received his doctorate in political science from that school in 1963.

Counseling Psychology

Boston-Bouvé College of Human Development Professions at Northeastern University offers part-time and full-time graduate degree programs in the areas of Counseling Psychology. Students may work toward a Master's degree, a Certificate of Advanced Graduate Study, or a Doctoral degree.

Sebadoh show a tad sedated

By DAKKAN ABBE
Collegian Correspondent

Sebadoh
Iron Horse
Tuesday, Dec 3

Tuesday night, the warm and cozy Iron Horse hosted two bands of not so cozy music, Oat Pearl and Sebadoh, two locally based bands. Judging from the crowd, the Iron Horse had 52 varieties too many of imported and domestic beer and lacked the one variety everyone wanted — Cheap.

Oat Pearl opened the show with thousands of dollars worth of musical equipment and a complete spectrum of musical emotions, all the way from angry to tortured. Lead singer Dave Beaupre does a fantastic Robert Smith (aka, The Cure) imitation and most of his songs had that distinctly melodic yet angst-ridden sound that The Cure worked so beautifully. The female keyboardist had a very expensive synthesizer with lots of little computer-like disks she liked to flip and twirl, and it gave the band a very "heavy" sound (oceans roared, mountains fell, you know the big stuff). The band obviously felt very "heavy" at times, and a thick layer of pretension threatened to suffocate the band at any moment.

After Oat Pearl moved all of its black equipment offstage, Sebadoh slowly moved in. With wunderkind Eric Gaffney on drums, idiot savant Lou Barlow on guitar, and enfant terrible Jason Lowenstein on bass, Sebadoh took the stage with confidence and authority.

My Girl is more than expected

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

On the surface, My Girl is a routine Hollywood product. It has a catchy title tune, a familiar coming of age plot, and even Macaulay Culkin in an over-hyped supporting role. But beneath its glossy exterior is a charming, sensitive, and entertaining film that teaches all of us about loss.

The Box Office

Newcomer Anna Chlumsky plays a sassy 11 year-old, Veda, who has a few problems: her father (Dan Aykroyd) is an undertaker, and the funeral parlor doubles as her home, she blames herself for her mother's death, the new parlor cosmetologist (Jamie Lee Curtis) is falling for her Dad, and she's hopelessly in love with her teacher (Griffin Dunne). Veda is also acutely afraid of death, a trait that haunts her. But she's got a best friend to help her through all this — Thomas J. (Macaulay Culkin).

Throughout the course of the movie, she predictably overcomes all of her problems, though some are harder than others. The strength of the film is Anna Chlumsky herself, making the old coming of age plot real. She displays both a wisdom beyond her years in one scene, then she's a normal 11 year-old kid in another. Chlumsky and Culkin work well together, but its obvious Chlumsky is overshadowing the Home Alone star. It's her movie, and she carries it well, even through the difficult ending.

The adults, however, sink the plot. It's hard to believe that smart and sexy Jamie Lee Curtis is madly in love with the bloated and clumsy Dan Aykroyd. In fact, they have absolutely no chemistry, and their scenes nag at the central story. The whole movie is nothing new, but the genuine charm of Anna Chlumsky makes My Girl a nice, easygoing pleasure.

Also Playing:

Beauty and the Beast: Disney is back! From the makers of The Little Mermaid, Beauty and the Beast is another instant classic up to par with Cinderella and Snow White. The basic story is a beautiful young Belle is taken prison by a prince who has been turned into a gruesome Beast. A rich and wonderful animated film, with music from the Oscar winning team who did The Little Mermaid (although the songs aren't as good) and accompanied with voices by Angela Lansbury and Robby Benson, among others. A must-see for all ages.

OVERALL: A-

For the Boys: Bette Midler and James Caan nobly try to resurrect the musical genre in For the Boys a 2 1/2 hour long flashback that covers three wars and five decades. Midler and Caan play Eddie and Dixie, a Burns and Allen-type comedy team who light up the USO stage and hate each other offstage. There are some pretty decent musical numbers, as Midler displays her proficiency for 1940s standards. she also gets more than her share of one-liners. The film succeeds in creating an effective atmosphere, and the melodrama is all appropriately wishy-washy. It fits in with Midler's two previous films, Beaches and Stella. In fact, if you liked those two, you'll feel right at home in For The Boys. If not, don't bother, it'll get on your nerves almost instantly, right up to the horrendous make-up job done on the elderly Midler and Caan. It's up to you.

Dayna B. Kurtz will brighten booksigning

By LOU COVE
Collegian Staff

When Saturday night falls there will be no excuse for being anywhere other than the Montague Book Mill. It will be there, in the rustic belly of the old grist mill that you can fall into the dreamy, soulful river of talent that local artist Dayna B. Kurtz will be serving up for your approval. No show will match it for pure passion and sensual presence.

Kurtz, a singer/songwriter and UMass alum, meshes jazzy guitar concoctions with rich, soul-laden melodies and frank lyrics that plumb the depths of the broken heart and salvage the strength and integrity of the love warrior. Her intricate, dew drop of a voice, marvelous in its rage — sometimes subtle, sometimes passionate, ofte within the confies off a single song.

Kurtz has been compared to Tuck and Patti (she sounds like Patti, looks like Tuck) and the comparison bears some merit, although she will be the first to tell you that though her sound may sometimes ring of the dynamic duo, her subject matter is of an entirely different nature. Kurtz made the distinction quite clear when she opened for Tuck and Patti at The Iron Horse in September (and let it be said here and now that that double bill was the most orgasmic thing to hit this valley in a dog's age): "They play these songs that are like I love you, I love everything, you're beautiful and my songs are more like you lied to me, you hurt me, [expletive] you."

It's true, there is an edge to some of Kurtz's work and it is a refreshing break, both lyrically and musically, from the self indulgent, sappy pap that has dominated the music scene in the recent folk glut. But her lyrics run the gamut of emotions and are not simply an exercise in primal scream. Their strength lies not so much in the particular emotions they portray, but in the poignancy of their cadence and their execution. "Remember me/ I climb/ but all you did was reach," she sings in "Touchstone."

The sincerity of Kurtz's songs, which are long and generous, takes center stage with her musical talent, and all these influences are buoyed by an intelligence that works to bind her passion to her art.

Case in point: In "This side of Eve" Kurtz slips into the shoes of the famous sinner and finds instead of shame, redemption. "Oh father I have sinned/but it got so much better when the easy ended/ You can't make me go back again/ Not till I show you this side of Eve."

It is this kind of creative intelligence that sets her far and away from the ordinary, from the potential doldrums that can be conjured in the mind when someone says "Oh, I'm going to see this really groovy singer/songwriter — come along!" Naw, I'd rather stay home alone and cry, thanks anyway.

Meanwhile, it looks as if her ticket to the big time is not far off, as she continues to develop a loyal following in the area, as well as down South, motivating some major labels to sit up and listen , It comes as no surprise, really — the guitar, the voice, the bright songwriting, these are the makings of a star. But Dayna B. Kurtz alone on a stage, is much more than the sum of her parts; some kind of musical alchemy that can't be picked apart and analyzed, or turned into product — only marveled at — because there's really no corrupting the perfect chill that runs up and down your spine when she begins to sing.

Dayna B. Kurtz will appear at the Montague Book Mill with Gideon Freudman Saturday Dec. 7 at 8:30 p.m.

The capacity crowd cheered wildly for the local boys done good, and Sebadoh responded with some truly epic tuning-up sessions. Part of the problem was an obvious affinity for alternate tunings, which I must commend as daring and innovative (If not actually based on an open-tuning's relative simplicity in playing for some songs). But the bands fascinating forays into bass/guitar tuning jams paled to the actual songs they played. While Sebadoh's studio work (The Freed Man LP on Homestead Records being my only source) leans toward drumless, acoustic-based, lyrically daring, melodic Tunes-of-Freedom, the live show tended towards powerful mellow/hardcore dynamics.

Gaffney smoked on drums, providing the candle-lit Horse crowd with something to dance about rather than sip expensive coffee and discuss hostage releases. With Sebadoh, noise and melody chatted amicably, with melody usually gaining the upperhand in the conversation. These guys have talent to spare and certainly deserve to buy themselves some new equipment (that is, if they want it). The Iron Horse was probably a little worried about the crowd getting out of control, but everyone remained dutifully in their seats and no one puked on the staff.

Though it was certainly nice to see the Iron Horse host a band that is an obvious break from the hammer-dulcimer scene one normally finds there (no offense, I go to a lot of great shows there) I would prefer to see Sebadoh in a smelly basement with kegs of Black Label being emptied down throats and unnameable illegal activities in every corner. Sebadoh deserves this and so do we, their loving fans. Buy all of Sebadoh's recordings and hope that the next time Sebadoh plays, the waiters aren't the only people moving

If you have avoided Phish because you heard that they are like the Grateful Dead, musically, they are not. If you enjoy seeing Phish because they are like the Dead, rest assured, the friendly carnival atmosphere at Phish shows endures.

The Dead-like image has long been a mixed blessing, according to the members of Phish. While they are grateful for the support they receive from Deadheads around the country, they don't really understand what they've done to deserve it. They play in a diverse array of styles with influence ranging from Duke Ellington to Frank Zappa to Genesis to AC/DC. Throw in some bluegrass, some funk, some calypso, some barbershop, a capella, and some Lewis Carroll-like lyrics, and you might approximate their sound. Then again, judging from recent performances, it seems that Phish is developing a sound of their own. But I don't think I can describe it. Guitarist, lead vocalist, and primary composer Trey Anastaio refers to their style as, "whatever it is that we do."

What remains is that Phish shows are a lot of fun. A good feeling emanates from the band and the crew. Their kindness is evidenced by the fact that even though Yusef Lateef will be joining Max Roach & Friends tonight at the Fine Arts Center.

By JAMES MOLESWORTH
Collegian Staff

Tonight at the Fine Arts Center, Max Roach and Friends, an annual concert to benefit the Fletcher Henderson Memorial Scholarship Fund will take place, starting at 8 p.m. Opening will be the two student ensembles from the University, the Chapel Jazz Ensemble directed by Professor David Sporny, and the Jazz Lab Ensemble under the direction of Professor Jeff Holmes.

The headline act boasts a fantastic group of Max Roach on percussion, Reggie Workman on bass, Yusef Lateef on reeds, Billy Taylor on piano, Fred Tillis on saxophones, and the trumpet of Jeff Holmes. Aside from Holmes and Tillis, the remainder of the group has not worked together in over a decade.

When I asked Mr. Workman if this meant that the musicians were going to "wing it," he answered: "Not at all. That's a stigma that people have about so called 'jazz' music. The musicians don't ever just 'wing it.' We speak a common language, and when we play together, we use that common language. If George Bush, Jimmy Carter, Jesse Jackson, and George Wallace get together, they may not have gotten together in a while, but you know what they're going to talk about."

From his New Jersey home, where he lives with his wife Maya Milenovic, a choreographer with whom he has collaborated with before, Mr. Workman divides his time between teaching at the New School Music department, and furthering his other musical endeavors. For Mr. Workman, the combination of the bandstand and the school has proved to be both a blessing and a hinderance.

"Teaching is a way to keep close to the music, and its people," he said. "It helps me to keep in touch with new players and students, as well as balancing the economics of the situation. While it provides an accessibility to the music that was missing in the sixties, it creates a lack of competition among players. The clubs are part of the cultural continuum of the music, and are not always a negative factor. Too much of an emphasis on formal training and you lose part of the aestheticism of the scene."

Workman was part of the thriving scene of the sixties, logging time with Art Blakey, Eric Dolphy, Archie Shepp, John Coltrane, Yusef Lateef, and others. While many "critics" and followers of the music feel that the energy and output of that time may never be duplicated, Mr. Workman disagrees.

"It could easily be duplicated, if the media put the energy behind it that they did thirty years ago, and embraced the values that were embraced back then," he said.

Today's resurgence of the music has been linked to a harkening back of those values and ideas that were put forth during the sixties. The brothers Marsalis and others have taken the influences of that time and rethought them.

"You can only go forward as far as you can look back," Mr. Workman explained. "The music is always experiencing a revitalization, but on what scale is the question. Musicians continue to grow even though their name isn't continually mentioned by the media."

As for the media that seems to change directions so often, Mr. Workman said: "Today, the music is controlled by industry more than ever. The entrepreneur has become so sophisticated, that they can make or break a star literally overnight. The listeners have lost their sophistication due to the social manipulation of different modes of technology, which have created a new value system. The pie is divided into many small pieces. So many things are being thrown at the audience, that the audiences become smaller. And while traditional has always been in vogue, moving forward hasn't."

Mr. Workman currently has two new

Holiday shopping is not always a chore

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

What in the world am I going to get everyone for the holidays? My father has everything, my mother only wants stuff I can't afford, and I refuse to buy my boyfriend power tools.

Grandma is always happy with whatever I get her, but she's the special one, the one I really want to make the effort to make her happy.

Still, what to buy what to buy and even worse, with finals and all these papers to write, when and where to buy?

'Tis the season to be. . . frustrated and in this economy, probably broke.

But never fear, the holiday spirit is running rampant in Amherst this Saturday, and all the shoppers have to do is pick up a greeting card. The card is available at area stores and with it is the passport to a 20 percent discount at 31 Amherst merchants.

Thank Jack Frost for the little world of Amherst — which has great shopping within ten walking minutes of the University and all the bus stops are just a hop, skip and jump away from the sleepy college town with tons of little shops with a little something for everyone.

Holiday shopping for the college crowd usually consists of small little tokens of love and appreciation, the size of the gift reflecting the size of the bank account or income.

So, what to get, what to get? The stores in town have everything, so why borrow your roommate's car to go out of town or wait for finals to be over when everything is picked over and you end up buying your aunt and uncles matching Chia pets?

Let's see — there's over 10 stores with clothes — everything from cashmere scarves to sweatshirts and undies.

There's stationers, florists, home improvement and furniture shops, gift shops, sports shops, toy stores, book stores and even the greatest gift of all — food.

The greeting card event is only on Saturday, December 7, so in between all of the studying, typing, research and procrastinating, take a walk into town and if nothing else, buy yourself a present for the holidays.

Baba Yaga just wants fun

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

About a year ago I was riding the PVTA bus from UMass to Northampton and overheard some fellow commuters in front of me chatting about this great new band they had seen called Baba Yaga. What stuck in my mind was the name of band, and I remember thinking that Baba Yaga sounded not only unusual but sort of cool as well. You know something? I was sort of right. Baba Yaga are definitely a cool band, and their music is . . . well . . . kind of unusual. But don't get me wrong. When I say unusual I mean it in the most flattering way. Because if this music don't get your toes tapping and your feet out on the dance floor then you ain't got no soul.

Jabberwocky

Baba Yaga was formed in October of 1989 "out of the common frustration and boredom found in Sylvan" says Pete McCauley, the group's singer/songwriter/guitarist, and they began with the intention of making original music right from the start. "Our band philosophy is to achieve the utmost fun available at any given time that we are playing." I suppose you get the idea here. So where did they come up with this name? As Pete further relates, "The name Baba Yaga was taken from a character in Russian folklore and she's a witch comparable to our own Brunhilda. The witch eats bad children who get lost in the forest, capturing them in her mud hut."

The band has just recently finished a recording project, titled 58 Moses, that was done at Slaughterhouse Studios here in Amherst. It displays the infectious ska beat reminiscent of bands such as the English Beat and the Specials as well an affection for the groovy extended jam characterized by groups such as Phish and Blues Traveler. The demo tape, soon to be sold in cassette form, features the trippy guitar work and dynamic vocals of Peter McCauley, complemented throughout by the swinging sax sounds of Andy Bergman. The rhythm section consists of Paul Marganian on bass and Tom Adams on drums. Choice cuts are the iresistable "Siberian Stomp" (with a nifty Led Zep riff tucked in the middle) and the reggae/funk workout called "Letterbomb". You can tell these boys work hard at their music, because the arrangements and progressions on this tape are very tight.

Baba Yaga will be appearing for FREE at the Hatch in the Student Union tonight at 9:00 p.m. Says Pete, "We're doing it for fun and we're trying to make it fun for the folks". Put aside your studies and skip the downtown bars for one Thursday night. Support local music. Check out Baba Yaga at your campus bar this evening.

Don't spaz, go see Prong!

By ROLAND COGGIN
Collegian Staff

Studying for finals can instill violent emotions in the most peace-loving person. Yelling at your roommate or breaking furniture may make you feel better, but seeing Prong on Sunday could be just as effective and a lot more fun. They'll shake Katina's with their churning New York City thrash after shooting pool with a few lucky contest winners.

In these days when even a metalhead will admit that so much thrash sounds the same, Prong is making a name for itself while staying fairly underground. They are a product of the NYC hardcore/thrash scene, but they make an effort to seperate themselves from the crowd with a unique sound. After working in C.B.G.B's in '86, guitarist and lead singer Tommy Victor had seen enough bands to know "what not to be."

His brainchild has received the praise of people like Iggy Pop and Living Colour, and the raw production of Prong's albums keeps the music fresh and heavy. They put a lot of faith in their latest release, "Prove You Wrong," and they're determined to prove themselves live.

Katina's is a very personal place to see a band; you'll feel the bass drums in your chest, and Prong's riff-happy jams will send you storming to the pit-so put down those books Sunday and let loose like a college kid from Hell!

Prong will be at Katina's on Sunday. The show is all ages and starts at 7 p.m. and hey, maybe you'll get to play pool with 'em!

Holmes, Tillis, Keezer at Horse

By JAMES MOLESWORTH
Collegian Staff

On Friday, December 6, there will not be one, but two solid "jazz" groups in concert. Both the Jeff Holmes & Frederick Tillis Duo and the Geoff Keezer Quartet will be strutting their stuff in Northampton, starting at 7 p.m.

Jazz Scene

Both Jeff Holmes and Frederick Tillis, professors here at the University, have well documented careers. They are widely respected music educators, and are the driving forces behind the UMass music department's Jazz Studies program, which has gained national prominence. While Mr. Holmes is perhaps better known for his trumpet, he will be tinkling the ivories behind the reeds of Mr. Tillis (and he may pick up his horn as well). Both Mr. Holmes and Mr. Tillis could easily have pursued full-time musical careers, yet they have made a strong commitment to teaching the music. In no way has this commitment hindered their sound, for both possess a maturity and gracefulness in their sound that many musicians spend a lifetime striving for. One should definitely make their way to see this duo, for their performances tend to be few and far between. If you can't catch them Friday night, stop by the Fine Arts Center tonight, and see Mr. Holmes and Mr. Tillis rounding out an all-star group featuring Max Roach, Reggie Workman, Yusef Lateef, and Billy Taylor.

Geoff Keezer, at age 20, has already seen stints with Art Blakey and Wynton Marsalis, and his debut release Here and Now (on Blue Note) displays a distinct style that should lead to a promising career. Joining Mr. Keezer will be Steve Nelson, Larry Grenadier, and Leon Parker.

Steve Nelson is the most in demand vibraphone player in New York today. He has recorded countless albums with a who's who of the "jazz" scene, and is also featured on Mr. Keezer's album. In playing an instrument which has been dominated by Milt Jackson and Bobby Hutcherson, Mr. Nelson has staked out a territory that is solely his own. His sound is light and melodic, as most vibests are, but he can also create a surging rhythmic pulse that helps to drive any ensemble he is a part of.

Twenty-five year old Larry Grenadier is a San Francisco native, and his bass violin has been employed by Joe Henderson, Stan Getz, Art Farmer and others, and is perhaps best known as a regular in Gary Burton's group over the last few years. Completing the rhythm section is another youngster, Leon Parker, who has occupied the drumming chair for Kenny Barron, Alan Broadbent and Sheila Jordan. Mr. Parker has also been finding himself in high demand in the New York area.

The evening looks to have an interesting contrast between the two groups — the maturity and polished style of the Holmes/Tillis duo along side the Geoff Keezer Quartet, still looking for their particular niche.

The Homes/Tillis duo and the Geoff Keezer Quartet will be in performance tommorrow, Friday, Dec. 6 at the IronHorse in Northampton. The show starts at 7 p.m., call 584-0610 for tickets and information.

The Bosstones will be skankin' at Pearl Street

By ERIC POULIN
Collegian Staff

When I'm a little bit ugly, it's my kind of feeling—
I'm drunk and I'm blind.
When I'm a little bit ugly, it's my kind of feeling—
I'm out of my mind." — The Mighty Mighty Bosstones.

Put your Chucks on your feet and your plaid jackets on your backs — The Mighty Mighty Bosstones are finally here again. Making their first Pearl Street appearance since opening for the Toasters a year ago, their one-of-a-kind sound is something that really shouldn't be missed, and is a show that this writer recommends wholeheartedly.

"Satan's Ska" is the most commonly used description of the racket that these nine rude boys from Boston make. Their completely unique fusion of metal and ska, coupled with their high-energy stage show has provided the Bosstones with a rather sizeable following of skankers and thrashers alike, as they have great appeal to both groups.

When Converse conducted an exhaustive national search for the model band, it came to a screeching halt in dear old Boston, Mass. The Bosstones captured the attention of the shoe company so effectively, that they were featured in a very high-profile print/television ad campaign, and were seen on numerous occasions on national television.

The Bosstones are far from a "model" band, however, and, as my friend Tiffany from California can attest to, many people think that they're a joke when they first see the commercial, or when they see photos of the band.

"I guess there's a certain amount of a novelty element in the way we look and the atmosphere of the show is very loose and shooting the [expletive] with the crowd and that kind of thing," says bass fiddleman Joe Gittleman. "But I hate to think that people don't take us seriously. I mean our [expletive] gets played on the radio and that. Ya know, the college circuit."

More Noise and Other Disturbances is the name of their forthcoming album (Taang! Records), and has a Jan. 10 release date. To hold you rude boys and girls over until then, the first single, "Where'd You Go?" has already been released. The flip side features "Sweet Emotion," a cover of the old FM-radio standby, originally recorded by the Bad Boys of Boston, Aerosmith. The Plaid Boys of Boston give us a whole new twist on the old dinosaur, in classic Bosstone fashion. The CD of More Noise also features covers of Metallica's "Enter Sandman," and Van Halen's "Ain't Talkin' 'Bout Love," and, at the very least, promises to be interesting.

The new album is a follow-up to their debut, Devil's Night Out, which gave the world classics like "Drunks and Children," "The Cave," "Bartender's Song," and, my favorite, "Little Bit Ugly." "The Cave" was featured on Mash It Up, a compilation of the top Boston ska bands. Bim Skala Bim, Plate 'O Shrimp, and The Shy Five were also among the local club favorites on the album, a true gem, if you can track it down.

So, it doesn't matter if you're a mosher or a skanker, The Mighty Mighty Bosstones will definitely do the job for you tonight. Hop on the bus and check them out.

The Mighty Mighty Bosstones will play for an 18+ crowd tonight at Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. Doors open at 8:30.

they can sell out venues from coast to coast, they allow their fans to tape shows and sometimes provide soundboard tapes for folks to copy. They have even gone so far as to write this provision for taping into their new contract with Elektra.

With a menu of over 100 original songs to chose form, Cafe Phish serves up complex arrangements as well as extended group oriented improvisational jams. Their lyrics are widely regarded as nonsensical, but if you listen, you might find a bit of tight rhythmic rhyming imagery that means something special to you. Carefully crafted and spur-of-the-moment onstage antics may include a vacuum cleaner solo by drummer Jon Fishman who wears a housedress patched with duct tape. In recent months, Phish has added more choreographed routines performed by Anastasio and bassist Mike Gordon, and maybe you'll see a pair of exercise trampolines. Phish audiences who have traditionally bounced along with the band have recently added slam-dancing to their own repetoire. But don't let these shananigans distract you from their fabulous chops — these guys are all skilled musicians. Keep an eye on underrated piano and Hammond organ player Page McConnell. In addition to adding texture to Phish's overall sound, he is an accomplished and often overlooked jazz soloist. Top it all off with a sharp light show and have a great time for about three hours (or more!)

Expect Phish's next album, A Picture of Necter, to be in stores by February. In the meantime, you can pick up a tape of their first self produced recording at the show. Phish's second album Lawn Boy is temporarily out of print.

Phish will be performing for an evening of dinner and dancing at the Greenfield Armory Castle on Thursday, Dec. 5. "It will be just like seeing Phish at Earthfoods," says producer David Caputo of Radical Solutions. Tickets are available at Radical Solutions in Amherst, The Northampton Box Office, About Music in Greenfield, Ticketmaster, and at 1-800-THE-TICK.

Phish will perform at the Greenfield Armory Castle tonight at 7 p.m. Tickets are $12.50 and the show is all ages. For info call 253-7003.

Campus celebrates Bill of Rights' 200th

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Several groups at the University of Massachusetts will mark the 200th anniversary of the nation's Bill of Rights today in the Student Union Ballroom with a day-long celebration consisting of music, speakers and informational tables.

The event will feature numerous speakers, including Sanat Majumder, a member of the National Board of Directors of Amnesty International, former Springfield mayoral candidate Ben Swan, Amherst NAACP President Reynald Winslow and Amherst resident Terry Franklin, a Democratic candidate in the race to fill Stanley Rosenberg's seat for state representative.

Junior history major Aaron Wilson, vice president of the UMass/Amherst Cannabis Reform Coalition, said his group has been the driving force behind organizing the celebration.

Wilson said the idea originated about a month ago, noting that the Libertarian Party, the American Civil Liberties Union and Phillip Morris Tobacco Company have been the only groups he knows of that are celebrating the Bill's anniversary.

"There's no official government recognition of the event," Wilson said. "There's a lot of apathy out there — if the government tried to sponsor a celebration, the hypocrisy of that would come out."

Wilson said his group, which is working to gain legalization of marijuana, is aware of how the government's "war on drugs" has eroded the civil liberties of many of the country's citizens.

The event will feature a number of bands, including The Sauce, Minibus, Free Press, Loose Caboose and Springfield-based Wonderland, which Wilson described as a promising "thrash, hard-core" band which will play tomorrow at 6 p.m.

Wilson and Coalition Secretary Brian Julin, a junior computer systems engineering major, said the celebration will be based on the concept of "edutainment," based on the performing style of rapper KRS One.

"People want to be entertained, so we provide the music and other fun activities," Wilson said. "At the same time, we educate them about issues."

Franklin said the celebration may serve as an opportunity for people to remember their rights granted by the Bill of Rights.

"People don't pay enough attention to their rights in this country," Franklin said. "Two hundred years ago, we had the Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights and the Constitution — attitudes then were geared more to individual rights.

"People didn't believe in big government then," Franklin said. "Now, we've had 200 years to accumulate bureaucracy and people have stopped thinking themselves as individuals — people should learn what their rights are and act on them instead of acquiescing to the situation."

Wilson said the Coalition had originally invited 43 Registered Student Organizations to participate, but do to the lateness of the semester and the short lead time to organize for the event, only a handful will be participating.

"A few groups are leery of getting involved because the Cannabis Reform Coalition is a new group on campus," Wilson said.

The event is being sponsored by the Reform Coalition, the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund, the Student Government Association as well as numerous local businesses and campus and local organizations. The event will be in the Student Union Ballroom from 10:30 a.m. to 11 p.m.

Feminist cartoonist says 'toons are boring

By CHRIS SHADOIAN
Collegian Staff

The comics pages in any mainstream newspaper may be bland reading, but "Sylvia," by Nicole Hollander, is certainly spicing them up.

Hollander, who spoke last night as the final speaker of the semester for the University of Massachusetts' Distinguished Visitors Program, said most comic strip syndicates and newspaper editors are not nearly daring enough in their choices of what comic strips they select for publication.

She said she considers a typical mainstream comics page "bland."

"I think that [editors and syndicates] misjudge the American public," she said. "People are more interested than editors give them credit for."

Hollander said what America is interested in seeing in comic strips is more of what goes on in real life, which is something "Sylvia" is a bit notorious for.

Among other issues, "Sylvia" has tackled the restrictions being placed on abortion, the treatment of the elderly and the many problems involved in interpersonal relationships. During a slide show she gave in her lecture, Hollander showed several "letters to the editor" from newspapers that have protested "Sylvia" and some of its subject matter.

One of the letters criticized Hollander for discussing sexual topics in a medium that children might read. Another letter asked that Hollander not make fun of marriage.

"People get so angry at cartoonists," she said, adding that "cartoonists are not there to reassure you about your marriage."

Hollander especially likes "Doonesbury" by Garry Trudeau and "Calvin and Hobbes" by Bill Watterson. She also enjoys Gary Larson ("The Far Side"), Matt Groening ("Life in Hell" and "The Simpsons") and Allison Bechdel ("Dykes to Watch Out For").

"Sylvia," which Hollander has been writing and drawing since 1979, now appears in over 50 newspapers nationwide. It got its start when Hollander redesigned "The Spokeswoman," a national feminist publication.

"It was a happy accident," said Hollander.

She said that after she redid the paper, she began drawing a cartoon once a month and became "just hooked on it."

Hollander's cartoons have been published in 12 collections, including "I'm Training to Be Tall and Blonde," "Sylvia on Sundays," and "That Woman Must Be On Drugs."

Hollander, who has had no formal training in cartoon drawing, said ideally she would like to see one thing from the comics page and strips in general.

"I would like the comics to move you at the same time they make you laugh."

Software Design Engineers and Program Managers

A meeting you'll never forget.

Suddenly, there you are.

Face to face with the opportunity of a lifetime...and the implications are enormous. Your ideas, your code, power exciting new releases. Products designed to revolutionize the future of personal computing.

Our Software Design Engineers and Program Managers are well-equipped. We arm them with everything they need to do their best work, including full creative authority, and the freedom of our unique, unstructured environment.

As a Software Design Engineer, you design, develop and implement personal computer applications and systems software using the most advanced tools in the business.

You design software on 80386, 80486, RISC- and 680X0-based machines connected to XENIX (R), MS-DOS, and OS/2 file servers.

As a Program Manager, you are responsible for the product from initial concept to release. You drive the product through design and development: specification, coding, testing, and documentation.

You deal with all the details necessary to get the best possible product out the door on time. You'll learn your product category inside and out, research competitors' offerings, and examine user needs.

If you are about to graduate with a Bachelor's, Master's or PhD degree in Computer Science, Electrical Engineering, Math, Physics or a related discipline and you have programming experience, design skills and/or exposure to project management, we want to talk with you at our On-campus Interviews. It's a meeting you'll never forget.

We are an equal opportunity employer and are working toward a more culturally diverse workplace.

Women outnumber men in American colleges

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts education professor said there are more women than men enrolled in higher learning institutions and the trend is continuing.

Pat Crosson, who is to teach a course on the subject next semester, shared a few current statistics concerning women in higher education.

Crosson said by 1975, more women than men were enrolled in two year colleges and six million more women than men across the country.

The discussion was entitled "Educating the Majority: Women in Higher Education" at yesterday's Brown Bag Lunch Series sponsored by the Women's Studies Department.

By 1984, more women than men were enrolled in four year colleges, with the gap between men and women increasing, as women become the majority of student bodies in the United States, she continued.

In 1987, more women were enrolled in graduate programs than men and by 1986, 54 percent of those enrolled in undergraduate programs of business and management programs, 41 percent in law schools, 50 percent in life sciences and 33 percent in medicine were women.

"The gigantic 20 year trend is increasing, although not examined," Crosson added.

Crosson asked the group what they though these figures meant for women.

"What does it mean for women to be in the majority," she asked. "Are women being treated as marginal, or on the peripheral by institutions? What would it mean to seriously recognize women and put them at the center?

"It's clearly a question whole institutions must address," Crosson said. "There's a need for thorough analysis of institution's policies and their affect on women. The major policies need to be re-examined to serve the majority as well as they should be."

Crosson explained the mind-set of the past has had an effect on institutions which still respond to predominant male situations and are not being responsive to the current situation.

She said colleges and universities need to take students more seriously and look at values, attitudes and perceptions.

"We still treat women students and faculty as peripheral to institutions, offering 'special services,'" she said.

Christie Panker, a senior sports management major, explained how disappointed she is with her education here at the University. She told how a paper she wrote had been graded down because of sexist bias.

"They constantly talk about men and that's all they care about," she said.

Panker said she was even more disturbed when her professors openly admitted to being chauvinistic and sexist.

brother was treated and the difficulties he and their family encountered during the three years of Richards' illness.

"Because of the stigma of AIDS and Richards' homosexuality we had to keep it a secret from many family members. Also, the drugs were very toxic and experimental, AZT (a drug commonly used in AIDS treatment) became very expensive — thousands of dollars," he said.

Amello said what really bothered him was a lack of support from the community.

"American society is fragmented and alienated — when something like this happens, it's when you want support and people around you; but it wasn't like that. It was lonely," he said.

Amello said he cared for Richard during the last two difficult weeks of his life and held his hand while he died.

A small patch on the square reads, "Your last breath, we breathed together."

The full quilt is about the size of six football fields and is made up of aproximately 14,000 separate panels. It will be on display in Washington, D.C. in October 1992.

they have lied on numerous occasions, and the situation is that things aren't going to loosen up with housing. Things are going to get worse," he said.

Reached at his home last night, Zannini denied Monaghan's allegations.

"I would like to have Bob confront me about my lying and my mismanagement," he said. "Obviously, I don't think those are accurate statements. I'd be more than happy to address Bob Monaghan's points one by one if we have them."

Monaghan's remarks referred specifically to a list he asked Senators to post in their living areas. Entitled "Top 10 Ways Housing Has Screwed Students," the list offers several incidents of alleged housing mimanagement.

"In 1983, Joe Zannini, the Director Of Housing Services, fired a Black RA named Yvette Henry in violation of her civil and constitutional rights," a list entry reads. "This decision was based upon circumstantial, racially biased evidence and she became a scapegoat in a series of arson attempts that were plaguing her dormitory. The 'Yvette Henry' case gained national notoriety and the University was subsequently sued for millions."

The document also lists allegations of repressive alcohol policies, bad faith agreements by Housing, and an accusation that Housing heads unnecessarily delayed the termination of an RA who was allegedly sexually harassing a student.

"It was a really strange phone call — it sounded like a three-party conference call," Cotter said. "I listened to a man describing his multiple suicide attempts because he was gay. It was like he was talking to a woman therapist about it."

After Cotter hung up, he said the caller called back and repeated the suicide dialogue.

Earlier in September, Cotter said his name appeared in a Collegian story about the LBGA. He said he suspects this is why he was targeted for the harassing telephone calls.

Another phone call occurred Oct. 13, two days after National Coming Out Day. Cotter said he heard "you fucking faggot" and laughter before he hung up. This time he said they didn't call back.

On the week-end after Halloween, Nov. 2, Cotter said he received six consecutive harassing phone calls around 6 a.m. He said he recorded the last three, including the death threat.

Cotter said afterwards he immediately called the UMass police who responded within minutes, arriving at his Residence Hall by 6:30 a.m. Cotter said the police listened to his voice mail and made a report. A week later they called him to check if there had been any more calls and encouraged him to change his phone number.

Cotter said he received another harassing call during the second week of November which he also reported to campus police.

"It heartened me that the [campus police] responded so quickly — they seemed very concerned," Cotter said. "This is very different from some of the responses I've gotten from police off campus."

Cotter said when he asked about using a display phone or having his phone tapped the police told him it wasn't possible to trace off-campus callers or tap into the UMass Ericcson phone system. A spokesperson for campus police and UMass telecommunications confirmed this.

"I want to find out who did it so I can take legal steps against them," Cotter said. "It angers me — It's really undeserved. I don't do anything to harass anybody."

The president of the Hispanic Faculty and Professors Staff Association, Gloria Bernabe Ramos, also declined meeting with the Vice Chancellor.

"We see our role as advisory to the students and can't speak for them, or for the administration," she said in a letter to the Chancellor Tuesday.

The letter reiterated the Hispanic faculty association's offer to act as a mediator if the students wished its involvement.

The association also voiced support for student demands.

"The student concerns and grievences are not new to our association because the general tenure of their proposals encompasses concerns which we have presented to the administration repeatedly over the years," the HFPSA's letter said.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): It is time to make a major career decision. Unless you pursue your goals with vigor, the competition will soon leap ahead of you. Let romance develop at its own sweet pace.

TAURUS(April 20-March 20): Put your drive and determination to good use. Raising funds for your high school or college can be a heartwarming and wholly satisfying experience. New romance is possible.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): An excellent day for making and announcing business decisions. Do not procrastinate! You gain a big advantage by moving quickly. Check your credit rating.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Handle any cash-flow problems discreetly to avoid panicking investors. Accepting a challenge puts you in a position to gain great wealth and power. Choose your allies with care.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): An admiring older person helps you get an unusual opportunity. There is no reason to feel insecure; you have everything going for you! Dress to impress-appearances are very important now.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Talks with higher-ups can be very helpful to an important project. Career advantages are shown. Give romance a second chance; take the initiative in patching up a misunderstanding.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Conditions are right for out-of-the-blue opportunities and unexpected encounters. Make the most of them! Avoid acting stubborn or going to extremes. Wrap gifts and address Christmas cards.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It is tempting to skip the basics when things are so obviously going your way. Don't. The more work you let pile up now, the more you will suffer later. Be diligent.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Keep a schedule and fulfill your promises. Behind-the-scenes connections will be very valuable one way or another. Seek your coworkers' support. Romance will move into high gear this evening.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Why hide your light under a bushel? Your ideas on furthering your employer's goals will hit home if voiced today. Contracts and purchases are favored. Question your loved ones about their needs.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your creativity is at a peak over the next two days. Express your thoughts aloud and in writing. contact with influential people could prove highly profitable.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): Cooperation and sharing are in the spotlight. Be willing to see both sides of the coin in any pressured situation. A platonic relationship begins to intensify. Subtle changes occur on the home front.

releases out, Synthesis (on Leo) and Images (on Music & Arts). He will be in performance at the New Music Cafe in New York, on December 20, with Tim Berne, Hamiett Bluiett and others. Call (212) 941-0900 for information.

Max Roach is currently enjoying the success that his latest release is receiving. To The Max, a double CD set on BlueMoon records is perhaps Mr. Roach's most ambitious endeavor to date. It represents the most comprehensive recordings of Roach's various groups including M'Boom (his eight-man percussion ensemble), the Uptown String Quartet, the Double Quartet, and the Max Roach Chorus and Orchestra. Yet Mr. Roach is hardly one to rest on his laurels, for at 67, he is more active than ever.

"Sonny Rollins told me that the older you get, the more you have to practice." Mr. Roach recalls.

The album, with its multifarious groups, incorporates several musical and social influences that have been used by Mr. Roach throughout his career. Part of the new release features the music based on the Ghost Dance, an American Indian ritual which led to the famous Wounded Knee incident.

"There's history in it, but it's more about man's inhumanity to man, about life and death, rebirth and renewal."

That renewal is something that Mr. Roach experiences every day. "Every day I get up, I'm looking for new things. Always."

Mr. Roach has always been successful at finding those new things. His work from the sixties, with Coleman Hawkins, Sonny Rollins, Olatunji and others demonstrated a political consciousness that has never left his music.

"I wouldn't consider myself a black nationalist, just because I wanted freedom. I don't think that's it. Everyone was involved at the time, whether it was Joan Baez, Harry Belafonte or Bob Dylan. We were people concerned with the state of things, war, economics and such. We were just trying to make a difference. We had our say," he recollects.

And he is still saying it, yet the time has come for today's generation of young people to pick up where the last left off. There are many questions still left, and we are beginning to look for answers. Perhaps this has something to do with the recent revitalization of Malcolm X and the furor being created by the impending release of Oliver Stone's new movie on the assassination of President Kennedy.

"Your generation really has it's work cut out," claims Mr. Roach.

Max Roach & Friends will be performing at the Fine Arts Center tonight, Thursday, Dec. 5, at 8 p.m. Call 545-2511 for tickets and info.

Minutewomen were for real.

"I was proud at the way UMass came ready to play," Basile said. "I think we anticipated them to play a tough game.

"I was disappointed in my team, I don't feel we played as well as we could have. I was disappointed in our lack of intensity," she continued.

UMass, which dropped to 2-3, may have had an advantage over the Lady Terriers, even at BU's home court, according to Basile.

"They had an advantage in that it was their fifth game, and it was only our second. They had more game experience."

For the Minutewomen, sophomore Laurie Dondarski added five points, while starting forwards Maleeka Valentine and Jenny Moran contributed eight points each.

The Lady Terriers relied heavily on the outstanding play of forward Jill Sosnak, who led all scorers with 20 points, and grabbed nine rebounds to boot.

Guard Richelle Van Zandt scored nine points for the Lady Terriers, while point guard Andrea Higgins came off the bench to dish out five assists.

Basile, a former player for the Massachusetts, had nothing but positive words to say about O'Brien and the rejuvenation of the women's basketball program.

"Joanie's a bright young coach, and I hope this is the start of a new trend," she said. "The program needs stability, it's always needed stability. In my four years, I played for three different coaches."

Basile graduated from UMass in 1977, and has coached the Lady Terriers for the last eight years. She carried a career record of 125-98 going into this year. There was a feeling that Tuesday's win was one of her toughest.

"UMass did a lot of things, they played well. I wouldn't say we were lucky, but a couple of breaks or a missed layup and the outcome could've been different."

O'Brien concurred. "This was the type of game where the team that made the least amount of mistakes was going to win, and we made the mistake that gave them the lead for good."

Kentucky hands Minutemen first loss

Mashburn keys 90-69 victory for Wildcats

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

LEXINGTON, Ky. — In the end, the University of Massachusetts basketball team had traveled too much and Kentucky had too many fresh legs and too much Jamal Mashburn, as it defeated the Minutemen 90-69.

In front of 23,208, screaming Rupp Arena fans, Mashburn, poured in a game-high 28 points, grabbed 10 rebounds and frustrated UMass' low post players all night.

Like a tired heavyweight fighter the Minutemen (5-1) managed to bounce off the ropes, and weathered the Kentucky (2-1) storm for almost 27 minutes.

Until their knees finally buckled

Leading 56-52, with 13:45 remaining in the game, the Wildcats went on an 11-1 run which UMass never recovered from.

"Fatigue wasn't a factor," said UMass coach John Calipari. Mashburn scored an easy lay-up and sank three free throws triggering the run which put Kentucky up 67-53.

From there, it became a game of foul shots. Kentucky, ranked No. 14 in the nation, buried 30 out of 35 for the game and went on to the 21 point victory, which is deceiving. The game was closer then the score indicates.

Early on, the Minutemen resembled the team which beat New Orleans 68-56 in the finals of the Great Alaska Shootout three nights ago. After a 12-0 run with 12:50 remaining in the first half UMass lead 17-11.

Jim McCoy (22 points on 9 of 21 shooting) put UMass ahead and kept them close throughout, as he hit off-balance-jumper after off-balance-jumper.

At the half, the Minutemen, who had trouble handling the Kentucky full-court press all night (and committed 12 first half turnovers, 16 for the game) trailed by only five, 46-41.

"In the beginning of the second half we gave away a few dunks," McCoy said. "We did run out of gas. Usually we are a good second half team."

A 9-0 run keyed by three pointers from Mashburn and Richie Farmer (22 points) put Kentucky ahead for good 24-19.

However, to their credit, UMass hung tough and never quit.

"As an alumnus, I'm proud of UMass," said Kentucky coach Rick Pitino. "They're an excellent team, capable of making the top twenty and the NCAA Tournament."

Pitino's bombers shot 50 percent for the game but only 22 percent from International waters. Even though the Massachusetts defense was constantly up tight on the Wildcat shooters.

The Minutemen hit only 40 percent of their shots and only 2 three pointers (both by Tony Barbee, who scored 13 points).

"Anytime we shoot 50 percent we have good chance of winning," Pitino said.

UMass freshmen Lou Roe (13 points 7 rebounds) and Mike Williams each played strong games, Calipari said.

"I was pleased with both of them," Calipari said.

Williams only scored four points but he controlled the tempo when he was in and created easy shots for his teammates.

"Massachusetts was a very good team, they're in the league of SEC teams," said Kentucky forward Deron Feldhause. "They were very tired, but they gave their very best until the end."

Minutemaniacs gather to watch Kentucky game

By MICHEAL MORRISSEY and DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

There's a rage in Herter?

Last night there was. Herter Hall was the only place on campus to watch the University of Massachusetts basketball team lose to the University of Kentucky on television. And the only students watching were the members of the UMass student booster club, the Minutemaniacs.

Although the crowd wasn't as large as the Curry Hicks Cage, the passions ran just as high as, arguably, the biggest fans of Massachusetts basketball gathered together to witness the big game. At times, the crowd of around 45 were on their feet and making a considerable amount of noise cheering for the Minutemen.

The Minutemaniacs were able to steal the satelite transmission from the University of Kentucky Television Network by means of the satelite dish outside of Herter. The game was shown on big-screen TV in the Foreign Language Resource Center. The noise from the crowd most likely disturbed the few students actually studying. But for the Minutemaniacs, who cares, this was a big game!

The Minutemaniacs were formed by President Gabe Tucker earlier this semester. The club was designed to bring together the followers of the University's basketball program. Anyone can join and for the twenty dollar membership fee, you receive a free Minutemaniac T-shirt.

"I talked to Coach Cal earlier in the fall," Tucker said. "He said something like this was going to start up so I got involved with [ticket director] Thor [Bjorn] and the club just took off from there. Coach Cal really likes the idea."

Earlier in the semester Calipari was quoted as saying "It will bring the campus and the students together. The students can have a little identity [when coming to the games]."

The Minutemaniacs themselves are excited about being part of the booster organization.

"It's great they're doing this," junior Lloyd Titelbaum said. "I joined right away and it's been a lot of fun. [The big screen] is the next best thing to being there."

"It is definitely worth the twenty dollars," junior Adam Radosti said. "It's great being able to see games that you wouldn't normally be seeing. It's great to go out to a bar and then the game and cheer with such a large group."

"The twenty dollars was no problem for me at all," Danny Krosin said. "You get a T-shirt that's worth ten dollars and all the other stuff is definitely worth it."

Tucker does see the twenty dollar fee as a stumbling block for many to join. Although so far 55 students have felt the investment was worth it.

"The twenty bucks is tough because everyone is a college student, but the group is growing," Tucker said. "I am hoping for over 100 members by the end of the season."

Tucker is looking forward to trips to nearby road games, such as Holy Cross, Rutgers and Temple. He is also arranging a year end banquet with club members, the players and the coaching staff.

"This club is moving forward," Tucker said. "We will be having a pre-game, all ages, party before Xavier at a local bar and more people are joining everyday. Right now things are going well and I am enthusiastic."

One thing this club doesn't lack is enthusiasm as the members proved last night.

Women's hoop loses to BU

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Even in its 58-54 loss Tuesday to Boston University, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team played well.

In fact, they had a chance to overtake BU in the waning moments, but couldn't quite get over the hump.

"They had an opportunity to win, but they just couldn't do it," UMass assistant coach Jill Rooney said. "They played real hard — well enough to win."

Center Kim Kristofik led the Minutewomen in points and rebounds, getting 12 of each. Trish Riley, in her first start of the season, also scored 12.

But the real story was at the foul line. Boston University shot 13 for 19 at the charity stripe in the second half alone, while UMass had only 15 attempts in the game, and converted nine.

"It was a tough loss, more so because we had an opportunity to win and we didn't," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "They took it to the basket strong and played well on the boards."

UMass was right in the game at halftime, but BU maintained the 25-24 edge. In the second half, the lead switched hands, and the score was never more than four points in favor of either team.

UMass couldn't break through the tough Lady Terrier press, though, and O'Brien asserted that was the difference. Riley's back acted up and gave her problems.

"Trish had an average game. I think we would've handled the press better if her back was better. We made a couple of cheap turnovers and a few ill-advised passes," she said.

Basile was gracious in victory, but she knew these

Hostages carry scars

Illnesses plague former hostages

By MARK FRITZ
Associated Press

WIESBADEN, Germany — At least two of the three Americans freed in Beirut this week will forever carry physical reminders of the cruelty they endured in captivity.

Alann Steen, released Tuesday, faces a lifetime of medication to control seizures and blackouts caused by brain damage he suffered when he was beaten by his Lebanese captors, a U.S. military doctor said Wednesday.

"He is coming out slightly different," said Dr. Uwe Fohlmeister, the hostages' physician.

Joseph Cicippio, who was freed Monday, suffered frostbite from a winter spent chained outdoors and will always feel a burning sensation in his fingertips and toes whenever the temperature drops below 50 degrees.

He also still suffers dizzy spells and has a dent in his skull sustained when his captors clubbed him unconscious during his capture five years ago.

The release of the two men was followed Wednesday by the freeing of Terry Anderson, the longest-held of the Westerners kidnapped by Shiite Moslem groups in Lebanon. Anderson, chief Middle East cor-

Alcohol regulations' legitimacy questioned

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

The legality of the University's alcoholic beverages policy has again come under fire from the Undergraduate Student Senate who on Wednesday called for a probe into several allegations of Housing Services misconduct.

"They have, at times, promoted things that do break the law, without question they have lied on numerous ocassions," said Senate Speaker Bob Monaghan at the meeting. "Things are going to get worse."

The Senate has questioned the constitutionality of Resident Assistants requesting proof of age from students drinking in the residence halls. In addition, several legal consultants contacted by the Collegian found this policy highly questionable.

Steve, a 19-year-old sophomore at the University, said he had several open containers of alcohol in his room last fall. Two RAs entered the room — the door was not closed.

The RAs examined Steve's license, discovered he was not legally "of age," and confiscated six beers from his refrigerator.

Joseph Zannini, director of Housing Services, referred to the Residence Hall manual passed out to all students at the start of every semester.

"When requested by any University official (including a student staff member) proper identification, which includes proof of age, must be provided by students consuming alcohol within a residence hall," states page 15 of the manual.

Zannini said he is "under assumption" that this regulation is legal. "I would assume that it is legal and that we have checked that," he said.

Charles Dimare, directing attorney of University Legal Services since 1980, questions the "appropriateness" of this regulation. He referred to a 1970 Supreme Court ruling "Brown vs Texas" which found that police officers can't ask for identification from students.

"If a police officer can't do it, an RA is acting in a law-enforcement manner," Dimare said. "You have a constitutional right which extends to the refusal to give ID."

He also said RAs can walk into a room if the door is ajar — if the student voluntarily offers his ID, no one is at fault.

In the spring of 1985, the Northeast/Sylvan RA Matters Committee said such enforcement of regulations places an "unfair burden" on RAs. "Policies of this nature can create an `us versus them' attitude of residents toward RAs."

Amherst attorney Richard Howland said expecting RAs to take on the role of "inquisitive police officers" is questionable. "I don't think it is healthy for the RAs or the student population," he said.

According to statistics prepared by the Dean of Students Office, alcohol related disciplinary actions have risen two and a half times from 1988 to 1989.

In 1986-7, there were 152 alcohol related disciplinary actions while in 1989-90, this number jumped to 1,236.

Kevin Newnan, Studen Senate Trustee, called the practice of RA's confiscating alcohol "a ridiculous notion."

"RA's don't have the authority to confiscate," Newnan said, adding that such policies are "another example of RAs getting involved in resident's lives."

But Monaghan said this activity often happens. He called this an example of a practice that violates housing policies, but is purposely overlooked by Housing Services. Monaghan also questioned the disciplinary procedure in which a first-time offender is ordered to meet with the Residence Director

On 50th, faculty takes look back at Pearl Harbor

By MATT GRIFFING
Collegian Staff

The bombing of Pearl Harbor 50 years ago woke University of Massachusetts students from college life and propelled them them into the chaos of World War II, said two University professors, who were attending the University around the time of the attack.

William MacConnell, a University of Massachusetts forestry professor who was on campus Dec. 7, 1941, said it is important to look at the attitudes of the times if one is to understand student reaction to the beginning of the United States' war with the Axis powers.

"It is wrong to say that we all wanted to get in the army and stomp out fascism," MacConnell said. "We went to war with about the same enthusiasm as Vietnam War draftees."

There was, however, a different attitude than that of today's student body, he added.

"Students at the time saw everything more as an obligation and duty instead of an individual choice," said MacConnell who left UMass student life to become a professor in 1948.

"The Korean War and the Vietnam War made students question the world events more as individuals," he said.

ROTC was mandatory for able bodied male freshmen and sophomores and that was accepted at the time, said George R. Richason, a UMass professor of chemistry who graduated from UMass in 1939 and was teaching high school in Turners Falls, Mass. when the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor.

"Your ROTC class, which consisted of drills, was

Group to protest outside class

Students claim prof. called gays 'dirty and sick'

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

The AIDS activist group ACT-UP says it plans to demonstrate outside a botany professor's classroom today in response to students' accusations that the professor slandered homosexuals during a discussion of the AIDS virus.

Students claim Professor Edward Klekowski told his Human Genetics class that homosexuals "are normally dirty people."

A UMass undergraduate who attended Klekowski's Wednesday lecture said during a discussion about population studies and the spread of the AIDS virus Klekowski said that "scientists were lucky to have the disease start in the gay population because it gave us something to study."

The student, who asked his name be witheld, said Klekowski then commented that "AIDS spread so quickly because gays are normally dirty people — look at the San Francisco bath houses."

In a telephone interview with the Collegian, Klekowski first said he had referred to the AIDS virus and gays during his Wednesday class, but then reversed himself.

"I said nothing," Klekowski said. "I have no comment at all."

The statements reported to the Collegian matched those given to ACT-UP by a different UMass student, according to Rick Dodge, an Amherst ACT-UP spokesperson.

"These statements are false," Dodge said. "They perpetuate stereotypes of gays as sick and dirty people."

"It is frightening that this attitude, which has kept scientists from working more aggressively to find a cure for AIDS, is being taught to college students in 1991," Dodge said.

Dodge said Klekowski's remarks were unfounded and reflected "pure bias."

"No scientific studies exist that conclude gays are sick or dirty," he said.

"It's really off the wall for a scientist to make this kind of comment," Dodge added.

"I consider [Klekowski] a very fine teacher, he conveys the material very well," one of Klekowski's students said, "I just think he's rigid in his thinking."

The head of the Botany department, Dr. James Walker, said he was unaware of Klekowski's remarks, but he said he did not see anything remarkable about the idea that gays suffer from more diseases than the heterosexual population.

"My impression is that there are more diseases among the gay and lesbian population — just from watching the newspaper," Walker said.

Dodge says ACT-UP will be conducting a "Zap Action" in the main lobby of Morril beginning at 10 a.m. today to protest Klekowski's comments.

Members from the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance plan to sit in on the class and observe Klekowski's lecture in support of ACT-UP, said an LBGA spokesperson.

ACT-UP will ask students in the class to take an AIDS quiz that teaches the truth about the disease, Dodge said. Flyers will also be handed out.

Marijuana mix-up

KANKAKEE, Ill. (AP) — What's green and goes in the bank?

A customer at First of America Bank came up with an alternative answer to that question Tuesday. And now he's facing a misdemeanor charge of marijuana possession.

Kankakee Police said James R. Bridgewater, 32, was carrying two white bags in another bag when he stopped at First America's drive-through facility.

One bag contained money, the other contained rolling papers, three marijuana cigarettes and a small amount of marijuana in a plastic bag.

Police said Bridgewater placed the wrong bag in the pneumatic tube. They said he was still waiting for his deposit receipt when they arrived to arrest him.

in a pre-trial hearing.

"Students who don't know the system at all are forced to speak and get themselves in trouble," he said.

The former coordinator of alcohol and drug education at the University, Karen Jacobus, said such policies turn RAs, whose primary concern is counseling and assisting students, into policemen.

However, Jacobus said, "Once [alcohol] is in public view, it becomes the RAs obligation to check it out."

Monaghan, who said he believes Housing has "screwed students," asked, "Who wants to live in a little police state?"

Professor receives grant for Holocaust seminar

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

A $4,000 grant has been awarded to University history Professor Marvin Swartz by the Holocaust Educational Foundation for the purposes of establishing a seminar on the subject of the Holocaust.

The grant will be used to hire a faculty member to assist Swartz in teaching his European history course next semester as he plans the fall Holocaust seminar.

Nearly six million Jews, Gypsies, homosexuals and others the German Nazi regime felt were "undesirables" were killed during World War II.

The course will replace a similar one taught by David Wyman, who retired in June. The course was always oversubscribed, Swartz said.

Wyman taught the course for 20 years, from 1972 to 1991, teaching a maximum of 42 students per semester and turning away just as many.

In 1985, his book The Abandonment of the Jews: America and the Holocaust, was named one of the top 11 of the year by the New York Times Book Review.

Wyman's course covered such topics as the background of anti-Semitism in Europe, the period of "systematic annihilation" of the Jewish people and resistance during the Holocaust.

"Obviously, [Swartz] is not going to try to duplicate my course," Wyman said. He noted different teaching styles and backgrounds as important on the impact on a course. He also said students make a profound difference in the makeup of the course.

"Each time it was taught it was different," he said.

Wyman pointed to Swartz's background in European history, as compared with his background in American history, as an asset.

"In a sense he probably has a better background than me," he said.

Gulf War hearings to be held

Commission to investigate U.S. wartime behavior

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

This Sunday, Amherst will be the site of one of 50 worldwide hearings investigating U.S. conduct during the recent Persian Gulf War, when a session of the International Commission of Inquiry is to convene at 7 p.m. in the West Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College.

The Commission, founded by former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, has gathered and presented evidence of U.S. violations of international law in 24 countries around the world, as well as several cities here in the United States. Censored photographs and suppressed video footage along with eyewitness accounts of war crimes will be presented at the hearing on Sunday.

Scheduled speakers include Adeeb Abed of the Palestine Aid Society and John Schuschardt of Veterans for Peace. Ramsey Clark, who was in Iraq during the Gulf War and produced the controversial documentary "Nowhere to Hide," will be unable to attend because of an expanded schedule of speaking engagements in Europe.

The Commission is trying to uncover what has been hidden from people worldwide concerning the Persian Gulf war.

Clark has outlined 19 specific violations of international law committed by the United States and its allies during the war, such as intentional destruction of civilian life, schools, hospitals, churches, mosques, shelters, and historical sites.

Coverage of hearings held by the International War Crimes Tribunal have made front-page news in many countries overseas, but not here in the United States.

In Turkey, whose government provided air bases for the U.S. planes to stage attacks on Iraq, the hearings in Istanbul drew hundreds of people despite government efforts to ban it.

In Egypt, which sent the most troops of all Arab countries to fight Iraq, Ramsey Clark addressed over 300 hundred people who braved the threat of surveillance and repression.

The hearings in Malaysia were reported in the nation's four daily newspapers. The Phillipine hearings took place during the debate on the future of the U.S. military base at Subic Bay.

The Commission hearings in Japan coincided with the court date for a lawsuit against the Japanese government for its $9 billion payment to the U.S.-led coalition in the Gulf War, which was perceived by some as a violation of the Japanese constitution.

UM phones can't be tapped

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Because of a production error, the second half of this story was not printed in yesterday's edition.

Students living in the University Residence Halls may feel comforted to learn that although their housing contract allows their rooms to be opened and checked during vacations, at least their phone system is inviolable.

Randy Sailer, director of UMass Telecommunication Network Services, said the on-campus phone system designed by Ericsson, a Swedish telecommunications manufacturer, cannot be tapped.

"The Ericsson system is basically a computer terminal that transmits electrical impulses," Sailer explained. "It's designed to prevent folks from listening in."

The issue recently arose when Shawn Cotter, an undergraduate living on campus, reported a series of harassing phone calls to the campus police. Because the University phone system readily identifies the origin of on-campus calls, it was easy to determine the calls were made from off-campus.

The campus police told Cotter it was impossible to trace the origin of off-campus phone calls because of the way phone calls are received and transmitted through the campus phone system.

David Wood, a spokesman for New England Telephone, said his company does not keep a log of local calls made by individual customers. This makes it impossible for campus police to match incoming calls with NET records of local off-campus calls, he said.

Wood said the way NET sends calls to the UMass Ericsson system would make it "much more difficult if not impossible" to "set a trap" to determine the source of a single phone call.

"People get the idea setting a phone trap is easy from watching TV," Wood said, "actually it is quite difficult."

Although Sailer says currently off-campus phone calls cannot be traced using a display phone, he said there is existing technology that could be used, although he said it is extremely expensive. Also, he said Ericsson hasn't developed the software to accomodate the process.

As far as phone taps go, a spokesperson for the campus police said she thought that although tapping an Ericsson phone might be difficult, "if a court order said do it — I'm sure the Ericsson phone system could be adapted to it."

However, she went on to note that the campus police have "never had the need" to tap an on-campus phone in the course of an investigation.

no big deal," he said. "It was like a well disciplined physical education class."

The entrance of the United States into the war dramatically effected the atmosphere of the campus for years to come and shaped the minds of a whole generation of students, MacConnell said.

"When the war came there was a feeling that if you were physically fit you were headed towards the war," he said. "Students began to feel the inevitability of fighting in the war as friends were drafted and the ROTC drills got more rough handed."

By 1943, when student exemption from the draft ended, most students had left UMass, except for those in the military program, according to MacConnell. Smith and Amherst Colleges also had military training programs, he said.

MacConnell and Richason both said the University, along with the rest of the country, had been swept up in the war hysteria.

"As quickly as we got the news, the propaganda against Germany and Japan picked up enormously," explained MacConnell. "There was concern over subverting forces in the US and the typical rallying for the troops."

"Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition" and "Loose Lips sink Ships" were popular slogans, MacConnell said.

"There was the feeling that nothing Japan did was in good taste because of the backhanded nature of the attack on Pearl Harbor," Richason said.

Voter drive exceeds goal

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

With the election of the state representative for the Amherst-Pelham district and the 1992 presidential primary looming, the Undergraduate Student Senate worked this week to register students to vote in an attempt to give them a greater voice in local and national politics.

According to sophomore Matt Pavesi, the chairperson of the Senate's Public Policy Committee, 527 students registered to vote in the voter registration drive held from Tuesday through Thursday in the Student Union. Pavesi called the turnout "excellent," exceeding his goal of registering 400 students.

Pavesi said the mobilization of students is important in light of the approach of the February 18 primary to fill State Senator Stanley Rosenberg's seat for state representative from the First Congressional District. The election will be held on March 18.

"Students should look for a candidate who will fight for the University — for issues like the Legal Services Organization and for increased state allocations for the University," Pavesi said. "The representative from this district has to realize that students are their own class with their own needs."

The candidates for the election are Democrats Jon Hite, Ellen Story, Norman Page and Terry Franklin, with UMass student Paul McConnigal the only Republican seeking the seat.

Pavesi said the deadline for students to register to vote for in the Feb. 18 primary is Jan. 22, while the deadline for the March 10 Presidential primary is Feb. 26. He added that the Senate is planning a large registration drive in multiple locations for the first week of February.

Menorah vandalized

A menorah put on display in front of the Student Union by the Chabad House was damaged yesterday by what police believe to be vandals.

The seven foot metal structure was pushed over at about 5 p.m. according to police, leaving all of its lightbulbs broken. The damage to the menorah was not a result of the storm.

The cost of damage is estimated to be $500. Police said the incident is under investigation.

respondent for The Associated Press, was the last remaining American hostage.

Anderson arrived at the hospital this morning to a joyous welcome.

Cicippio, 61, planned to fly home early today and Steen likely will leave by the end of the week, said Fohlmeister, a U.S. Air Force colonel.

Both were flown to the U.S. military hospital in Wiesbaden that has become a traditional dispensary of health care, psychiatric and physical evaluations and reorientation for returning American hostages.

Steen, a 52-year-old journalism professor, suffered permanent damage to the left side of his brain when his captors kicked his head against a wall during a 1987 beating, said Fohlmeister.

Fohlmeister described Steen's injury as a "large bruise on his brain" and said the hostage suffered three general seizures in the week after the beating and continues to suffer brief blackouts.

He has numbness and loss of coordination in his right foot and right hand that are likely to be permanent, Fohlmeister told a news conference

Fohlmeister said the seizures will be controlled under medication and that Steen will be able to live a normal life.

Air Force doctors also brought under control Steen's high blood pressure, which had gone untreated during his captivity, Fohlmeister said. Steen also was treated at Wiesbaden for a sinus inflammation.

The Boston native will not need psychiatric treatment and "seems a very normal person," the doctor said.

Steen was kidnapped from U.S.-supported Beirut University College on Jan. 24, 1987 and Cicippio, acting controller at American University in Beriut was captured on Sept. 12, 1986.

Mind games promoting classism, prejudice

Today's world has a new, desperate quality, a blend of economic despair and classist indifference that makes a certain political leader's vision of a "kinder, gentler nation" seem like a cruel joke. Perhaps he really meant to say "genteel."

Folks, I am convinced our generation has been the victim of serious social-political mind games.

I am not sure how it happened, but somehow we leapt from the free love, no more war, happy hippydom of the 60s to the "Me" generation of the 80s. I am convinced part of this emphasis on individualism comes from a desperate need to block out the sometimes frightening, very ugly world that has developed.

Trystan Skeigh

In my coming of age decade I watched the government say that the needs of poor people are not important, that family farms can just go to hell, that Blacks shouldn't receive scholarships, that rising unemployment should just be ignored unless it's happening to you, that women should not be believed, that the president can now deem line-items in laws passed by Congress unconstitutional and just cross them out, that the constitutional provision that only Congress can declare war is optional, that presidents can trade drugs for weapons and get off scot-free, although a student who gets caught with a joint goes to jail, that presidents' sons never have to pay back their loans, although students must ...

I am part of a generation mired in escapism and despair and can anyone possibly still wonder why?

There was a time when honor, integrity, honesty, experience and civility were valued in this society. When being a responsible adult meant more than driving a flashy car and making at least 60 grand a year. Something has happened to this country and I think it's called utter disillusionment.

We returned from Vietnam to find a government that could no longer be trusted. We were forced to learn, for the first time, that young men's lives are less important than a president's public image.

We have never recovered from that shock. Watergate was the final nail in the coffin lid — after that, contra-gate just slipped harmlessly by our notice. We were too busy playing video games, watching movies, spending money or living on the streets.

And what really worries me is that, now that the secret is out, government doesn't really need to pretend to be good anymore.

Reagan's absolute refusal to even pretend we live in a classless society frightens me. The fact that business and the wealthy have gotten significant tax cuts and breaks, while the middle and lower-class now shoulder a significantly higher income tax rate is blatantly immoral. Yet no one complains, because those with the loudest voices in this society have the deepest pockets and they're happy, while those most harmed are struggling to survive and have been rendered voiceless.

Bush, former CIA director, has taken this country even farther down the path away from democracy, claiming new powers never before dreamed of under the Constitution with his own brand-new line-item veto power and his conviction that consulting Congress about war is a mere formality. Bush and Reagan both have clamped the lid tight on the free dissemination of information, expanding the National Security exemptions to the point where it's difficult to get an intact document upon request from the federal government.

And this has happened under our noses without much protest. Why? America is burned out, cynical, insecure about the future, and frankly, pretty hopeless about things changing for the better.

Think about it — the only things of late experienced by lower-middle class America have been increasing unemployment, taxes, violence, AIDS cases and drug use, while economic benefits and services have steadily declined.

Something is drastically wrong in this country. Bush's "thousand points of light" don't seem to include anyone with a median income below $35,000. Naturally, women, Blacks and other ethnic minorities are mostly excluded.

I hate to bring it up like this — but don't you think it's time we stopped electing Republicans?

Hard work, student input led to phone registration system

Bernie Cooney's letter to the Collegian (Thursday, Dec. 5) suggests the new Pre-Registration system was motivated by factors other than the desire to improve student services. I'd like to clarify the history surrounding the development of the system.

Before the current budget crisis began, students and faculty indicated that of all the services provided by the University, they were most dissatisfied with the pre-registration and add-drop processes. Both students and academic departments complained about the long lines, especially during add-drop, and the academic departments felt that add-drop process was ineffective for managing course seats. On this basis, funds were set aside and committed to improving the pre-registration and add-drop processes.

A number of staff in the Provost's office, Data Processing Center, Registrars Office and the Graduate School have committed themselves over the past three and a half years to make this system work, in addition to preforming their regular job functions. We sought input from a student and faculty advisory committee to assure that the system would respond to the needs of students and faculty. The reason the system is easy to use is because of student input on all aspects of the project.

Contrary to Mr. Cooney's suggestion, staff continue to work hard even though the Pre-Registration phase has been implemented. We have only two and a half weeks to coordinate the academic department review of pre-registration rosters, and then enter the final schedule information before printing the schedules and mailing them to students. Meanwhile, staff in the Registrar's Office and Data Processing Center (i.e., "Whitmore") as well as the staff in academic departments must prepare for the implementation of the add-drop phase of the project. All of these areas have suffered reduction in staffs while trying to put this new system into operation.

When the project is fully implemented, we will spend less time on routine matters with students, but we will spend more time maintaining the hardware and software that we had to install to get this system to work.

There are staff in Whitmore who have worked and who continue to work long and hard on this project, without the recognition of merit raises, bonuses or commissions. What we have accomplished in spite of budget cuts is miraculous, and I would like to thank all the staff, faculty and students who gave up their time so willingly to make this project a success.

War, history and global economics

Saturday marks the 50th anniversary of the Japanese's bombing of Pearl Harbor, the most atrocious act ever perpetrated on our country.

The United States was far from admirable in its actions during the war against Japan, as they captured and imprisoned thousands of Japanese-Americans in concentration camps in 1941. These people were harmless, but the paranoid American government thought they were working as spies, so they took them away from their lives and separated them from their families.

Michael Morrissey

Meanwhile, we conducted an extensive naval war against the Japanese. We crossed the Pacific and battled the kamikaze pilots of Japan en route to a decisive but costly military victory.

In war, however, nothing ever seems to end cleanly. It was determined by President Truman that the only way to end the escalation would be to hit the Japanese where it hurt — in their own cities.

Our unleashing of the atomic bombs on the cities of Nagasaki and Hiroshima was not a rash decision by any means. In fact, Truman spent many months deliberating and discussing with his advisors before he decided that the atomic bomb was the only real end to a war we didn't even want to be in.

We had another war to fight over in Europe, against a guy called Hitler. Our ability to simultaneously fight and win two wars at the same time was a highlight in our country's history.

Flash to today — Japan is the world economic leader while the United States is mired in a recession. Our pathetic situation is laughed at by the leaders of Japan, and arrogantly so.

I realize that one area of our foreign policy that is not outstanding is our trade. Our goods and products today suck compared to those of Japan. Is it any wonder why our economy is so bad? We buy so many gosh-darn foreign products that our own friends are getting laid off of the assembly line.

Why did this happen you ask? Well, see for the last 40 years or so, America was too busy carrying the rest of the world's economy on its shoulders. At the beginning of the 1980s, the United States was the biggest lender. It should follow that since most of the countries went lame on repayment (I'm talking about YOU, Brazil!), we are now the biggest debtor nation.

Meanwhile, Japan is flourishing. Look at their economic policy: it's almost flawless. These leaders are arrogant towards our own country, asserting they have nothing left to learn from us. As far as they're concerned, we're as dead as Moses.

Now let's pan back to the aftermath of Pearl Harbor. Who made Japan? Who rebuilt their economy? The United States of America! Without debate, it is safe to say that we made Japan what it is today.

Without us, who knows where the Japanese would be. Without Pearl Harbor, there would be no Hiroshima. And without Hiroshima, no restructuring of the economy based on our own would have occurred.

Believe me, it doesn't make me proud to say that we're responsible for the top two economies in the world, but that's the way it is.

Prejudice and politics destroying education

"There's no reason why children who have an English education in Puerto Rico should come here and not speak English," Geraldine Barret said. There is no reason? Who said so? This letter is in response to the article, "Schools fail under economic crisis" [Collegian, Dec. 2].

Who told Geraldine Barret that education is in English in Puerto Rico? I wonder if she has ever lived there.

Puerto Rico is a Spanish speaking community. Although English is the second language, Spanish is still the effective one. People use Spanish in their everyday life and the government passes its bills in that language. English is more a business language or is used in private schools where education is bilingual. You have to be in a good economic position to afford one of these schools and not everyone can do that, even if they wanted to.

Unfortunately, the majority of the Puerto Rican kids in Holyoke schools do not belong to this class. They did not have the chance to learn that language as others would do. But, for our government, these kids do not represent any political advantage so that's why they make cuts on education — to afford things such as nuclear submarines, M-60s, Patriot missiles, etc., which are used in wars. If you know a little bit about economics you know what I am talking about: the gun vs. butter theory. On the other hand, these kids are used for filling a quota of minorities. This will grant the state of Massachusetts more funds because of them.

This issue, mixed up with prejudice, a "little bit" of politics and a huge amount of money, makes the mess that is living on in our education system. It does not matter if we screw education as long as meanwhile we can build ships, F-117s, F-14s, etc.

I cannot believe we are not giving weight to education which is the key to our standard of living. Anyway: "Who cares? They are just quota and have no future."

I cannot believe this ... It is so "cool" to think in that way, and much more to govern in that way. That's why we live the way we do and we find kids begging for their right of education so their dreams would be fulfilled.

Addams are kooky!

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Da da da da ... dum dum ... it's "The Addams Family," an uneven but funny take on the popular 60s television sitcom that boasts a fabulous set and a clever cast but never quite hits its stride.

The threadbare plot involves the Addams' crooked lawyer (Dan Hedaya) and a fake Uncle Fester (Christopher Lloyd), but the movie is basically a string of comic strip punchlines, with some of the best jokes already shown in the trailer. The fun of the film (and possibly its chief flaw) is that anything goes. The family is indeed macabre, we know that, but the film wants to hit the audience over the head with it. If it spent a little less time trying and a little more time on the plot, it would have been great.

The Box Office

However, "The Addams Family" is far from a clunker. There are some inventive gags and the film should be given credit for never resorting to bathroom humor for laughs. The cast seems to be having the time of their lives, whether they're performing a Broadway-ish dance number or trying to make it in the real world with real jobs.

The set itself deserves an award. The Addams family live in a huge, wild and weird funhouse. There are secret doors and booby traps galore, and everything is painted in a glorious blend of black and gray. Cinematographer Barry Sonnenfeld, turned director, lets the camera fly and the special effects, especially those involving the roaming hand of Thing, are credible. It's a visual treat, if anything.

The casting is especially clever. Angelica Huston ("The Grifters") is a wickedly sensuous Morticia, savoring every punchline with her honey voice. Her loving, er, hating husband Gomez, is played with a suave debonair flair by Raul Julia ("Havana"). It's obvious he's having a great time being creepy. Christopher Lloyd ("Back to the Future") plays the fake Fester, careful not to ham things up too much. Christina Ricci ("Mermaids") is a scene stealing wonder. She and Pugsly have a great time as well, especially in a hilarious play scene.

"The Addams Family" is a disappointment, however, when you think of its potential. Everything is thinly strung together, and it can seem like the same jokes are being said over and over again. Check out "the Addams Family" — you won't be terribly impressed, but you'll have a good time.

AN AMERICAN TALE: FIEVEL GOES WEST

Not as good as the first, but much less dark, and much more fun. Dom Deluise, Amy Irving, and Jimmy Stewart provide the lively voices. Fievel, the little mouse, goes west in search of fortune, and is thwarted by an evil cat, with a dastardly voice supplied by John Cleese. The animation, while it isn't up to Disney standards, is good. Producer Steven Speilberg insisted that it be directed like a live-action film, so it has a fantastic waterslide sequence that's pure Speilberg. While it doesn't approach "Beauty and the Beast" it's still a worthwhile animated film.

University dancers to give powerful display

By ROBIN CRANDALL
Collegian Correspondent

Nervous energy pulses. Dancers in multicolored sweats, big socks, and buns go over counts and choreography for a last minute brush up before the big night. The curtain in Bowker Auditorium bursts open right on time and "Often and On," a piece by Amy Zarlengo, a 1991 UMass graduate, begins. This piece is a spoof on the stiff competition and harsh reality of the professional dance world. It's a fun dance with five performers all vying for solos; pushing and shoving each other out of the way for their big moment in the spotlight.

This sets the mood for "Brubeck," a bluesy, hip-hopping, foot-stomping dance. Five dancers in black spandex flow across the stage to the choreography of the late, great Richard Jones.

The third piece, called "Three Songs," was choreographed by Terese Friedman of Mt. Holyoke College. This is a beautiful, sensual dance featuring the rippling back muscles of four University Dancers.

"Sisters" begins and ends with ten of the 15 University dancers in purple and blue loose, flowing hair. Michelle DeMarais is featured in this dance. Her feeling and strength matches the sensuous saxophone of David Sanborne.

Following a short intermission, "Quirk" is a jazz piece with a twist — they dance in pointed shoes. The lighting in this dance gives the impression of being underwater with the liquid and melting mermaid dancers.

Liz Flynn is featured in an emotionally charged dance to "Get Here If You Can." Andrea Taylor-Blenis was inspired to choreograph this piece by friends and family in the Gulf War and the loss of Richard Jones, to whom the entire program is dedicated, in January.

The finale, titled "Surrender," was choreographed by the newest member of the UMass dance department, Kathy Jennings. Amy Queander and Brian Dawbin are the featured warrior-lovers in this intriguing piece about a relationship that is reaching its bitter end.

"The lighting in this dance gives one the impression of being under water with the liquid and melting mermaid dancers."

Don't miss this powerful display of UMass dance talent.

The University Dancers are performing in Bowker Auditorium Dec. 5, 6 and 7 at 8 p.m. Tickets are four dollars for UMass students.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Chart a new course for yourself. It is time to make a major new commitment. A romance may be out of control. Urge a loved one to use common sense and slow down.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Luck may be yours in carrying out matters of a private nature. Contact with relatives could be surprisingly beneficial. The business outlook is golden. Move quickly when opportunity knocks.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Bargains abound for holiday shoppers. Get an early start! Seek advice of someone who has helped you in the past. You feel real kinship with someone who remembers the "good old days."

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Toot your own horn for a change. Your creative genius will be ignited and your career invigorated. Share your innermost thoughts with mate or business partner. Their reactions will delight you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What you do for others today, especially people in high places, will have a tremendous impact on your reputation. Be as helpful as possible. Marriage sounds good.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Play it smart! Combining business with pleasure today would cause too much stress. You deserve some lighthearted fun this evening. Let mate know what you have in mind.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 21): This is no time to be a recluse. Get out and socialize with influential people. Take a small gift for your host: your thoughtfulness will be remembered. More invitations could follow.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Sharing your knowledge with VIPs makes them trust you. Curtail spending. Skipping a social event may be your wisest course of action this evening. Stick close to home if under the weather.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your best ideas come when you work in a secluded setting today. High-ranking people may promise big things but fail to deliver. Try to relieve tension, not crease it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Doing your holiday shopping by mail or telephone may be the answer for busy you. Homemade presents or baked goods make wonderful gifts. Send a card or short not to old friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are quite the artist when it comes to decorating your home. Tidy up your place in preparation for the busy holidays ahead. Cook and freeze a few special treats. Loved ones are appreciative.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A phone call or small package brings good news. Ignore someone who tries to fan your anger by repeating negative comments.

Williams' box score read as follows: 25 minutes, 4 points on 2-of-9 shooting, 0 for 3 from 3-point land, 2 rebounds, 4 assists and 3 steals. A pretty mediocre line.

However, in Williams' case, the numbers don't give an accurate reflection of what he really did while he was on the court.

He had the Kentucky guards, Richie Farmer and Sean Woods, doing pirouettes while trying to cover him. He drove the lane like Nate Archibald used to, drawing two defenders to himself and then dishing off to the open man for an easy layup.

On defense, Williams' three steals led to two easy UMass baskets. He seemed to take Woods out of his game, but did get burned a couple of times when he went for the steal, didn't get it and allowed the Wildcats' guards a clear path to the basket.

Williams suffered the same fate as his teammates; he got tired.

"They had fresh legs," he said. "We played them tough in the second half, but eventually we all got tired."

"Xavier is probably as good as Kentucky," said UMass assistant coach Bill Bayno. "Right now, Kentucky is not a top 20 team."

The Musketeers are 3-0, coming off a 77-74 win over Northern Illinois. Last year, they beat the Minutemen in Cincinnati Gardens, 71-66.

Game Notes: The game can be heard on 91.1 WMUA (with Joe Donovan and Mike Correa) and on 99.3 WHMP (with George Miller and Kevin Kennedy).

here's" in six minutes of play against the Minutemen.

• Billy Donovan, who was a standout on Pitino's Providence team which went to the Final Four in 1987, is now an assistant coach for the Wildcats. Pitino also hired the first woman assistant last season, Bernadette Locke-Mattox.

• UMass' pep band is great, but it's tough to beat Kentucky's ensemble which is the largest in the country, over 100 members strong.

• Pitino was almost the victim of one of the quickest knockouts in history. Just one minute into the game, if Pitino said one more word to the referee he would have been hit with a technical or two.

• Calipari on Pitino's house: "It's a small grade school."

• Is this Flushing Meadows? At first I thought I was in Shea Stadium watching Dwight Gooden pitch as hundreds of Kentucky student boosters wore blue shirts emblazoned with "K"s.

we keep working hard."

UMass point guard Trish Riley, who sat out all but one of last year's games with back ailments, saw the pain flare up again Tuesday, and is questionable for the game tomorrow.

Riley leads the team in scoring (13 points per game), assists, turnovers, and is tied for the lead in steals.

Minutemen must guard against fatigue

Xavier in town for weekend clash

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

The awe of playing three games in Alaska and a game in the famed Rupp Arena has worn off, but the jet lag has not and probably won't for at least a couple of days.

Therefore, not only must the University of Massachusetts basketball team worry about the Xavier Musketeers tomorrow night (7 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage), it must guard against fatigue and an emotional let down.

"Where they [UMass] must be careful is Saturday at home," said Kentucky coach Rick Pitino. "When you get home, you tend to relax. You say, 'Thank God we're home, the crowd will carry us.'"

UMass coach John Calipari's team returned yesterday from a very successful nine-day, four-game road trip, which began in Alaska, two days before Thanksgiving and ended yesterday when the team returned from Lexington, Ky. after losing its first game of the season 90-69 to the University of Kentucky.

The Minutemen (5-1) fell victim to a Kentucky team which had 11 days to prepare for the game. The Wildcats were fresh, while the Minutemen were clearly tired, after a grueling 22-hour trip from Anchorage, Alaska the day before.

"We had a day and a-half to prepare," said UMass forward Jim McCoy. "They had 11 days. We would have been a little better off if we had more time to prepare. We knew they were going to come at us with the press."

McCoy and Co. struggled to break Kentucky's full court press all evening. On one play, McCoy and Mike Williams collided in the backcourt and McCoy dribbled the ball off Williams' foot out of bounds.

On a similar play, Will Herndon lost the ball right under the UMass basket and Jamal Mashburn picked it up for an easy layup.

Whether the Minutemen have enough time to practice their press-break before tomorrow's game is doubtful, considering they did not practice yesterday. If Xavier scouted Wednesday's game, it would be wise to press the Minutemen.

"Coach Calipari told me that they were going to press a lot," Williams said. "He told me since I'm a good ball handler, to be ready to play."

THE MATCHUPS

Harper Williams vs. Aaron Williams — For the third straight game, Harper faces a high scoring big man in Aaron Williams (20 points and 11 rebounds per game).

Tony Barbee vs. Jamie Gladden — Gladden is shooting 46 percent from the floor and scoring 17.7 points per game.

Jim McCoy vs. Maurice Brantley — McCoy appears to have broken out of his early season shooting slump. He'll have to contend with Brantley, a 6-6 forword who is averaging just over 10 points per game.

John Calipari vs. Pete Gillen — Two intense coaches who get the most out of their teams.

Mike Williams goes up for a layup against Keene State. Williams will be in action, along with his teammates, Saturday night at 7 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage.

The Voice likes what he sees

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

LEXINGTON, Ky. — As the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team increasingly gains respect around the nation, it has caught the critical eye of the legendary Cawood Ledford.

And what Ledford sees, thousands of University of Kentucky fans hear.

As the "Voice of the Wildcats" over a span of five decades, Ledford, who has called some of the best games in the history of college basketball, didn't hesitate to place the Minutemen among the top teams in the country after Wednesday's game betweeen Kentucky and UMass.

"They're a top-20 caliber team," Ledford said of the Minutemen in his trademark, soothing voice following UMass' 90-69 loss to the 14th ranked Wildcats. "They're extremely talented.

"You play this game two weeks later at your place and it could be a different outcome."

In his 39 years behind the microphone, Ledford has seen his share of quality teams. Since his first broadcast in 1953, Ledford has witnessed 26 Kentucky NCAA Tournament teams, including three which traveled to the Final Four and two of its five National Championship teams.

As for possibly seeing the Minutemen at Rupp Arena again when it hosts the Southeast Regionals in March, Ledford said, "They'll be in the NCAA Tournament. But, how far, it's hard to say, as there's a little bit of luck involved.

"But, they're a tough team to play because they're so interchangeable."

It was the first time the Kentucky native had seen the Minutemen live. He said he was impressed with the starting five of Jim McCoy, Harper Williams, Anton Brown, Tony Barbee and Will Herndon, but was equally complimentary of freshmen Mike Williams and Lou Roe.

"The two freshmen are going to be great players with a little bit of time," Ledford said.

For many in Kentucky who can't obtain seats in the 24,000-seat arena, Ledford is basketball. When he appears at courtside, the Kentucky band salutes him in unison with a loud, "Hello Cawood."

The "Best Basketball Announcer in the Nation" honoree knows all the ins and outs of Kentucky basketball and admitted last night that earlier in the day he spoke to a worried University of Kentucky head coach.

"I know coach Pitino was very concerned coming into the game," he said. "In fact, I know he would tell you it was poorly scheduled. Three years ago, you would never think UMass would be a team like this."

Hanging from the arena's ceiling is Ledford's "jersey," as he is the only Kentucky non-player or coach to receive the honor. He announced this past summer he will retire following the 1991-92 season.

Women's hoop hosts Hartford on Saturday

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team plays its first home game of the season (tomorrow at 2 p.m.), as they host the University of Hartford at Curry Hicks Cage.

The Hawks sport a 3-2 record with a team that returns four starters from last year's 11-18 squad.

"As a team they're pretty athletic," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said of the visiting Hawks. "They've got two good post players that we're going to have to contain if we're going to stay in the game."

The two good low post players O'Brien is talking about are Lana Thomas, a 5-11 junior forward, and Mary Joe Besselink, a 6-1 junior forward.

Thomas is a force, leading the team with 16.6 points, 11 rebounds and four steals per game. Besselink averages 10 points and nine boards per game.

"They play a lot of man-to-man defense," O'Brien said, "but they're not quite as aggressive as BU was.

"Offensively they look for both of their post players, especially if we play man-to-man. We're going to look for them to try to run against us.

"They've got some decent speed but if we get back on defense we can slow them down to a halfcourt game."

UMass is rebounding from a 58-54 loss to Boston University Tuesday night.

The problem the Minutewomen faced at BU, O'Brien said, was "overall execution, being smart with the ball. We've got to continue to work on it.

"We're a little better than when we started, but we're still a long way to go. That will come as long as

Beyond the three-point line

Kentucky: excerpts from the spiral bound notebook

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

I thought I would see the greatest fans in college basketball at the University of Kentucky's Rupp Arena. I did, but they weren't Wildcat fans.

Confused?

So was I when I got on an escalator in the arena lobby and saw several University of Massachusetts students riding it in the opposite direction.

I couldn't believe it!

Four die-hard UMass basketball fans took in the hundreds of miles by car for 16 hours to Lexington, Ky. to see the Minutemen battle the 14th ranked 'Cats.

I'm sure they will say it was worth it.

Brett Morris

And for those who missed the trip, here are some random notes from the land of basketball and miles of horse farms . . .

• Kentucky coach Rick Pitino is so popular down there he could enter the Kentucky Derby, as a horse, and people would bet thousands on him. He has his own restaurant, radio show, television show . . .

• Pitino was on the search committee which brought Calipari to UMass. Also interviewed for the job was Pitino's assistant at both Providence and the New York Knicks, Stu Jackson.

• One of the top eight teams in the nation. That's what Pitino labeled the Minutemen after seeing a tape of UMass' superb showing against the University of New Orleans in the finals of the Great Alaska Shootout.

• UMass is having problems funding athletic programs and Kentucky has two separate cheerleading squads? But, I wasn't complaining.

• What? Pitino is now 6-0 against UMass? That's right, he won five against the Minutemen while a coach at Boston University.

• Did I actually see people scalping game tickets outside the arena? That's a true sign of a big-time basketball program.

• The entire state of Kentucky is blue and white on game nights.

• One, two, three, four, five NCAA National Championship banners look impressive and intimidating as they hang from the girders of Rupp Arena.

• Kentucky's freshman center Andre Riddick visited UMass before making the decision to sign with the Wildcats. The blocked shot specialist, out of Bishop Loughlin High School in New York City, registered two big "and stay out of

Professor clarifies lecture remarks

By TRYSTAN SKEIGH
Collegian Staff

Over 100 students in Professor Edward Klekowski's Human Genetics class cheered and clapped in support of their professor and told members of the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance and ACT-UP to "let us get on with our class" during a discussion in which the two groups challenged some remarks students had said Klekowski made about gays and the AIDS virus.

During the first half hour of class Klekowski held an open forum to discuss his remarks, allowing ACT-UP and LBGA demonstrators to join the discussion.

ACT-UP and LBGA members planned to hand out flyers quiz in response to reports during Wednesday's lecture Klekowski had referred to gay men who frequented San Francisco bath houses and later contracted AIDS and called them "dirty and sick."

According to students, Klekowski had said "Scientists were lucky" the disease occurred in the homosexual population first because it gave researchers "more time to study the disease".

After meeting with Klekowski before class, Rick Dodge, an Amherst ACT-UP spokesperson, said protestors decided to take part in the class discussion instead of demonstrating outside.

Addressing a crowd thatincluded 110 Human Genetics students, over a dozen LBGA and ACT-UP members, faculty observers and members of the press, Klekowski said he had "talked about AIDS to provoke students" to think about the nature of retro-viruses.

In an earlier interview with the Collegian Klekowski had denied making any references to homosexuals and the disease.

"It was not my intention to be perceived as homophobic," Klekowski said. "If my remarks were interpreted by anyone as homophobic, I will certainly apologize."

AIDS is a grave concern for the heterosexual population as well as for homosexuals, Klekowski said, stressing his intent was to try to make his students think about their sexual behavior.

"AIDS is not a disease limited to one group," Klekowski said. "This epidemic could lead to our extinction — this discussion should make students feel uncomfortable."

When asked by Dodge if he had called homosexuals "dirty", Klekowski denied using that word to describe gays.

Klekowski said during his discussion he made "a colloquial reference" to the gay community during his years at Berkeley.

Linking promiscuity with an increased rate of contraction of AIDS was the point of this reference, Klekowski said, writing exponential equations to demonstrate how repeated exposures to the virus increases the rate of contraction of the disease.

Scientists were fortunate AIDS cropped up first among a highly promiscuous gay population in San Francisco, Klekowski said, because their latency period was only three years, "while the average latency period for heterosexuals is seven years."

"It gave us a seven-year lead," Klekowski

Confusion centers around possible funding for soccer

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Over the weekend conflicting reports have been circulating about the possible reinstatement of the University of Massachusetts men's soccer program.

UMass Chancellor Richard O'Brien said there is a chance that the University's varsity men's soccer program, slated last spring for elimination by the Athletic Department, will receive the needed funds to return in 1992.

However, according to Albert Bleau, the President of the UMass Men's Soccer Association, the money for the program has already been allocated. The funding has come from a single large donor and the Commonwealth.

"Senator Walter Bovarini (D-Lynn) has come up with some of the funds and there is a donor that is willing to give $100,000 to the program," Bleau said. "As far as I know the decision has been made. It is a done deal."

Sen. Bovarini was not available for comment.

O'Brien also agreed a donor had come forward but he did not say the program was definitely back.

"We have found a possible donor who is willing to give $100,000 a year to the University in order to keep the soccer program alive," O'Brien said yesterday.

O'Brien would only identify the donor as an alumnus until the final papers are signed. He added with donors you can't count on the money until the papers are in, he described the University as "cautiously optimistic."

The $100,000 would account for a large portion of the $150,000 budget needed. The additional funding may be picked up by the Commonwealth, according to O'Brien.

"I have contacted Senator Bovarini, the Deputy Majority Leader in the Senate and told him about the donor," O'Brien said. "I asked for state funding to pick up the rest and he was optimistic that the state could provide the additional $50,000.

"There has been a lot of concern all over the state. Gov. Weld has taken an interest in this and he has

U.S. war crimes investigated

Speakers discuss destruction to civilian life

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

Over a hundred people packed a lecture hall in Hampshire College last night to hear speakers discuss crimes committed by the U.S.-led coalition during the Persian Gulf war. The speakers included members of the International Commission of Inquiry, founded by former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark.

Adeeb Abed, a member of the Palestine Aid Society, said that the United States "made Saddam Hussein into a demon" because this dehumanization made it acceptable to destroy Iraq.

"There was no war in the Gulf — there was only a one-sided slaughter," Abed said. He had visited Iraq this past April. "The bombing was very precise," Abed said. "It targeted everything connected to civilian life."

With pinpoint accuracy, all the major electrical power stations, water pumping facilities, and food storage units were destroyed, Abed said.

"It's important to note that before the war, Iraq was one of the most developed Third World countries in terms of health care facilities, educational system, and telecommunications," Abed said. The bombing reduced it to a pre-industrial society, he said.

"I saw a premature baby, weighing two and a half pounds, in an incubator," Abed said, "but there was no electricity to operate the incubator or the computerized I.V. drip." The mother was standing next to the baby trying to use a candle to raise the temperature of the incubator, he added.

"I also visited the Al-Amariya bomb shelter in which close to 1,800 Iraqi civilians, mostly women and children, were incinerated," Abed said. The Pentagon said it was a military target, with walls 20 feet thick, he said. "I saw the hole made by the bomb — the walls were only 75 centimeters thick," he said.

The economic sanctions, which are continuing even today, are seriously affecting the health care system, Abed said. "Tens of thousands are dying due to the use of contaminated water, and diseases not seen for generations are surfacing again," he said.

According to a Harvard medical team, upto 170,000 babies will die by the year's end, Abed said. "We are also hearing reports now that 8,000 Iraqis were buried alive in their bunkers, and how thousands more were massacred along the infamous "highway of death" as they fled Kuwait to Basra," he added.

The effects of the war extend beyond the boundaries of Iraq, Abed said. "Because of the principled stand that Yemen took in the U.N. Security Council against U.S. wishes, a million Yemeni workers were thrown out of Saudi Arabia," he said.

Palestinians in Kuwait were also accused of being "collaborators" with the Iraqis, and have faced executions, imprisonment, and deportation, Abed said. "And now we have this sham peace proposal, with Israel dictating everything they want and the Palestinians deprived of their right to self- determination," he said.

It is a must for every decent human being, particularly in the United States, to stand up and say that the sanctions on Iraq must be lifted, Abed said.

Attorney Jack Diamondstone said that the sanctions are actually a blockade, and are an act of war. "Bush alone is not a war criminal — we are war criminals," he said.

John Schuschardt, member of Veterans for Peace, who visited Iraq this summer, said that the United States deliberately targeted the civilian population of Iraq.

"I saw babies lying in beds who were skin and bone — you couldn't pinch them and find flesh anywhere," Schuschardt said. "What does it mean for the most wealthy country in the world to declare war on children?" he asked.

"What does it mean for the seven most wealthy and said, adding the remark was made "in the context of a genetics class."

At this point the class began to clap and cheer for Klekowski. When asked by a member of ACT-UP if they had gotten the impression gays were 'unhealthy and dirty' from Klekowski's remarks, a resounding 'No' echoed through the lecture hall." After class, LBGA and ACT-UP members said they had mixed feelings about Klekowski's remarks.

"I still don't think his comments were made in a responsible way," said LBGA member Kelly Hayes. "How could he know whether the incubation period for gays is shorter than for heterosexuals — the men in San Francisco didn't know when they were exposed."

"I was trying to make the point that promiscuos behavior is associated with a higher contraction rate for the disease," Klekowski said.

"To refer to the bath houses, when there have never been any studies about them was a reflection of his own biases," Dodge said, saying he thought Klekowski's refernece insensitive.

Shana Corby, Christi Queenan, and Emily Weissblum, students in Klekowski's class, said they thought Klekowski's remarks could be misinterpreted, but did not think he meant to sound homophobic.

In addition to being intellectually challenged, through the Cooperative Education Program I'm getting almost two years of practical work experience, while earning money towards my tuition. And the Northeastern faculty is outstanding and truly committed to undergraduate teaching. That's important to me.

Although Northeastern is a large university, you won't get lost. The average class size is less than 25 and the student to faculty ratio is a very impressive 14-to-1.

Dems campaign monies unlimited

Candidates make no decisions

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

Democratic candidates for the vacant Amherst/Pelham state representative seat could not reach an agreement on campaign finance limits last Friday when they met at the Bangs Community Center.

"We are all sort of approaching this from different perspectives," said Ellen Story, one of the four Democratic candidates.

Story considered a spending cap a good idea and said all the candidates agreed.

"What we didn't come to an agreement on is the amount," she said.

Story said she would not accept PAC money or spend more than $30,000 on her campaign, $20,000 more than the cap which the Pioneer Valley Pro Democracy Campaign had proposed.

"I don't know where they got that figure," she said. "I don't know what that's based on."

Story said she calculated a reasonable spending amount by adjusting Stanley Rosenberg's 1986 campaign spending for inflation. Former state representative Rosenberg spent $22,000 that year, she said, would be about $30,000 in today's terms.

Story also quoted statistics which say $27,857 was the average amount spent on a campaign in 1990 for a state representative seat.

"It is important to inform the voters about who you are and what you stand for," she said. "The unfortunate point is that it takes money to do that."

Other candidates feel differently. Norman Page said he would spend no more than $7,000 and collect at least 80 percent of that from inside the district.

Page noted different ways the candidates could save money. One idea was the elimination of campaign headquarters, which he said is unnecessary.

Also, Page suggested the candidates make use of the community access channel, which, besides a $100 charge from staff, is free. An hour-long debate between the four candidates could cost $25 each, Page said.

Besides the salary cap, Page has agreed not to accept PAC money or individual contributions, except for his own, of more than $100.

Candidate Terry Franklin said he has agreed to the Pioneer Valley Pro Democracy Campaign's suggestion of no more than $500 in personal contributions. Besides that, he says, he will not accept any money from any contributors. His campaign finances will consist of $500 maximum, he said.

"They were discussing tens and thousands of dollars and I can't imagine what they are going to spend it on," Franklin said.

"I think the issues should be discussed rather than a contest of bumper stickers and lawn signs."

Regarding Franklin's campaign, Story said, "No one considers him a serious candidate, not even himself."

Candidate John Hite was unavailable for comment.

Pearl Harbor discussed by students, faculty

MICHELLE ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

Although talking about the bombing of Pearl Harbor disgusts and embarrasses many Japanese today, they stress looking at World War II as a whole and not just as a single event, said several Japanese professors and students at the University of Massachusetts.

"My knowledge tells me that it is wrong to single out and label Pearl Harbor or Hiroshima as wrong. What began and ended WW II and what preceded and followed it is what is important," said Motoko Maeda-Dworkin, a Japanese lecturer at UMass.

Kyoko Isomura, an exchange student from California attending UMass, said that television reminds people of Pearl Harbor and what the Japanese did wrong. "It's important to reflect back on the past, but [Americans] must be aware of the reverse side, like the bombing of Hiroshima," she added.

Some Japanese said most people don't want to talk about war because it evokes bad memories and causes racial tension. "My friends warned me to be careful because Pearl Harbor Day is coming up and some Americans are mad," said Yumako Soga a UMass student.

Japanese professor Yukie Horiba asked, "Why do Americans ignore the fact that they used atomic bombs that they didn't have to use and that they caused such pain for the Japanese?" Horiba believes racism is at the root of the answer to this question.

Maeda-Dworkin said she can't understand why people don't want to talk about WW II. "It had such a big impact on Japanese psyche. Everything they believed in crumbled," she said.

When Maeda-Dworkin's parents were young they lived in poverty and hunger, she said. "That's probably why my father works so hard. He never wants his family to experience a land of misery," Maeda-Dworkin said.

Tohru Noguchi, a Japanese teaching assistant at UMass, said the Education Administration in Japan censors Japanese text books. "So even though every Japanese knows something about Pearl Harbor, the text books tone down how Japan behaved during the war," he said.

The younger generation doesn't care as much about the war, said Mina Higuchi, a Japanese teaching assistant at UMass. "I didn't know the anniversary [of Pearl Harbor] was even coming up," she said.

"The younger generation of Japanese have no hatred toward Americans, just as the younger generation of Americans probably don't have a hatred toward Japanese," said Isomura. "The younger generation of Japanese just make themselves aware of what the older generation of Japanese have gone through during the war, she said.

Japanese and American governments are great friends now, said Maeda-Dworkin, sharing the same ideas on capitalism and free trading. She added, "Everyone makes mistakes. No one is perfect, I guess."

Kwanzaa gives light, testimony at Malcolm X center celebration

By MARTIN JONES
Collegian Correspondent

Last night, the Malcolm X cultural center of UMass hosted this year's annual Kwanzaa celebration. Kwanzaa is an African-American holiday that was developed in 1966 by Dr. Maulana Karenga, a "cultural nationalist" and former professor of Black Studies at UCLA.

Dr. Karenga developed Kwanzaa under the premise that African-American liberation cannot take place without the adoption of certain essential principles by the African-American community.

These seven principles, called Nguzo Saba, form the basis for the Kwanzaa celebration. The holiday is celebrated over a seven days, from Dec. 26 to Jan. 1, each day earmarked to observe one of the seven principles. However, due to the academic schedule, a one-day commemorative event was held for the Black community of the campus.

The ceremony began with poetry readings, and vocal and dance performances as part of the Kuumba creative expressions. (Kuumba is one of the seven principles based upon building creativity and self-expression.)

The next part of the ceremony was the Nguzo Saba testimonials and Mshumaa lighting. This ritual involved the lighting of one of the seven candles of the Mshumaa following the testimony of each of the seven principles of the Nguzo Saba.

The seven principles were expressed as follows: 1. Umoja (Unity): Working together to maintain unity in the family, community, nation, and race. 2. Kujichagulia (Self-Determination): Defining ourselves instead of being defined by others. 3. Ujima (Collective work and responsibility): Building and maintaining the community and solving all of its problems together. 4. Ujamaa (Cooperative economics): Building up and maintaining stores, businesses and industry in order to profit from them together. 5. Nia (Purpose): Having a sense of being, reason and goals. 6. Kuumba (Creativity): Doing as much as possible to leave the community more beautiful and beneficial then it was when inherited. 7. Imani (Faith): Reaffirming our faith in ourselves and in our mission to influence the future of our people and our society.

The next segment focused on the seventh principle, Imani. Prior to the testimony and candle lighting of this last principle, a processional pouring of libations was held to commemorate ancestral inspiration. Water was poured to symbolize life and participants poured their libation in honor of personal heroes and heroines.

One participant was Dumani Mandela, the son of Nelson Mandela's daughter Maki Mandela, who currently resides in Amherst. The young teenager, bearing a striking resemblance to his famous grandfather, recited: "I give this libation in honor of my grandfather and his never-ending struggle for racial equality for blacks in South Africa."

The ceremony concluded with the lighting of the seventh candle of the Imani (Faith). Following each testimony the participants chanted together "Harambee Sasa!" (Let us come together!)

The participants then shared their feelings about the ceremony and made pledges to implement the seven principles of Nguzo Saba throughout the coming year. A buffet dinner was served following the ceremony.

Housing director angry with senate

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Calling the Student Senate Speaker Bob Monaghan's wish to hold an "open forum" on alleged University Housing Services misconduct "mean-spirited" and "childlish," Housing Director Joseph Zannini said he won't attend if Monaghan plans to dwell on his "Top Ten" list of ways Housing has hurt students.

Although Zannini said he remains accessible to the concerns of students, he called Monaghan's list "not accurate."

"I would find it ridiculous that [Zannini] would deny that those ten statements are true," said Monaghan, adding that he would like to extend the discussion to the "overall policies and philosophies" of Housing.

Still, Monaghan said, "I doubt that he will show up." Some of the "Top Ten" issues deal with the University alcohol policies, security issues and student's civil liberties.

"I don't think any one of those ten points are valid," Zannini said. "I think if [Monaghan] wants to dwell on those ten issues, I don't think it's valuable for me to attend."

In a letter made available to the Collegian, Monaghan said, "It would be of great benefit to the University community if students had an opportunity to hear first hand from the Director of Housing his reasons for not allowing students to participate in decisions concerning their own lives."

"It sickens me to know that so many of the actions that transpire in Housing Services are kept hidden from students," writes Monaghan.

Monaghan wishes to discuss his points "one by one" with Zannini and other students on Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. in room 165 of the Campus Center.

Some of Monaghan's complaints include allowing Resident Assistants to ask residents for proof of age and the Housing Services proposal of making students leave a $200 deposit for their room.

Saying he is receptive to student concerns, Zannini said on the deposit issue he visited with resident area governments. "Certainly I want to meet with students," he said.

Monaghan said Zannini has an "open-door policy" but this "doesn't mean that he accepts what you say."

On the legality of the University Alcoholic Beverages policy, Zannini said he would change the regulations if they are found illegal. "No one has pointed that out to me, but if it were, we would make that change," he said. "That's not really an issue."

Monaghan said if police do not have the authority to card students, it's questionable whether RAs can ask for proof of age.

"It's difficult to take legal action against housing," Monaghan said, but "we have had good contacts with attorneys in this area."

contacted the President of UMass [E. K. Fretwell]," O'Brien said.

In early November, World Cup U.S.A. 1994 was pressuring the Commonwealth to reinstate the University's soccer program. The committee said that the possible selection of Foxboro, Mass. as a site for the World Cup Tournament could hinge on Massachusetts' commitment to soccer.

The World Cup Tournament could bring an estimated $98 million worth of tourism business to the Commonwealth.

UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney said such a donor had approached the Athletic Department, but he did not know of the Commonwealth's possible financial commitment.

"All I can say is that there is a person who had said something about [donating], but we haven't heard from him in a few weeks," McInerny said.

Director of Development for the Athletic Department John Nitardy said he could not comment on the issue. He added, unlike O'Brien, he was not optimistic about the possibility of a donor stepping forward.

industrialized nations in the world to attack and completely destroy a nation half the size of Texas?" Schuschardt asked.

The killing of defenseless soldiers is also a war crime, he said. Another disturbing aspect of the war, Schuschardt said, was the manner in which the Department of Energy tried to suppress all discussion of the environmental consequences of the bombing.

"Instead, they claimed that the oil wells were set on fire by fleeing Iraqis," Schuschardt said.

Over half of Iraq's population of 18 million consists of children below the age of 15, who will bear the bulk of the consequences of the war, Schuschardt said.

He later became visibly disturbed, and could not carry on speaking.

Phil Wilato, member of the National Coalition to Stop U.S. Intervention in the Middle East, said that plans for a war against Iraq were made well before the first Iraqi soldier entered Kuwait.

"These hearings, also held in other countries, have tried to present evidence about the Gulf War," Wilato said. "Our concern is now about Cuba," he added,

"which Bush is trying to force into a political crisis through policies leading to deprivation."

A videotape which included footage of the removal of charred victims from the bombed Al-Amariya civilian shelter was also screened. A number of other speakers also addressed the domestic impact of policies leading to this war, on the homeless and minority communities in the U.S.

Apprehension turns to enjoyment as semester unfolds

I was walking along North Pleasant Street on Friday after a short jaunt downtown. It was cold, windy, very slippery and very white. I trudged along, feeling pretty melancholy, when I saw a sight that picked up my whole day, perhaps even my whole week.

A car passed me with a snowman on its roof. It wasn't very big, just a foot and a half tall. A red scarf and two twig arms waved in the wind, and the car was gone.

Suddenly I realized winter was here. The sledding and snowballing and skiing and slipping season, the season for snowmen. Suddenly I realized there were only two weeks to go and I would be home again. Suddenly I realized I was homesick. Well, sort of.

When I showed up at UMass that seethingly hot, late-August evening, I was not happy. In fact, I was feeling downright nasty. My family and I, arms full of boxes, tramped up six flights of stairs, over and over and over, in 90 degree-plus temperatures. I knew I would hate UMass. I knew it. And I would hate my roommate, everyone on the floor, my classes, the food, the ducks. . . everything.

I confessed to my roommate the tortures I had planned in case I didn't like her. Among the goodies: the music of that screaming goddess Diamanda Galas, a plastic bowling set and assorted shrines, obsessions and eccentricities.

I didn't need to pull out any of my tricks — she turned out to be incredibly nice and all that good stuff roommates should be. By the end of my first week or two here, the horrible stuff I expected to happen never materialized.

I made friends. I figured out the bus schedule. I only had one class to add, and it took me five minutes. None of the ducks tried to kill me. I even liked the food and the trek up Orchard Hill.

Darienne Hosley

I spent my summer worrying. I harassed my sister, who graduated from UMass last May, constantly with endless questions. I admire her patience. I must have asked her five or six times about the buses — how would I know what buses go where and when? "You look at the bus schedule," she matter-of-factly answered. Of course. A week later, I'd ask her the same question again just to be sure.

All through high school teachers dropped ominous warnings that once we got into college the rules of life would drastically change and we would be expected to spend all our time studying and the work would be so much harder. They had me spooked.

But nothing really changed. You know — it's all the same, but different. It's still just life, but with different people and places. The work isn't much more difficult — more interesting, perhaps, but not more difficult.

I've had a lot of fun this semester. That's very important. The first few weeks were more like summer camp than college. But I think I'm ready to take a break and go home. My own room, my own bathroom, my cat, my family.

My roommate selected our word of the week from a list of suggestions by someone on the floor. She chose "chantpleure," dating back to the 13th century and meaning to sing and weep at the same time. She thought it was appropriate, and I think I agree.

Enjoy. . .

Darienne Hosley is a Collegian columnist

The semester in review: one student's observations

Well, after a long vacation, yours truly is back to once again share my love and warmth with you, my faithful readers. Where have I been? What happened to my past two columns?

Well, let's just say that one of them was, shall we say, unprintable, and the other was just plain non-existant. Anybody who wants a copy of the unprintable one, just give me a ring. Diamond, preferably.

Anyway, that was then, this is now, and now is the time for Jared Blaut's first-ever super, spectacular, direct-from-Moscow three-ring Semester in Review!

Jared Blaut

Can't you just feel the earth shake?

Well, earlier in my collegiate journalistic carer, I made a few observations. They were:

(bullet)A lot of ignorant people go to UMass;

(bullet)A lot of these people are members of the Republican Club, and finally;

(bullet)Frat boys get drunk a lot and harass women.

A lot of people came down on me for writing these three bits 'o' information; they said I was just an ignorant little freshman who probably had smelly feet and hadn't been here long enough to go around making such ridiculous statements.

Now that the semester is over, I can look back and say I am truly sorry that I was absolutely correct. Anyone who has followed the Ed/Op page knows that.

As I continued to wallow in the muck that is UMass (merely a colorful description), I noticed a few more qualities of this institution for higher (chuckle chuckle) education, and I feel they must be shared with the UMass community so that some idiots out there will have an excuse to insult my voice mail.

These are more general observations than those above, and these observations are non-college specific, meaning they can probably be applied to the real world, which a lot of sadly mistaken students think UMass is, and gee there are a lot of commas in this sentence.

- Every female-type person on campus already has a boyfriend,
- these boyfriends usually are, in their girlfriends' opinions, total shmucks (yet they stay with them),
- therefore by transitive there are 12,000 shmucks on campus,
- a lot of people just think they're cool and,
- certain people (males and females always have PMS. You know who you are).

Some of you will say number five applies to myself. I would have to disagree; I only have PMS on Mondays.

Okay, boys and girls, time for a very quick review of the academic quality of UMass. Someone once told me that the first semester of the freshman year is supposed to be the most difficult one academically. I'm going to assume that this person was smoking some illegal substance, because if it is all downhill from here then I'll be able to never show up for class and still do well, a concept my roommate grasped a long time ago. This would be great, because it would free up my time so that I could do something more productive, like spitting for distance or writing for the Collegian twice a week.

Don't get too excited.

"So, Jared, you've carefully studied the situation and identified the problems/What, in your infinite wisdom [no laughing, please], are you going to do about them?"

That's a good question. Well, folks, the sad answer is that I just don't know. just don't know. I, for once, am speechless.

Oh well. Have a nice break.

Help available to 'tame the demon'

To the person who reportedly whistled and masturbated [Collegian, Nov. 26]:

Do you want to change your life?

If you can "name the demon" (identify the problem), you can "tame it" (do something about it to change.

It is recognized as even more subtle and insidious form of adiction worse than alcoholism. Why?

1. We can do without booze, but sex is one of our basic instincts. Sex and love addiction is courtship gone awry.

2. Sociery doesn't recognize this as a social problem like it does with alcoholism. Much of this behavior is tolerated, in men especially.

3. But it is percieved, in it's excesses, as far more revolting than drunken behavior, and thus harder to face and talk about.

But, like alcoholism, it is progressive. It is substance abuse. This time it's women rather than booze.

But you are not alone. There are self-help recovery groups dealing with this form of addiction. They deal with "coming out of hiding," and naming and taming the demon. They are among the fastest growing ofits klind in the country. The only requirement is a desire to change behavior.

I owe my recovery to such groups. Will you?

Column on Pearl Harbor anniversary cited as full of historical inaccuracies

Michael Morrissey's columns are like the old Peabody and Sherman cartoons from Rocky and Bullwinkle — once you come to expect the gaping historical inaccuracies, they are highly enjoyable and amusing. And, like Sherman before him, Morrissey remains a two-dimensional cartoon character whose function it is to amuse and entertain.

If Morrissey thinks that the bombing of Pearl Harbor was "the most atrocious act ever perpetrated on our country [Collegian, December 7]," then he should know that it could have been avoided. A November 25, 1941 entry in the diary of then-Secretary of War Henry Stimson reads, "The question was how we should maneuver them [the Japanese] into the position of firing the first shot without allowing them too much danger to ourselves." General Albert C. Wedemeyer, in his book Wedemeyer Reports, states, "Although not too much has been made of our code-breaking activities, we knew enough about Japanese intentions in November of 1941 to have forestalled any attack upon us, anywhere." Captain L.F. Stafford, U.S. Navy, in charge of the Communications Security Section of Naval Communications in Washington just prior to Pearl Harbor, testified, "On December 4, 1941, we received definite information from two independent sources that Japan would attack the U.S. Britain."

Morrissey thinks that "it was determined by President Truman that the only way to end the escalation would be to hit the Japanese where it hurt." Dropping atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki as a way to end the escalation is akin to killing someone so that they won't get hit by a car. More importantly, Japan's war effort was in complete shambles by July 1945, and Truman knew it; the Japanese were earnestly trying to arrange acceptable terms of surrender, and Truman knew it; the Soviet declaration of war on Japan on August 8, 1945, would most likely have brought a rapid end to the conflict, and Truman knew it.

Spatial limitations allow me to clean up only a fraction of the sludge dumped by Morrissey. I welcome all with a broad love of history and economics, and an even broader sense of humor, to pick up the slack.

Professor's views on homosexuality misrepresented in Daily Collegian

As biology 400 who were present at the lecture on Wednesday Dec. 4, we would like to inform readers of the Collegian that the article published Dec. 6 misrepresented Dr. Klekowski's views. Some of the quotes were innacurate and all were taken out of context. Dr. Klekowski did make comments that some people in the class considered to be insensitive to the homosexual community and which were unfortunately misrepresented.

When members of the class spoke privately to Dr. Klekowski on Friday expressing concern over these remarks, he decided to address the situation in class. Dr. Kekowski clarified his support of the gay community and reiterated the point of his lecture, which was that the AIDS virus must be taken extremely seriously by every mnember of every community.

M. Butterfly performance was stunning

By SHAWN MCDONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

M. Butterfly
Fine Arts Center, UMass
Saturday, Dec. 7

"Butterfly?"

The word hangs in the air, like the last great puff of cigarette smoke, as the curtain falls on David Henry Hwang's M. Butterfly. It floats up, slowly to dissolve under the lights – to fade into oblivion, like the dreams and the loves that it embodies. But after it is gone, after the curtain calls have finished and the theater has emptied, its effect can still be felt.

Once in a very long while the American theater produces a true dramatic masterwork — a play that both moves and inspires, that strips away at the layers of its audiences' consciousness, and jumps onto a new track of being. These visual and visceral feasts are sadly few and far between — the last true example came in 1949, with Arthur Miller's Death of a Salesman. American audiences have waited a long time to find a play its equal. Today, the wait is over.

M. Butterfly, which played to a sold-out audience at the FAC Saturday, is the semi-factual account of a French diplomat who falls in love with a Chinese opera singer who is actually a spy — and a man. Like Madame Butterfly, the classical Puccini opera which serves as a background to the story, this play tackles such subjects as the difference between East and West, male and female, right and wrong. But despite all its characters' armchair political theories and prejudicial suppositions it is, at heart, one of the most simple, central, and terrible tales ever told — a love story of shattering impact.

This new production surpasses, in almost every way, not only the first national production, but the Broadway original as well. Director Bob Borod has actually improved on the work of the late John Dexter by bringing out the inherent humor of the play — creating a stark contrast to the raw emotions which drive the characters.

Set against the background of Eiko Ishioka's beautifully evocative sets and powered by Hwang's brilliant words, the cast glitters. Although no one will ever match Alec Mapa's performance in the first touring company, Francis Jue is an admirable replacement in the play's gender-bending lead — easily matching the acheivements of Broadway's original "butterfly," Bradd Wong.

What makes this production such a resounding triumph, however, is Graeme Malcolm's heart stopping performance as the pathetic diplomat, Gallimard.

The awakening of sexuality and self-assurance in an effete worm, and his subsequent mental and physical destruction is conveyed masterfully. Where past Tony-winners and contenders such as John Rubinstein and Phillip Anglim have stumbled and fallen, the unknown Malcolm stands tall and proud — placing himself, as he does, in the upper echelon of theater's dramatic actors.

To speak more of the play's story would be unfair to all those who have not seen it, so I shall reluctantly keep the secret of M. Butterfly's epiphany. What I can say is this: the epiphany, even for a third time viewer, was worth much more than the twenty dollar ticket price. I urge you all to find the tour's next stop, and experience it for yourself — it is something you will never forget.

Artifacts of New Guinea tribes in FAC exhibit

By ANN MARINI
Collegian Correspondent

Now being shown through December 15 at the University Gallery is Traditional Artifacts from the South Pacific. The exhibit was arranged by George Botello, a graduate student attending the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts.

The objects displayed have been selected from Mr. Botello's own collection, acquired while teaching in New Guinea for nine years. None of the artifacts are more than thirty years old and all were made by the tribes which live in New Guinea and its surrounding areas. Each object gives fascinating information about different tribal beliefs and ceremonies, or about tribal warfare of years past.

Respect of ancestors is important to many of the tribes whose work is on display. Several figures carved out of wood and painted are made by different tribes along the Sepik River. Sometimes used for protection, they are believed to hold the spirits of ancestors. These figures can be found in many different areas throughout Melensia.

One of the exhibit's most interesting features is its ceremonial masks. Several of these masks come from the Southern Abelam Wosera Area, where a yam cult exists. Yams, the most important crop of this area, are also grown separately for an annual yam festival, when each yam and its owner wears a mask. Another much larger mask, with a large beak and wings, is used to memorialize the attack of New Britain during World War II, when the island people believed that the plane bombings were ancestor birds who brought fire.

The different tribes have produced a wide range of styles, from the delicately carved ancestor totems of the Tobriand Islands to the bold, highly stylized war shield from Irian Jaya.

Mr. Botello's exhibit, Traditional Artifacts from the South Pacific, is on display through December 15 at the University Gallery, located in the Fine Arts Center.

Panda East a change from student staples

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

If you have been eating as poorly as we have all semester, meaning bread and water, do yourself a favor, give your stomach a treat and head East, to Panda East.

Located on 103 North Pleasant Street in Amherst, Panda East offers a wide variety of Chinese food, including some very tasty spicy food and a full bar that features some of the most bizarre alcoholic beverage names imaginable.

DINING OUT

The atmosphere is quite relaxing, as the tables are spaced far enough apart so that you don't have to hear every word from the table next to you. The hanging plants added to the pleasant surroundings.

Panda East offers a variety of luncheon specials, ranging from $3.95 to $5.25. All of them include soup and rice, the best deal anywhere.

However, we had a little more than just a luncheon special.

Right when we sat down, our waiter brought us tea and water. As all you Chinese food connaisseurs know, when you eat Chinese food, you go through more than just one glass of water.

Our waiter suggested some Panda East favorites, starting with Hot and Sour Soup and Wonton Soup.

The Wonton Soup wasn't as good as the Hot and Sour Soup, but that goes without saying. As for the Hot and Sour Soup; it makes my top 10 favorite Hot and Sour Soups of all time. In the past, I've had some Hot and Sour Soup that was too hot and it burned my lips so that I could not fully enjoy the rest of the meal. However, this soup had a lot of taste and was just the right warm up to the eventual meal.

Before the actual main dishes came, we feasted on some chicken fingers and crab rangoon.

The chicken fingers had just the right crisp to them. Sometimes, chicken fingers are too crispy, and when you bite into them, you think your teeth are going to fall out. But not at Panda East. They were perfect. And no grease either.

The crab rangoon is like nothing I have ever had before. It blends crispy chinese noodles with crab meat.

By this time, we were both full. We were ready to leave, just when our waiter came over with the main dishes.

We had an order of S-16, translated to, Triple Delight. A splendid combination of jumbo shrimp, beef and chicken, delicately balanced with a variety of vegetables in a special Panda East sauce.

The best part of this dish was the amount of vegetables it included. There was probably a head full of broccoli, to go with baby corn, mushrooms and peppers.

Our other main dish, S-3, A.K.A. Orange Chicken, lacked the vegetables that Triple Delight possessed, but it too was a delightful dish. The crispy chicken coated with orange sauce, was spicy and was quite imaginative.

Over all the service was good, fast, friendly and efficient. Panda East serves six different kinds of soups, and 13 appetizers. Try some Fried Dumplings if you stop by. On selected items, you can alter the spice according to your taste.

Panda East brings Chinatown to your home with its takeout menu, which includes everything on the menu.

Panda East offers you a wide range of health food selections, seven steamed dishes.

Panda East is open for lunch Mon.-Sat. 11:30 a.m. - 3 p.m. The entire menu is available at all times. Panda East is open until 9:30 p.m. from Mon.-Thurs. and until 10:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Sunday hours are noon to 9:30 p.m.

Director discusses new responses to homophobia

By TRACY GAVEL
Collegian Correspondent

'Silence or violence' has been the traditional response to homophobic harassment, but the director of the Anti-Violence Project and the Campus Project of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force said the responses to this harassment are expanding.

Kevin Berrill presented the workshop "Hey Queer!," in the Campus Center, using role-playing to practice responses.

"None of my experience working with the law or assisting harassment victims prepared me for my own experience," said Berrill, "The purpose of this workshop is for us to expand our repetoire of responses to harrassment. For us there have only been two options: silence or violence."

Much of the workshop dealt with small group work, sharing experiences with harassment. Many of the participants in the workshop expressed feelings of frustration, powerlessness, and isolation when recalling past confrontations.

Berrill explained how the impact of day-to-day harassment makes its victims alienated from themselves, and can even trigger feelings of internalized homophobia.

"We are dis-empowered through invisibility," he said, "An act of harassment is an act of terrorism — not just against us personally, but against all gays and lesbians, 'he said.

"People call gay men 'pansy', 'queen', 'mary', etc... the worst thing that you can call a man is something feminine. This shows that people regard women as less then men," he said.

"Likewise, lesbians try to overstep their traditional female roles and are viewed as trying to become men. Gays (in general) mess with our society's roles of male dominance," he said.

Berrill outlined his criteria for ideal responses to harassment that would leave the person feeling safe,able to deter or at least challenge harassing behavior, leave the person feeling good about him/herself, and not be abusive.

Several common responses were determined to be either dangerous to the harassed, or ineffectual, Berrill said, such as attempting to ignore the harassment, which workshop participants agreed might feel safe at the time but could allow the violence and harassment against gays to continue.

"Not all of my criteria will work in every situation," he said. "The ideal response to harassment is non-violent, but active. But the most important thing is for us to feel safe."

Berrill said effective ways of confronting a harasser include naming the offending behavior, building bridges to others, and asking the harasser to stop. He emphasized the necessity of a quick and concise response. "Do it and end it. The longer an interaction goes on, the better chance for violence," he said.

Berrill also explained the need for allies, people who are willing to speak up if they see others who are being harassed.

"People don't usually act in situations like that. They don't know what to do. It's important for us to be allies to ourselves and to our own," he said.

"If you are being harassed ask for help. We must confront people and commit ourselves to the right to exist," he said.

Berrill also commented on the risks involved with being an ally,such as threat of harm, or automatically being labeled gay — but greatly emphasized their importance in challenging heterosexist behavior.

Women's track places second

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

As Coach Julie LaFreniere led her University of Massachusetts women's indoor track team to the University of Rhode Island on Saturday for a tri-meet with URI and the University of Connecticut, she was hoping to escape the South Kingston, RI campus with at least a 1-1 record.

The Minutewomen did just that, finishing second behind perennial Big East power Connecticut, and defeating the Lady Rams. Connecticut finished with 87 points, UMass with 35, and URI with 25.

"UConn is very strong all around, they really don't have a weakness," LaFreniere said, "They're a Big East team, and they receive tremendous support from that."

Highlighting the day for the Minutewomen was freshmen triple jumper Janey Meeks, who set a new school record with a jump of 37 feet 3 inches, also good for first place.

"Janey had been jumping really well in practice all week, so I knew she'd jump really well, I just didn't know how well." LaFreniere said.

Other first place finishers for the Minutewomen included Kelly Liljeblad in the mile, and Becky Johnson in the 800 meter run.

"Kelly's back," LaFreniere said, "She's showing no signs of her injury. She ran a great race, [Finishing in 5:05.7] and should really help us."

Johnson race turned out to be a two women showdown between Johnson and Connecticut's Kelly Savage, with Johnson surging after the last turn to overcome Savage, in a time of 2:13.7, qualifying her for the ECAC's.

"Kelly[Savage] had a slight lead the whole race, but Becky had that extra something coming out of that last turn and outran her." LaFreniere said.

The Minutewomen's strongest event was supposedly the distance medley relay, altough fatigue and sickness slowed the quartet of Lee Ann Ambrose, Kelly Liljeblad, Becky Johnson, and Lennice Johnson.

"I thought going in, we might break the school record today," LaFreniere said, "Lee Ann had been sick all week, and at the end, the UConn kid just outlegged Kelly. Kelly had already ran the mile earlier, and she just ran out of gas."

"Overall, I was pleased, we had a few poor performances," LaFreniere said, "UConn is virtually unbeatable, but I was pleased with our performance against Rhode Island."

Pemberton, jostling for position in the paint, punched Lady Hawk Candace Ward after Ward elbowed her in the mouth with 8:46 left in the game, which merited a flagrant technical foul and her ejection from the game. She said they had been physical throughout the game.

"I let her get to me after she elbowed me in the mouth," she said. "I guess I let my emotions get to me."

Moran's loss hurt the team more than anyone else's. The junior forward was on fire in the first half, scoring half of the team's 24 first-half points. She also had seven rebounds in the first 20 minutes. She finished with 16 points and 11 rebounds, albeit 55 seconds early.

Moran fouled out while preventing Hartford's Lana Thomas from a breakaway layup. Thomas hit both free throws to give Hartford the final 51-50 score. Her loss was most apparent on UMass' final offensive play, although O'Brien asserted it would have gone in the same direction regardless.

"We had the play set," O'Brien said emphatically. "It was going to Kim and Maleeka."

Moran was disappointed in her team's inability to win the game, but she also downplayed her exit.

"That wasn't really a factor," she said. "We blew a seven-point lead. The bench knows their role, and everyone that [O'Brien] puts out there, she knows they can handle the pressure."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do not let recent revelations undermine you winning attitude. A personal relationship could reach a standoff. Making the right social connections may not be as important to one of you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Renewed dedication to your diet begins to pay off. Be more creative with menus so you are less tempted to cheat! A romantic relationship heats up. Know where you are headed.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Dramatic developments are the order of the day! Your life is headed in an exciting new direction. Go with the flow. A romance with an older person is possible. Follow your heart.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Renewed energy and optimism make this a very promising day. Romantic concerns are smoothing themselves out. You may be trying too hard to please others — hold back a bit for yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You should survive any cancellations, delays or nix-ups in style today. Maintain your sense of humor. Someone responds to a romantic glint in your eye. "Accept a last-minute invitation this evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Let your mate know how much your relationship means to you. Financial matters may be a frequent topic of discussion. Be willing to make intelligent concessions in the interest of domestic harmony.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Travel is favored. Winning a contest could lead to your taking that dream vacation! Romantic partner will be delighted to accompany you if all expenses are paid. Think it over.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid biting off more than you can chew. Hundle errands and correspondence as best you can, but do not try to finish everything at once. Give parents and children loving encouragement.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A conscientious attitude could win you a bonus, second income or valuable gift. Some of you announce new corporate affiliations. Avoid burning your bridges. Learn more about international finance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The next few days will find you quite busy dealing with the public or local VIPs. Influential people take notice into career pursuits. Put romance on hold.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your desire to serve others can get the better of you, especially when an appeal is made to your vanity. Be realistic about how much time you can give to a cause.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A current alliance is strong an lasting. If faced with a decision involving loyalty, do not hide your feelings. Romantic partner could get testy before the day is over. Be supportive.

It took Galileo 16 years to master the universe. You have one night.

It seems unfair. The genius had all that time. While you have a few short hours to learn your sun spots from your satellites before the dreaded astronomy exam.

On the other hand, Vivarin gives you the definite advantage. It helps keep you awake and mentally alert for hours. Safely and conveniently. So even when the subject matter's dull, your mind will stay razor sharp.

If Galileo had used Vivarin, maybe he could have mastered the solar system faster, too.

Revive with VIVARIN.

Minutemen bombard Xavier, 91-72

• 18-2 run keys victory

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

A capacity crowd filled the Curry Hicks Cage Saturday night, not knowing what to expect from its travel weary University of Massachusetts basketball team.

What the fans saw was a UMass team shoot 59 percent from the floor, including two 23-point performances, one by Harper Williams and one by Anton Brown, as the Minutemen improved to 6-1 with a 91-72 romp over Xavier.

Brown, who was coming off a zero point outing against Kentucky had 15 first half points, leading the Minutemen to a 37-31 halftime lead.

In the second half, the point guard turned the show over to Williams who responded with 17 points, eight during a critical 18-2 run which put UMass ahead 60-40.

Jim McCoy's leaner off the glass between two defenders began the run. A Tony Barbee 6-footer made it 46-38. Xavier's Jamie Gladden cut the lead to six with a basket, at 17:27, the last points the Musketeers would score until Brian Grant hit a free throw with 13:42 remaining.

To complicate things for the Musketeers, their big man Aaron Williams (8 points, 12 below his season average) picked up his fourth foul and had to sit on the bench, opening the middle for Harper Williams.

Harper hit a short jump hook and then finished off a 2-on-1 fast break with a two handed stuff on a pass from Will Herndon (five assists). UMass guard Mike Williams (8 points) put the Minutemen ahead 54-40, with a pretty reverse layup which brought the crowd to its feet, where it remained for the rest of the run. Harper then hit another jump hook, blocked a dunk attempt and finished off a fast break with a finger roll.

Herndon's break away dunk put UMass up by 20 with 14:02 remaining.

"People were saying the Great Alaska Shootout was a fluke," McCoy (15 points) said. "We knew if we spanked them, people would say UMass is for real."

Xavier never recovered from the onslaught. They missed five free throws midway through the second half which could have cut the lead back to eight.

"The first five and a half minutes of the second half were the key to the game," said Xavier coach Pete Gillen. "We got a little shook up. The Cage is a tough place to play. When you combine a veteran team with a tough place to play, it makes for a tough game."

Every time, Xavier seemed to be ready to make a run, UMass had the answer. Harper shot a torrid 9 for 11 from the floor and the Minutemen made 24 of 32 free throws.

Brown scored six of UMass' eight points to start the game. He took the ball to the goal with confidence, complimenting his outside shot.

"I was trying to do a little extra because of the way I played at Kentucky," Brown said. "Coach Calipari told me, 'Anton we need you to score tonight.' He said, 'Go out and get 30.'"

Xavier managed to stay in the game in the first half because of the play of Steve Gentry. Gentry scored 11 points in the half, including two 3-pointers.

"We felt coming in this would be our toughest road game of the year," Gillen said.

University of Massachusetts point guard Anton Brown unleashed his offensive game in the Minutemen's 91-72 win over Xavier Saturday night, scoring a season high 23 points on 7 of 12 shooting.

Xavier's defense gave Brown, who was averaging 7.5 points per game coming into the contest, room to shoot and he made them pay for it.

"I laughed during the first timeout and said to [Brown], 'Hey, they're not going to play you,'" UMass coach John Calipari said. "'You're going to have a field day.'" And he did.

Brown saw the opening and immediately took advantage of it, pretty much scoring at will from everywhere and anywhere on the hardwood.

His team-high 15-point first half explosion included an uncontested layup, a 16-foot jump shot, two runners in the lane, a baseline jumper, a trey from the corner and a pair of free throws.

"We let him get going early," said Xavier coach Pete Gillen. "Last season he didn't do much against us, but tonight he had a career game. "We knew he was a good shooter and we thought he would get six or eight points, but not 23."

Calipari said, "If you don't play him, he's going to score. When [Xavier] came in, I guess they said he can't score and decided not to play him." Brown also dished out three assists and pulled down four rebounds.

The Musketeers made another mistake in picking Brown as the man to foul down the stretch and watched him hit 6 of 8 from the charity stripe (8 of 10 on the night) in the final 4:24 to seal UMass' sixth victory.

The senior from Columbia, S.C., who had a career-high 26 points against Rutgers in his freshman season, came into the game following a disappointing performance in Wednesday's 90-69 loss to Kentucky where he was shut out in the points column.

"My shot was off in Kentucky," Brown said. "I was a little bit tired. You have good games and bad games."

However, when Brown has a sub-par game, or when he tires, he and Calipari have the added dimension of freshman guard Mike Williams off the bench.

"It's good to have Mike there to come in," Brown said. "He's a great help. I can go out and play real hard for five to 10 minutes and Mike can come in to relieve me. "He pushes me a lot in practice and that really helps me coming in to the game."

Calipari also inserts Brown and Williams at the same time which allows them to switch off with each other in the backcourt, between the shooting and point guard positions.

Brown has had his share of ups and downs throughout his career. He was named to the Atlantic 10 All-Freshman Team after averaging 12.9 points his first season, only to play one game his sophomore season due to a fractured

Minutewomen suffer from personnel loss

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

In Saturday's 51-50 loss to the University of Hartford, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team was hampered by the loss of key personnel.

UMass coach Joanie O'Brien knew at the beginning of the year that this would be a lean season in terms of depth, because there were no freshman recruits.

"I knew what I was getting into," O'Brien said at the beginning of the season. "I was hired around July 1st, which didn't give us any time to recruit for this year's team."

However, in trying to hold off the Lady Hawks in the second half, the Minutewomen lost three key players, all in a row. Trish Riley, Shawna Pemberton and Jenny Moran were all lost in one way or another, and the losses wounded the team.

Riley, making her second start of the year, played well at point guard in the first half, despite an 0 for 6 performance from the field. However, her chronic back problem acted up so much that she was unable to finish the game.

She tried to tough it out in the second half, but was unable to play down the stretch while her teammates were floundering. Riley said she did not think her own loss affected UMass as much as the inability of her teammates to step up and lead.

"I think we just let down and made some mental lapses," Riley said. "No one stepped up to take control. [Hartford] may have wanted it a little more."

Women's hoop falls victim to Hartford's second half rally

UMass can't hold halftime lead, falls 51-50

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team had several chances down the stretch to win Saturday's game against Hartford, but watched it all slip away, losing 51-50 at Curry Hicks Cage.

UMass' Maleeka Valentine's driving layup through traffic in the waning seconds missed, but she got the rebound and missed again.

The ensuing rebound was grabbed by several players, but as they fought for it the buzzer sounded, ending the contest.

"We gave up 51 points and lost the basketball game," said an angered UMass coach Joanie O'Brien. "We played good defense. What are you going to do? You've got two shots at the end of the game and you can't put it in the basket."

The Minutewomen (2-4) turned the ball over 11 times in the first half (23 times for the game), but their aggressive, hustling defense offset the Lady Hawks' decided height advantage, giving UMass the lead at the half, 24-17.

Another factor in the first 20 minutes was the shooting of UMass forward Jenny Moran.

She was a bright spot in a sluggish offense as she had 12 points on a variety of jump shots and layups while pulling down seven rebounds before the break.

Hartford's defense corraled her in the second half, as she scored only four points and recorded four more rebounds before fouling out with :30 left.

Moran's 16 points and 11 rebounds were a team high. Kim Kristofik and Valentine chipped in with ten each.

The Lady Hawks were led by Lana Thomas' 17 points and 8 rebounds, and Mary Jane Besselink's 13 points and and 13 rebounds. Nine of Besselink's rebounds and all of her points were tallied in the second half.

Hartford's intensity picked up in the second half. They displayed good passing and movement on offense and good hustle on defense, forcing UMass to turn the ball over eight times in the first eight minutes.

Hartford's aggressiveness cost them as they reached their team foul limit with 12:24 left in the game.

UMass hit 16 of its 23 second half free throws, but could muster only five field goals on 17 attempts.

When Moran hit a jumper with 8:50 left, UMass went ahead 36-35. As Hartford was setting up its offense, the Hawks' Candice Ward was trying to find her way out of a double team defense at the other end.

Ward spun around and her elbow hit UMass' Shawna Pemberton in the jaw. Pemberton then took a swing at Ward, the punch missed its mark and UMass lost Pemberton for the remainder of the game.

The turnover barrage continued as both teams became tentative on offense. When Cassie Anderson scored on a nifty baseline layup with 4:20 left UMass led 46-45.

The teams traded buckets and free throws for the rest of the contest, and Hartford's Lana Thomas hit two big free throws with :30 left to round out the scoring.

"I think we just let down and made some mental lapses," said UMass point guard Trish Riley. "They [Hartford] may have wanted it a little bit more. They were willing to go out and get it while we were playing tentatively."

Riley had a tough go of it, scoring only two points while turning the ball over six times. She ended up sitting out the last ten minutes of the contest with a chronic back ailment.

Hartford coach Mark Schmidt said, "We've won four games this year and three of them have been by one or two points. UMass has a brand new coach and this is my second year, so we may have been a bit more structured. We had the confidence factor."

Anderson offers views on election

Speech at Memorial Hall tonight

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

With Democrats and Republicans across the country beginning to throw their hats in the ring for the 1992 presidential election, a former presidential candidate and veteran congressman will offer his views on the upcoming election tonight at the University of Massachusetts.

Former Illinois Congressman John Anderson, who garnered approximately 7 percent of the popular vote as an Independent candidate in the 1980 presidential election, will be speaking on "The Making of a President — 1992," tonight at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

He was first elected to Congress as a U.S. Representative from Illinois' 16th district in 1960, serving for 10 consecutive terms.

Anderson has been president of the non-profit Center for U.N. Reform Education. Anderson has also written several books, including A Proper Institution: Guaranteeing Televised Presidential Debates, published in 1988.

He has also written A Congressman's Choice: Between Worlds, published in 1970 and The American Economy We Need, published in 1984.

Anderson received his bachelor's degree from the University of Illinois, while receiving LL.B. and LL.M degrees from Harvard Law School.

Anderson has taught at several universities since 1980, including the University of Massachusetts at Boston. He has received numerous honorary doctorates of law as well.

His speech tonight is the highlight of a busy three-day schedule of visits with students throughout the Five College Community.

After meeting with a class tomorrow at 2 p.m., Anderson will hold a question and answer session with students in Machmer W-23 at 4 p.m. The session is open to anyone interested in attending.

Anderson met yesterday with students at Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges and will meet students at Amherst College tomorrow.

Anderson's visit is sponsored by Five Colleges, Inc., and the University's political science honor society, Pi Sigma Alpha.

Court upholds homosexual military ban

By PETE YOST
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A federal judge on Monday upheld the Pentagon ban on homosexuals in the military, saying the armed forces must have that power if they are to protect soldiers and sailors from AIDS.

Joseph C. Steffan, a Naval Academy midshipman who acknowledged he was gay, had challenged the Defense Department policy as unconsititutional. U.S. District Judge Oliver Gasch ruled that the regulations "rationally further legitimate state purposes."

The policy promotes "the maintenance of discipline, morale, good order, a respected system of rank and command, a healthy military force, morality and respect for the privacy interests of both officers and the enlisted," ruled the judge.

Steffan will appeal Gasch's ruling to the U.S. Court of Appeals, said Paula Ettelbrick, legal director of the Lamda Legal Defense and Education Fund in New York. The fund is a gay rights group representing the former midshipman.

"We find the decision distressing, but not a big surprise," she said.

Last spring, Gasch referred to Steffan as a "homo" three times during a hearing. Gasch ruled that the fact that he used the word did not mean he was biased, and an appellate court upheld his decision.

Steffan resigned from the U.S. Naval Academy in May

Police drug testing struck down

Court says random testing violates Mass. Constitution

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Random drug testing for police officers in Massachusetts was struck down Monday on a 4-3 decision by the state Supreme Judicial Court.

The high court ruled in favor of the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association that random, suspicionless drug testing violates the prohibitions in the Massachusetts Constitution against illegal search and seizure.

The decision was significant because the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that the U.S. Constitution does not prohibit random testing of law enforcement officers.

"Finally Boston police officers are going to be treated like first-class citizens. We have rights," said Donald Murray, the union's president.

The suit was brought by the union when Robery Guiney was president. Guiney is now U.S. Marshal for Massachusetts.

Frank J. McGee, attorney for the union, said the victory was especially sweet because he had lost the case in federal court and had to start over again in the state courts, using the Massachusetts Constitutional argument.

"I still think the federal courts are wrong," McGee said.

McGee said the decision does not prohibit testing in

Smith trial doctor says rape 'highly unlikely'

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — A defense witness gave jurors in William Kennedy Smith's rape trial a lesson in human sexuality Monday and claimed Smith's accuser could not have been raped exactly the way she described.

The witness, Dr. Raphael Good, came under hostile attack by a prosecutor who noted that the 70-year-old psychiatrist and gynecologist has never done research on rape, never testified in a rape case and has been called an expert witness only twice in his career.

"I have done no research in the area of rape, that's correct," Good told Assistant State Attorney Ellen Roberts.

She also noted he has not practiced gynecology in 20 years.

Good, who teaches at the University of Miami, acknowledged he was never shown the medical records in the case before he formed his opinion at the request of defense attorneys.

Smith, the 31-year-old nephew of Sen. Edward Kennedy, is charged with sexual battery and battery could receive 4 1/2 years in prison if convicted.

Good, called as an expert witness on sexual dysfunction, was asked to comment on a pretrial statement by Smith's accuser that Smith had only a partial erection when he raped her. Based on the facts of the case, defense lawyer Mark Seiden asked Good if an unwilling woman, squirming and fighting, could be raped in such a circumstance.

"Under the scenario you just painted, it is highly unlikely — very, very unlikely for penetration to occur," said Good, adding that the woman would have to cooperate to make the act successful.

The defense claims the woman engaged in an act of consensual sex.

During Good's graphic testimony, Circuit Judge Mary Lupo had a Newsweek reporter ousted from the courtroom for smiling and ordered his courtroom credential to be lifted for the day.

Roberts challenged Good's expertise.

Abandoned pets increase

Shelters worried as semester ends

By KRISTEN LANS
Collegian Correspondent

The volunteers at PETS, a local animal welfare organization, are worried about the final days of this semester which they believe will result in an increasing number of pets abandoned to the harsh winter as students leave their dormitories and apartments.

PETS — Placement, Education, Treatment and Shelter — places stray animals in foster homes in the Amherst Area. It now has 30 homes which provide cats, dogs, rabbits and hamsters with a place to live until permanent homes can be found.

According to PETS volunteer Wendryn Case, all of their 30 homes are currently filled and they will not be able to accommodate a flood of stray animals which in the past has come at the end of every semester. Their homes have been filled since the last peak at the end of the spring 1991 semester.

In addition to the overflow of strays, Susan Wolff, a telephone monitor for the Friends of Amherst Stray Animals, said that economic factors have decreased the number of people adopting animals.

Over the past six months an increasing number of dog owners have given up their dogs because of the cost of their care, she said.

One Sylvan Residence Area student, who asked not to be identified, recently tried to give her cat away to various pet stores before an employee at a Hadley pet shop agreed to take it home. The student said she now objects to pets in the residence halls calling it "cruel."

Case said students should not consider abandoning their pets or keeping them locked in apartments or in dorm rooms over the winter break.

"We find cats hovering on heating grates at UMass and in Amherst and if we are lucky we get to them before they freeze," cases where there is probable cause to believe an officer is using drugs.

McGee said the decision would apply to all police departments in the state. Murray said the only exception would be where a drug testing policy had been negotiated in a police union contract.

The Boston Police Department had no immediate comment on the case. Spokesperson Vincent Loporchio said the department had not had a chance to study the ruling.

Murray said the drug testing policy had not been implemented, pending the final outcome of the case.

The majority opinion, written by Justice Herbert Wilkins, held that random drug testing violates Article 14 of the Massachusetts Declaration of Rights, the provision of the state constitution that prohibits unreasonable search and seizure.

Wilkins said the Boston Police had not shown that there was a problem, or even a public perception of a problem, arising from illegal drug use by Boston Police Officers.

"Constitutional safeguards should not be abandoned simply because there is a drug problem in this country," Wilkins wrote. "Article 14 of the Declaration of Rights should not be a casualty in the war on drugs. It is a time when pressures on constitutional rights are greatest that courts must be especially vigilant in the protection of those rights."

Wilkins was joined by Justice Ruth Abrams and Justice John Greaney, neither of whom wrote separate opinions. Chief Justice Paul Liacos concurred.

In his opinion, Liacos said the case differed from one last year in which the court upheld mandatory drug testing for a Boston police cadet.

The difference, Liacos said, is that the cadet had consented to drug testing as a condition to joining the police academy while Officer Guiney had never consented.

"Giving Tree" damaged

The 20-foot tall "Giving Tree" on the Haigis Mall to benefit a child abuse program was damaged Saturday and the lights broken. The estimated value was $200, University of Massachusetts Police report.

An electric pot overheated in Dwight Residence Hall early Saturday morning causing the evacuation of the building when the appliance began smoking. The damage is estimated to be $150 to the 18th floor of John Quincy Adams on a report of people "trashing the floor," discovered when they arrived that a number of resident's room doors had been "pennied," a process by which someone shoves pennies between the door and the door frame effectively locking residents in their room.

Police said a water bubbler on the floor had been tipped over and a window broken, along with other damage on the floor. Housing staff was notified of the incident, police said.

A fight broke out during a Saturday night/early Sunday dance at the Hampden Dining Commons and a man reported to police that he was struck in the face and another man reported being struck several times by a man with a cane. Police said both men will seek complaints in Northampton District Court.

ARRESTS:

• Matthew K. Gruttadauria, 20, of Medway, was arrested early Saturday morning on Meadow Street and charged with operating under the influence of alcohol, failure to stay within marked lanes and failure to stop at a red light.

• Stephen R. O'Connor, 20, of Brookline, was arrested early Sunday morning on Commonwealth Avenue and charged with operating under the influence of alcohol, violating marked lanes, unlawfully speeding and failure to have license in possession.

State rep. candidates to negotiate spending

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

Three of the four Democratic candidates for the state representative seat vacated by Stanley Rosenberg have agreed to meet again in attempt to reach an agreement on spending limits for the campaign.

Dennis Kelly of the Pioneer Valley Pro Democracy Campaign said Ellen Story is the only Democrat who is still unsure about meeting again.

"I'm a little upset with the stall in the negotiations," said Kelly. "I still feel like there's a chance."

The Pro Democracy Campaign suggested candidates use no more that $10,000 total campaign funds with a $100 maximum contribution from individuals, $500 maximum contribution from candidates and at least 50 percent of the money from inside the district.

"We've taken a first step," Kelly said. "The candidates recognize that it is a problem." He added that the next step is to get the community to recognize a problem and then to change it.

The elimination of campaign funding altogether, Kelly said, would not only create "a level playing field" but would also eliminate conflict of interest.

Democratic candidate John Hite said he is behind campaign reform.

"One of the biggest problems in government today is that big money contributors control access at all levels of government," Hite said.

"I'm very disappointed that those discussions fell apart," said Hite. "Amherst had an opportunity to be a leader."

Hite, who has accepted no contributions from corporate political action committees and has limited his out-of-district funding to 50 percent, said he is still hoping to work with the other candidates to work out an agreement on a spending cap.

"Now is the time to do it," he said.

Democratic candidate Terry Franklin, who said he is spending no more than $500 for his entire campaign, said Story is not seriously devoted to campaign funding reform for this election.

"At the meeting she was nervous about the Pro Democracy Campaign. She was annoyed, almost," Franklin said.

"I think she wished the topic wasn't discussed at all," he added.

Franklin responded to a statement by Story printed in yesterday's Collegian is which she said nobody, including Franklin himself, considered him a serious candidate.

"I do consider myself a serious candidate," Franklin said.

New candidate for state rep. is 'unenrolled'

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

Local business owner and town meeting representative Larry Kelley announced yesterday that he would run for the vacant Amherst/Pelham State Representative seat as a politically "unenrolled" candidate.

A life-long Amherst resident, Kelley graduated from the University of Massachusetts. He now is co-owner of the Karate Health Fitness Center and the Amherst Athletic Club.

Kelley said after being a long time member, he was disillusioned by the Democratic party about eight years ago.

"Democrats don't do a very good job of spending money," he said, "mainly because they are not spending their own money."

"I don't think any candidates out there are fiscally conservative," Kelley said. "They're more of the same, and we've had too much of that."

Kelley said he is against a "tax and spend" policy, which he says Gov. William Weld has done a good job of overcoming.

Kelley said he supports the University, but does not see his position as vital to its existence. He used recent events as an example.

"Look what happened to the University while Stan [Rosenberg] was representative," he said, "The fact is that UMass is not in great financial shape."

Kelley, who said he does not have anything against Rosenberg, said "one person can't make that big of a difference."

Proposal would allow stricter DWI penalties

BOSTON (AP) — The state lacks the ability to keep repeat drunken driving offenders out of the driver's seat when they aren't in prison, so penalties need to be stiffer, law enforcement officials say.

"It's been very frustrating for us to see repeat offenders who have absolutely no intention of changing their drinking habits," Middlesex District Attorney Thomas Reilly said.

He and Rep. Warren Tolman (D-Watertown) are sponsoring legislation to increase the penalty for drunken driving.

"We have to take steps to make sure they are going to be kept off the road," Reilly told The Boston Globe.

Roger Koney of Salem lost his license in April 1986, and since then has been convicted of 24 serious motor vehicle offenses, including eight for drunken driving and six for driving after his license was suspended or revoked.

He was sentenced to jail 19 times and is scheduled to appear in court this month on charges of vehicular homicide, drunken driving and driving after his license was revoked.

"There is a certain group of repeat drunk drivers that have no intention of changing their habits. They have absolutely no concern for public safety," said Reilly.

More than 18,000 people were convicted in Massachusetts last year for driving after their licenses were suspended or revoked, said Gerald St. Hilaire, chief counsel for the Registry of Motor Vehicles. A significant number of them also were charged with drunken driving, he said.

Officials say those convicted of driving without a license probably are a fraction of those who do so.

And, a study several years ago by the National Highway Traffic Safety Commission showed that, statistically, a person likely would have driven drunk at least 200 times to be caught once.

"If somebody is not physically incapacitated or incarcerated and decides they want to drive, they are going to drive until they are stopped," St. Hilaire said.

The Registry suspended or revoked 263,473 licenses last year, including those of 23,871 people convicted of driving under the influence, and 13,007 who refused alcohol tests.

In the last 18 years, Raymond H. Orben Jr. of Wakefield has been convicted of drunken driving 19 times, often putting him in jail.

The Registry of Motor Vehicles revoked his driver's license in 1973, but he has been convicted of driving without a license 24 times.

His most recent conviction on that charge was two weeks ago and coupled with another drunken driving conviction got him a three-year sentence to the Middlesex County House of Correction, the maximum possible.

Under the Reilly-Tolman bill, which will not be taken up in the Legislature until next year, the fourth and subsequent drunken driving offenses would be treated as felonies.

Collegian elects new editors

Marc Elliott was voted editor in chief of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian by the newspaper's staff yesterday.

Elliott, a junior journalism major, served this semester as the newspaper's managing editor. Previously, Elliott was an associate news editor.

Sophomore Daniel Wetzel, currently associate sports editor, will take over for Elliott as managing editor. Wetzel has been involved in the newspaper since his freshman year, serving as the sports associate for two semesters.

Staff member Ari Vais was elected to the position of Editorial Editor. Vais, a senior English major, has been an active writer this semester.

The position of news editor was not contested during elections and remains open. A news editor will be appointed by the new editor in chief in the spring. There were also no applicants for the post of Jewish affairs editor.

Lisa Curtis, a sophomore double-majoring in journalism and Japanese, was elected to become arts editor. Curtis served previously as the associate arts editor.

Junior sports editor Tamir Lipton won re-election with associate sports editor Brett Morris as co-editor. Lipton, a journalism and political science major, has been writing for the sports desk for five semesters.

Morris, a junior sport management major, has been writing for the sports desk for three semesters.

Photo editor Josh Reynolds was re-elected to his post. Reynolds became interim photo editor this semester before being appointed permanently to his post.

Black affairs editor Sondra Sutton was also re-elected to her post. Sutton, a junior zoology major, has been the editor of the section for two semesters.

Tami Monahan, former Student Government senator and former member of the Lesbian Gay and Bisexual Steering Committee, was elected gay, lesbian, bisexual issues editor. Monahan, a junior journalism major, was not previously involved with the newspaper.

Evelyn DeJesus, a freshman management major, was elected multicultural affairs editor. DeJesus also has no previous experience with the newspaper.

Madanmohan Rao, a graduate student, was re-elected to be Third World Affairs Editor. Rao has been the editor for a semester, and a staff member for three semesters.

Women's Issues Editor Michelle Bayliss, a sophomore pre-journalism major, was also re-elected to her position.

Michael Carvalho, a junior communications major, will serve next semester as the production manager. Carvalho has been the associate production manager for a semester.

Mozambiquan honored for aid

By JON MARCUS
Associated Press

BOSTON — Three years ago, Abubacar Sultan went from teaching language lessons in a comfortable school to counseling survival in a war zone.

But his students still were children, as young as 5, forced to fight as soldiers in the civil war in Mozambique.

Sultan, 28, who previously taught Portuguese, is trying to give them back their youth. On Tuesday, he will receive the Reebok Human Rights Award from former President Jimmy Carter in Boston. The annual award is for people under 30 who have advanced the cause of human rights and freedom of expression.

"I just couldn't wait in a classroom teaching students from an urban area while worrying about what was happening in the countryside, with children being killed," he said. "I had to do something to change their lives."

Children who in the United States would barely be in kindergarten have been trained in Mozambique to kill.

They are caught in the middle of the 14-year civil war between the eastern African country's leftist government and the right-wing Mozambique National Resistance, or Renamo.

The conflict has reportedly killed 600,000 people and left another million homeless out of a total population of 15 million who also suffer from food shortages and drought.

Peace talks are scheduled to resume Tuesday in Rome.

Both sides have pressed young children into uniform at one time or another, according to Amnesty International. Only Renamo is suspected of continuing to do so.

Amnesty officials say Mozambique is not the only nation in the world where children serve as soldiers, but the only one where they are being forced against their will to do so.

Sultan, director of Save the Children's Federation's Children and War project in Mozambique, oversees the work of rehabilitating children who escape.

"Today in Mozambique we talk about an entire generation of children who were born in the context of violence of war," Sultan said.

Save the Children's Mozambican office said Monday that, since 1987, at least 3,000 children forced to serve as soldiers have been reunited with their villages, their parents, or "substitute families."

1987, six weeks before graduation, after academy officials said he would not be allowed to graduate. He had disclosed days earlier that he was a homosexual.

Steffan argued in his lawsuit that the Pentagon ban violated the equal protection clause of the Fifth Amendment.

Gasch disagreed, saying the Pentagon policy is aimed in part "at preventing those who are at the greatest risk of dying of AIDS from serving in the Navy and the other armed services."

There was no evidence in Steffan's case that he had had sexual relations with anybody, male or female.

"Implicit in the power to support armies is the power to make rules concerning their health and welfare," said Gasch.

"The power to protect the Armed Forces from veneral disease is ample to sustain the power to protect them from what is now known to be a fatal and incurable virus, the HIV," said the judge.

Steffan was a midshipman in good standing when he learned that he was under investigation by the Naval Investigative Service for his alleged homosexuality.

He admitted his homosexuality to an academy chaplain. The commandant of the academy then said graduation would not be possible because of regulations adopted in 1981 prohibiting homosexuals in the armed forces. Steffan resigned, but 18 months later sought to withdraw his resignation and filed suit.

He said gay men and women constitute a "suspect" class of politically powerless people who are entitled to have the Pentagon regulations subjected to heightened scrutiny. Gasch disagreed.

"Homosexuals as a class enjoy a good deal of political power in our society. ... It is beyond doubt that the homosexual community has been able to reach out and gain the attention of politicians of all sorts," the judge declared in a 35-page opinion.

Ettelbrick called the judge's statement "terribly ironic."

someone like that to the press it really makes it seem like she's worried," he said. "She's nervous that she is going to look bad, being the person with all the money."

Story defended her statements about Franklin.

"It's hard to be a serious candidate when you set your spending limit at $500," she said. "And I'm sure that he knows that."

Regarding her campaign spending limit of $30,000, Story said, "I don't feel nervous or apologetic about this at all. I think I'm being realistic.

Story said she has already made spending commitments, such as the lease of her headquarters and the ordering of signs and bumper stickers. She hopes is will not be necessary to spend the full amount.

"If it is," she said, "then I will spend that much money."

We must unite or face total destruction

Today is Tuesday, December 10, 1991. So what? We're moving into our final exams and will soon be departing this wretched institution for the holidays. Well, that's probably the best news you will hear on this page. Oh, don't let me forget to commemorate the staff of the Malcolm X Cultural Center for a truly wonderful Kwanzaa celebration. It was so great and significant that I submitted a story on the event that was published in yesterday's edition of the Collegian. (If you missed it, it was on Page 3 on the lower left-hand corner next to the highlighted article on Student Government vs. Housing Services.)

I was very pleased that the article was not totally rewritten by the Collegian editor's. I felt it to be important that Kwanzaa was properly explained in the story. This follows the principle of Kujichagulia, or Self-Determination, in which we people of African descent speak for and define ourselves instead of being spoken for and defined by others. For this reason, I encourage members of the Black community to write for the Collegian to make sure we are heard from from our own mouths. Had I not made a special effort to have the story published, not a word would have been printed about perhaps the most important celebration of our community of the entire year. At first the Collegian wanted to print the story today, two days later, citing the insignificance of the event. Later, upon my insistance and illustration of the importance of the event, the editor in chief pulled out another story and printed the Kwanzaa article. The Collegian later apologized, explaining that they did not realize how significant the holiday actually was.

This whole scenario told me how ignorant this American society is to other cultures outside of the Eurocentric mainstream ideologues. This fact was further illustrated by yesterday's edition of Gary Larson's "The Far Side" cartoon. Titled "Slave Ship Entertainers," the cartoon displayed a singer and pianist in the hold of a slave ship entertaining the slaves. The cartoon may be seen as harmless humor to those of us whose ancestors immigrated freely into this nation. But to myself, a survivor of the American holocaust known as slavery, it wasn't funny at all. Slavery is responsible for the existance of 30 million African-Americans who are trapped in a society that refuses to accept us as human beings and is presently involved in a sophisticated scheme to bring about our eventual cultural and physical extinction. The cartoon resurrected images of the horrors of the Middle Passage in which millions of people — our people — were packed into the wooden holds of the slave ships like sardines amidst filth and disease. Millions died, their bodies thrown overboard like garbage to be strewn across the floor of the Atlantic Ocean. If myself or another person of African descent were to edit yesterday's cartoons, you can bet your life that Mr. Larson's slave ship satire would not have appeared in the Collegian.

Martin F. Jones

Heard Enough? Well, unfortunately I have much more accounts of our genocide to share with you. In particular, the usual attempts to divide and conquer us as a people. While at the Collegian office attempting to get a spot for the Kwanzaa story, I was approached by a Collegian staff member who "begged" me to run for the position of Black Affairs editor. I declined, citing my refusal to run against my own sister, Sondra Sutton, the current editor. This staff member told me that Ms. Sutton had not submitted her application and was therefore ineligible to run for the position. She went to say that if no one applied by the 5 p.m. deadline, (the time was 4:50 p.m.) the position would be filled by an appointment by the editorial board. She also expressed her opinion that if an appointment were to be made that Ms. Sutton would not be reappointed to the position, citing various examples of the editorial board's dissatisfaction with her job performance.

This staff person seemed to be highly interested in the press coverage of the Black community in the Collegian, as she was so interested in whether or not I ran for the position. Unfortunately, she did not have enough concern for our community to notify one of our own of potential problems with her position. Instead, she encouraged me to step right over her and replace her. Mistake number one. Never, ever, try to play us against one another. It won't work. Not from this brother. She obviously assumed that we are not united and that I wouldn't sound the alarm on behalf of my sister. In reality, I will give my life before I betray one of my own.

Unfortunately, I did submit the application with the understanding that there was no one else applying for the position. Determined not to allow our voice of the Collegian be chosen by people outside of our community, I told the editor in chief to hold on to my application until I verified whether or not Ms. Sutton had actually applied. Upon contacting her that evening she confirmed that she had, in fact, turned in her application on time.

Let this be a lesson to all of us. Our oppressor is like the snake that persuaded Eve to bite the forbidden fruit and damn herself, Adam, and all of their descendents to lives of mortal sin. It is deceitful and sophisticated, spreading lies and rumors that try to divide us. I still don't know where the rumors of the Collegian came from, or who is telling the truth, but I will continue to trust only in the Creator.

Black people, listen up! This will not stop until we stand up together, ready to fight to the very end "by any means necessary!" Remember the Nguzo Saba principles! Umoja! (Unity) Kujichagulia! (Self-Determination) Ujima! (Collective work and responsibility) Ujamaa! (Cooperative economics) Nia! (Pupose) Kuumba! (Creativity) and Imani! (Faith) We must incorporate them into our daily lives, living, breathing and tasting them until we reach our ultimate destiny to restore our world to its former glory. We are fighting a constant battle and the casualties are piling higher and higher as you read this editorial. You have two choices: total victory or total destruction. The brutal truth is that this war won't be over until we have taken control of our lives and reclaimed what is rightfully ours. This is the task at hand. Together we shall march onward to victory! Peace!

P.S. Congratulations, Sondra, on your reappointment as Black affairs editor. Continue your excellence in journalism. You are doing the race proud.

Stress column: climbing a fictitious social ladder

Attempts to gain to much social status in college is a barrier in the pursuit of unity, and a positive sense of Black identity.

Certainly, the problem can be attributed to a fictitious social ladder that people seem to be climbing in college today.

I thought that we were supposed to be learning and growing, but it seems that those that are climbing up the fake social ladder, collapse within the jaws of the notion that popularity makes one wholesome. It is a false quest that can sidetrack many from their studies to obscure levels; from being an unknown to being utterly disrespected in a fairytale land — wake up Alice.

Climbing a fictitious social ladder is also rejecting the notion of voluntary segregation from extensive social contact, as a student, to achieve a sense of academic stability. By acting phony to say "I'm cool and with the program" while spreading the false knowledge rubs many sincere people the wrong way. Why be a false prophet or king? Who are you going to lead? This act is abysmally unpromising.

Peter Ribiero

Step back and look at the situation. Onlookers view it as a useless respect quest. Since the points are valid, the offenders start to realize that the quest it is also useless. Simply, be yourself or you will be by yourself.

So, far beyond the idea of actually attempting to climb, is that it is deviant from the fact that academics is the underlying theme for our existence here in school. Someone who has been through it or just knows will watch the situations unfold and be very judgemental. Do not risk the way you are viewed.

This is a translation of a true dilemma. Climbing a fictitious social ladder in this school, as a Black, jeopardizes Black unity and the Black identity crisis at hand.

Remember that this tone is very risky. Be yourself and be true to yourself. Those who try too hard get real scarred, climbing is very destructive.

During this late time of year, remain strong in studies. Don't get stressed about social endeavors which can side track you. Identify, and decipher the cosmetics which keep you down. Be aware. Don't be scared. I care. Academics. . . I'm outta here.

Malone delays tuition payments for school-choice communities

By ROBERT W. TROTT
Associated Press

BOSTON — The state will delay local aid reductions in communities that lose students to other cities and towns in the new school-choice program, Treasurer Joseph Malone said Monday.

But the delay will build up against those already-struggling communities in April unless the Legislature changes the amount they must give up in local aid.

"This is the first gleam of hope for the school systems devastated by the state's new school-choice law," said Sen. Arthur Chase, a vocal critic of the law supported by Gov. William Weld and Senate President William Bulger (D-Boston).

Under the law approved earlier this year, parents may send their children to public schools outside their home town or city if the school committee in the district to which the children are sent agrees to accept them. The receiving district receives tuition payments that are deducted from the hometown school district's state education aid.

Chase (R-Worcester) said some receiving communities were soaking the cities and towns that were losing their students. For example, Chase said Avon last year charged $1,500 per student it accepted from Brockton. Under the new state law, Brockton now must pay Avon $10,200 per student.

"Acton-Boxborough and Manchester-by-the-Sea have decided not to accept any more students this year," he said. "This spare Maynard and Gloucester from being further devastated by the school-choice law."

What we are going to be doing is sending the receiving schools money so that they can make the adjustments with the new students coming in," Malone said. "We will not be deducting money from those schools who are sending students to different school systems."

"So, on Dec. 31, when payments go out . . . money will not be deducted from the communities that send students to other school systems," Malone said. "On the other hand, the receiving communities will be getting dollars from my office to them so that they can have the dollars to educate the new students in their system."

Chase said the move would stave off possible layoffs. Brockton, he said, might have faced 50 teacher layoffs.

"By taking the action now we're saving communities like Brockton and Gloucester and Maynard and Hopkinton and Douglas from having to lay off teachers this coming year," he said.

Malone said simply delaying the deductions wasn't unfair to stuggling communities that could face large payments in April if the school-choice program remains unchanged. He likened it to a fiscal shell game, but "we're telling you where the pea is."

Studies track spending power in Congress

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Thomas S. Foley is never seen scrambling for dollars for some hometown project. Yet nearly every spending bill that goes through Congress seems to have a gold nugget meant expressly for his Eastern Washington District.

The ultimate power in Congress is to get what you want without people knowing you even asked for it.

Congress likes to spend as if by sorcery, in actions difficult to trace if lawmakers don't put their stamp on it. And this no-fingerprints game makes it exceedingly difficult to capture Congress' spending habits in a statistical framework.

But attempts to do so shed some light into the murk.

A new study by the National Taxpayers Union Foundation profiles the current Congress' penchant for spending by totaling the costs of all bills sponsored by every member. Congressional Quarterly, meantime, has chronicled where every dollar passed this year is supposed to go.

These are two very different things. The foundation looked for those lawmakers who would increase the size of the federal budget, while CQ examined at how the existing spending was ladled out.

Looking at both studies together reveals a little about how spending power works in Congress.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd (D-W.Va.) makes no bones about his mission: he's going to bring back to his home state every federal dollar he can get his hands on. Since taking over the Senate Appropriations Committee three years ago, he's snared more than $1 billion.

You would have left, too

I look around. Standing next to me is a very tan, very blond, very built, very hormone attention-grabbing guy. As I stare past him I see the beach. The waves are continuously coming up to the shore. Large bikinied women either sleeping or reading lusty novels, all metamorphosing into lobsters fairly quickly. In the past 10 minutes I've seen about 12 old couples in about their 70s, strolling down the beach hand in hand, all still very sexually alive. And one guy waltzing around with a parrot on his shoulder.

Seana Barnhill

Check this out, Friday morning I went to Fort Lauderdale at 5 a.m. and came back at 5 p.m. Sunday night. All of this was totally unplanned, totally spur of the moment. Needless to say my parental units flipped when they found out, fortunately with enthusiasm.

Thursday night I went to the Theta Chi (yeah, yeah, yeah) formal with my now closer than ever bosom buddy Chris. I had a few drinks, well maybe a bit more than that, hung out and talked to a few people. A guy came over and handed Chris a small ticket. "What's it for I asked?" "Well," he explained, "there's a raffle tonight and the prize is an all-expense-paid trip to Fort Lauderdale. But if I won it, I'd probably sell it."

I personally could seriously deal with a trip like that, I thought, but it would probably be during January and I would be with family in Texas.

Needless to say the night went on and the number of winning tickets grew smaller. Finally we were down to the last two winning tickets in the raffle. Well if you haven't guessed by now, we won. Chris obviously changed his mind and invited me to join him. Of course I said yes. I asked when we'd leave, assuming it would be in a few weeks, maybe even next semester. "In a few hours," he said. This translated into four hours.

Holy shit! First I had an exam the next day, plans to go to a movie with a friend, shopping, parties to see and meet people at, there were just a lot of things to do. After having been shaken for the 100th time by the "Seana go!" I heard repeatedly, I thought okay, if I get out of the exam, I'm going. It's now 1 a.m., many beers and a disgusting OJ and gin later, I call a friend "Rhonda, oh dear roommate and good sharer of gossip, give me Fernando's number, I'm going to Florida!" Surprise, Surprise. She freaks, squeals and ends in a gale of giggles. I call Fernando- El Professor de Amor y Espanol.

"Fernando this is Seana, I know it's a little late but this is a weird situation. I swear I'm not drunk (not). I just won a trip to Florida and it leaves in a few hours!" "Seana? Seana? This is you? Seana talk to me on Monday, go to Florida," he muffles. Fortunately I've got an A average, otherwise it would probably have been a "no." I scream along with a bunch of other girls I had met at the party. I must have received 100 hugs.

Well, we left to go to the airport via Chad's very lovely automobile, with very little gas in the tank. But we made it through ice and snow literally. I couldn't have gone with a better guy, Chris was the absolute gentleman the entire time. Evidently Theta Chi breeds good men.

I came back more relaxed, rested and tanner than I had been in a long time.

Local slams UMass, Collegian

I want to thank all of you who just have to write back to the Collegian Editorial/Opinion page in disagreement or disgust. I'm sick and tired of listening to know-it-all students complain and state their opinions and views about everything or should I say nothing.

As a town resident I somewhat look forward to the students' return every fall, but by spring, I can't wait for their departure. Nothing is better than a quiet, peaceful summer after putting up with nine months of "what's your major, wanna have sex" parties, riding the buses packed with flat-topped, drunk jocks and Southwest hair spray queens and the other crimes and complaints that come from packing 20,000 or so students into a nice, rural town. Sure you give the area a lot of much needed revenue but you also give area residents just as much to complain about as you do.

So before you go wasting your time, and mine, on writing down your silly opinions for all of us to laugh at, try doing your homework instead.

As far as the Collegian goes, I'd almost rather read "Dear Abby" or Seventeen magazine, or just stare at a blank page rather than read your editorial/opinion page. I'm beginning to think all of your columnists are fashion design majors. Don't print just anything so you can get your paper printed Monday through Friday. Some of us pick up the Collegian for more than just "The Far Side" and our horoscope.

Personal goods meet watery end when prank gets out of control

I said my prayers Saturday night. It felt good, with the Christmas season so fast upon us and I blessed everyone I love as I drifted off to sleep.

But you can bet your ass I asked God "Why?!" when at 5:30 in the morning I was wakened with the sounds of screaming, swearing and a great clamoring in the third floor of Cance Residence Hall. There was a banging on my door and I figured it was some obnoxious drunks destined to keep me from a good night's sleep. But when the banging came again, this time louder, I thought maybe something might be wrong, and as I stumbled to the door I found my answer. . . in a soaking wet rug and shallow pool in the doorway.

Still half asleep my first thoughts were to roll up the rug and salvage my Eddie Bauer boots before they became a useless pair of stained leather floating in what someone considered to be joke.

It really got funny when I opened my door to discover a river literally flowing down the hall. Frantic neighbors of mine wading through the water in disgust and confusion, swearing, slamming doors and wringing out everything that was unfortunate enough to be on the floor when the joke got gallons out of hand. My room was nothing compared to the damage of my friends'. I guess I'll have to say my prayers more often.

The point is that we in Cance 3B are pretty pissed off 'cause it's rather hard to study for finals when you have to worry about whether or not your rug has dried out, or frozen, on the lounge balcony, and if you'll be able to finish that final paper because your word processor has short circuited. You can't cry about it though because you accidentally left your box of Kleenex on the floor and that's soaked too.

Yeah, you're probably laughing. After all, flooding an entire hallway and all of its rooms is quite an accomplishment, something to really brag about to the gang back home. I used to laugh too when I'd hear all those tales of crazy college kids and their kooky pranks — not any more. You won't find it too amusing when your R.A. comes banging on your door at some ungodly hour to tell you that all of your personal belongings are floating away. It's never as funny when it happens to you.

Yes, Cance was really rockin' early Sunday morning. Crazy Cance. And maybe if you say your prayers kids your dorms can rock too — then you'll know exactly where I'm coming from.

Oh, and a word of caution to the person, or people, who turned the nozzles: watch your ass, because if we find out who you are, not only are you going to be slapped with a handful of lawsuits, but we have a tidal wave with your name on it.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

The phallic burrito strikes . . . one last time. [driving, punchy, perky theme music please.]

What do you mean it's due tomorrow? (A recurring thought that's been floating through my head quite a bit these days.)

I do believe I've lived in the dorms for one semester too long and it has come time for this boy to move off-campus and, in the words of one of my friends, "start living like a human being." It'll take some adjustment you understand. I'll have to cook and clean and pay rent and utilities and commute . . . But by far, I think the most awful adjustment is having to dial seven whole numbers to make a phone call. Good Lord! Eventually, they'll set up support groups for this sort of thing. "Man . . . it was like . . . I just wanted a pizza . . . and like . . . I couldn't dial more than five numbers at a time . . .[sob]." "It's all right Joe, we understand." Life is hell.

"GEO is a Union." Well, all right all right! already! Take yer damn stickers down fer God sakes! They're ugly as sin. Oh, I heard GEO was gonna take on the statehouse to lobby for bigger stipends . . . oh yeah, and maybe for more cash for higher education while they're in the neighborhood. At least they're not stomping on the undergraduates' feet anymore.

Being my last column for this semester and all, I suppose I ought to give credit where credit is due. You didn't think I thought of all this crap on my own did you? Oh no, there are others . . . [gasp]. I steal most of my stuff from my friends, people like Kris, Tim, Hill, Christine, Meredith, Amy, Larry, Myron, Greg, Fentonism, Gayle, Preston, Holly, Debra (as if you couldn't tell), Trystan, Jason, Dave, Ric, Darienne, Brooke, Michelle, the other Christine (oh yeah!), Fred M., Id, Ego, and Super-ego, as well as the many sides of my personality (I think it's a hexagon).

Trystan: Hey!!! Did you-all notice that Marc and I both actually agreed on something this semester? (Oh — come on we agree on lots of things, — Marc) Yup — we both agree that undergrads get treated like &%! and it should change! Thank you Marc, for putting at least one idea of substance in your usually silly, meaningless column! Oh — and listen to Debra and get an ethnically appropriate euphemism for your insecure male self!

Marc Elliott

Debra here, yes it is the goddess speaking to all my loyal fans, all two of you (thanx Newton). First of all, what is a phallic burrito? Let's get serious Marc, only I am allowed to think of myself as lofty. You are really going too far with this fantasy. How about a cheez stuffed weenie (kosher, of course) or perhaps a DC clam roll. And Trystan, Felice still says NO!

Well the semester has come to a close and Marc I'm sorry that you are going to have to find another replacement for your lazy butt. Where will you find someone who is as gracious, understanding, kind, sincere, sensitive and lovely as me? Shouldn't be too hard.

At this point I'll sign off and turn the column back to Marc, but before I do I'd like to say a few things to a few people. Felice and everyone at Hillel, you are all awesome. To all of the sexy writers here at the Collegian (Trystan this does not include you or Marc), I want all of your hot bods. And of course to all of the boys I have dated here at the University, GROW UP!

* * * * * * * * * *

All mourn! All mourn! Tim Sniffen, creator and artist of the famed comic strip "Tangelo Pie" is leaving us. He and his main character, Gabe, are graduating from university life. [sob.] But, next semester the "Tangelo Pie," "Cast of Thousands," Collegian T-shirts will be available to the public, get 'em while they're hot! Whoa, holy killer cheap publicity and self promotion Batman!

Ya know Herb? Scrod's not so bad after you scrape off all those greasy bread crumbs. I hope I'm not just lowering my standards.

Well let's call it a semester and move along into winter session, next semester promises to be, well, interesting. I can only hope to survive and not screw up too much, after all I'm only human.

Spin Doctors bring the cure for exam-time ills

By DAVID DEMERJIAN
Collegian Correspondent

Hey kids! Them there's the Spin Doctors, and they'll be mixing up the cure to you musical blues today at UMass and later tonight at Pearl Street — check it out!

On this Tuesday you can get hot, sweaty and shake crazy butt to the groove of The Spin Doctors or you can lay back, stare vacantly at your assigned readings and play connect the dots with the holes in the ceiling tiles.

It's like this ... you can get with this or you can get with that, you make the call but let me give you a clue. This Long Island-based quartet is hard at work promoting their latest Epic release Pocket Full of Kryptonite and bring to Pearl Street on Tuesday a show that's packin' more volts than a Duracell.

The blues-drenched and funk-infused Doctors are returning east after an extensive tour of the west coast with stops in California, Washington and Texas that kicked off here at Pearl Street back in September. Presently the band is receiving heavy airplay on college radio stations nationwide with special attention being given to the first single "Two Princes," which is a hook-laden cut that you find yourself singing to in a matter of minutes.

The word on the streets is that the Spin Doctors have just finished making a video for "Two Princes" and we should be seeing it soon on MTV. Pocket Full of Kryptonite, as well, is charting in the Top-40 in college sales and should stay there for some time as more people are getting to hear them.

The Spin Doctors are a live band, they thrive on live gigs. In 1989 the Doctors did something that is almost unheard of — they released their first album as a live EP. Up for Grabs was recorded at The Wetlands club on Long Island and includes the hit track "Little Miss Can't be Wrong" which also appears on Kryptonite in studio form. After building up an immense following in the New York area the Doctors of Spin took their "cure for your funky ills" to England in January 1991 with much success and an impressive number of new "Spinheads".

The new album, released this fall, is full of slammin' tracks that are propelled by the air-tight rhythm section of Mark White on bass and Aaron Comess on drums. Guitarist Eric Schenkman lays down-and-dirty licks on the tracks accented with his tasty, crunchy style of play. The Doctors' frontman Chris Barron is a treat to see live, he is one of the most charismatic singers I have seen in some time. Besides his unique singing style, he has the ability to motivate the crowd to extreme proportions.

Kicking things off for the funk masters will be local favorites, Synaptic Snap. The Snap is a four-man booty-shakin' unit who have acquired much attention in the past year in the Valley. Known for their ability to instantly move the crowd into a massive craze, Synaptic Snap has a set filled with originals that focus on syncopated grooves ranging form ska to funky dance beats.

Ironically, the Spin Doctors are one of the Synaptic Snap's favorite bands and the funky fusion of the two groups should promise to cause some serious dance crime.

In addition to the performance at Pearl Street this evening, the Spin Doctors will play the WMUA Live Music Project this afternoon for an acoustic set.

The Live Music Project show is free of charge and open to the pubic at Campus Center room 174 at 4 p.m. If you can't make that, or just can't get enough of The Spin Doctors, they will play at Pearl Street tonight at 8 p.m. for an 18+ show.

Smocking 16th century style

AP — Do you know what smocking is? Would you like to learn how to do it?

Contact the Arnold Mills Community House in Cumberland, where Rhode Island's only chapter of the Smocking Arts Guild meets monthly.

Smocking was the way 16th-century English country folk managed the cumbersome yardage of their apparel. Smocking entails creating tiny pleats held in place with embroidery. The final product is a section of fabric that expands and contracts.

Kathleen Ferreira, president of the Yankee chapter that draws members from all over the state as well as Connecticut and Massachusetts, said projects include smocking lampshades, ornaments and wall hangings, as well as traditional clothing items.

Monthly SAGA meetings provide patterns, new ideas and a chance to explore materials. January and February meetings will focus on a lesson taught by Cindy Foose, an internationally known smocker. The chapter also puts out a newsletter.

Wildcats under those circumstances.

But like any quality team in sports history, UMass can pride itself on the ability to look past its losses. UMass could have very easily let the disappointment of losing to Kentucky carry straight into the Xavier contest and then it would have been in big trouble.

It was the general consensus prior to the season's beginning that Kentucky would be UMass' greatest challenge; the ultimate opportunity for the Minutemen to prove themselves. But the given situation did not allow UMass to capitalize on that chance, so in a way it seemed the Minutemen had "blown it," they'd lost their biggest game of the year.

However, that was not UMass' approach. Instead, it decided to put the Kentucky loss out of its mind, and directed all its focus on the next opponent, which was Xavier. The Minutemen proceeded to play what was probably their best game of the season, cremating a team nearly as heralded as Kentucky.

Now, the Minutemen are back on track and it's unlikely they'll be derailed anytime soon.

One more thing on Xavier: If coach Pete Gillen had stayed on the floor any longer than he did, I was going to shackle him to his chair. The floor is for the players, Pete, not the coaches.

The Minutemen rate an enthusiastic thumbs up for their performance to date, and I see few weaknesses, with the possible exception of foul shooting, which might make them vulnerable the rest of the way. If UMass puts on a show, Jan. 4 against Oklahoma on ESPN, and provided that win makes them 12-1, hello, Top 25.

But UMass is a "one game at a time" type of team, and that's a sound attitude. Next up is New Hampshire, which is in town tonight (Curry Hicks Cage, 7 p.m.). These Wildcats (how can there be so damn many?) are off to a 1-3 start, following a lackluster 3-25 record last season. But hey, one game at a time.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Logic has nothing to do with a decision made today. You will not get far trying to reason or rationalize with someone. Follow your hunches about people and opportunities.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Take a conservative approach when making innovative suggestions. Your original ideas will receive a better hearing that way. Avoid risky forms of recreation. Take a friend's advice with a grain of salt.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): It should be easy to make the correct choice today. Avoid making a big deal out of nothing at work. Time is on your side. Play a waiting game.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): You can afford to bargain now. Do not make a major purchase until you have studied all the angles and priced several sources. Be sure to fulfill your family obligations. Offer practical support.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Progress can be made on the job front. Well-connected pals could aid your career or give you good advice on handling a financial matter. Plan a great evening for your loved ones and buy your older brother compact disks for Hanukkah.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): It pays to hedge your bets. Have an alternative plan up your sleeve in case of last-minute changes. Leave your work at the office tonight. Entertain a small group in your home.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You usually have shrewd instincts where money is concerned. Adopt a wait-and-see attitude if you have any misgivings about a business transaction. Keep within your budget.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Small details could become petty annoyances. Scour a business plan to make sure all is well. Shop for value when purchasing holiday gifts. A teen-ager needs more of your time and attention.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Keep important discussions under wraps for the time being. A new concept could be misunderstood by certain people on the job. Show loved one a wonderful evening.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The chances of working out an agreement are better today than yesterday. Remain calm and cooperative. A compromise helps relieve tension between you and your partner. Focus on achieving shared goals.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Display your affection openly to someone you love. Creative types should concentrate on getting their ideas on paper. Brainstorming sessions are favored. Cater to the feelings of a parent this evening. Be attentive.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): Unusual contractual arrangements or expenditures may be needed to wipe out an obligation. Parlay your communication skills into a consultant's job. Investigate self-employment options.

Men's gymnastics opens, finishes second

By KIM ADDESA
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team, looking to improve on last year's fourth place finish, showed Saturday night in the Boyden Gym that they mean business.

The Minutemen, who hosted their first meet of the season, the UMass Open, finished second with 247.00 points. Defending E.I.G.L. champion Temple finished in first place with 256.55 points, while Southern Connecticut finished third with 203.50 points.

UMass coach Roy Johnson was pleased with his team's successful performance this early in the season, and considered the meet, and the performances in it, "a good indication of where we are, and where we can go."

Especially impressive were the performances of UMass sophomores Jay Santos and Jason Braud. Santos scored an 8.45 on pommel horse and an 8.15 on parrallel bars, while Braud scored a 9.25 on floor exercise and an 8.85 on pommel horse.

Junior Steve Christensen, who competed in four events, also had a strong meet with scores ranging from an 8.4 on vault, to a 9.3 on pommel horse.

The showing of freshman Stu Baker pleased and promised Johnson. Baker scored an 8.15 on still rings, an impressive score for a freshman gymnast competing in his first collegiate meet.

The performance gave Johnson even more reason to be optimistic about the future success of his team.

The meet gave gymnasts from all three schools a chance to experiment with new routines and realize what they are capable of doing before the start of league competition.

Southern Connecticut, and former U.S. Olympic Coach Abie Grossfeld was dissapointed with his team's performance, but considered it, "good training" for what he considers to be an "extremely young and inexperienced team."

The gymnasts from UMass used this meet as a tune-up for the big meet coming January 18th when the Minutemen face Navy.

Navy carries a 10 meet winning streak against UMass into this year's competition and that is something Johnson and his gymnasts are determined to change.

When January 18th comes, with continued hard work and determination Johnson feels his gymnasts will be more than ready to face Navy, and end the winning streak.

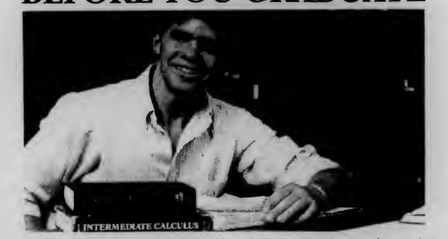
BEFORE YOU GRADUATE



The Navy offers you, as a qualified college student, the chance to earn up to $30,000 during your junior and senior years. And you never have to put on a Navy uniform until after graduation. No drills, no summer obligations. In the Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate Program you'll get your start in nuclear power where nuclear power started. In the Navy. After you graduate, you'll get six months of graduate level engineering education in Orlando, Florida, plus six months of hands-on engineer training at a nuclear reactor trainer...and more. Just meet these requirements:

- Have completed sophomore year, majoring in engineering, math, science or chemistry.
- Have a minimum 3.0 GPA.
- Have completed a mathematics sequence through integral calculus.
- Have completed one year of calculus-based physics.
- Be a United States citizen and no more than 26½ years old at time of commissioning.
- Meet Navy's physical standards.

Call or visit your Navy Officer representative on campus TODAY: 1-800-444-7134.

Women's gymnastics is not the big-ticket event that lacrosse, football or men's hoops are but maybe that should change. Ask Tammy Marshall. She was merely ranked the No. 1 gymnast in New England, placed 16th in the NCAA all-around competition and was invited to participate in the World Games during the summer. Her teammates shrugged off a season-ending injury to Kristen Turmail to finish 10-1 on the season, finishing third in the Atlantic-10s. Yes, there's more than just intramurals in Boyden.

Spring sprang upon UMass with NCAA bids in softball and lacrosse and a near-miss for the baseball team. Three baseball players didn't miss, though, as Derek Dana, Brian Bright and Glen DiSacrina were all drafted by Major League baseball clubs. "Bright-O" signed with the Red Sox and played class A ball in Elmira, N.Y. DiSarcina and Dana signed with the White Sox and Giants, respectively. They'll be missed come springtime.

UMass softball (39-13) solidified its reputation as a New England power by sweeping through A-10 play undefeated. The Minutewomen swept virtually every A-10 award and took the Conference title handily, only to fall short to Nevada-Las Vegas as an at-large bid in the NCAAs. Holly Aprile and Darlene Claffey were A-10 player and pitcher of the year, respectively, and coach Elaine Sortino won Coach of the Year. They finished the season ranked 18th by the NCAA.

Meanwhile, lacrosse shook off early-season losses to Cornell and Brown, bouncing back to a 9-4 record and yet another NCAA tournament berth. Wins over Yale and Rutgers, Mark Millon's emergence as a scoring threat and Jim McAleavey's inheritance of the UMass assist record were season highlights for the Minutemen.

Lacrosse also provided the "moment most likely to become a sitcom plot," when former Collegian sports editor Adrienne Matt found herself stuck in Ithaca, N.Y. after the Cornell game. Future lacrosse writers are hopeful the bus waits for them this time around, especially in Baltimore and points west.

Baseball also shook off the early-season doldrums, running off a 15-5 stretch which clinched it a spot in the A-10s. Strong pitching from Rich Graham and the emergence of Ron Villone as an intimidating, I-dare-you-to-hit-this relief pitcher, made the Minutemen a contender in the A-10. Although the Minutemen fell just short against Rutgers (again) in the final, their year could be termed a success. Three draft picks can't be wrong, after all.

• A summer later, UMass picked up where it left off — in the headlines. Both soccer programs made unexpected runs at the top, as the women preservered through graduation losses to return to the NCAA tourney. Meanwhile, the men, who were playing only on a reprieve from program-ending budget cuts, came out of nowhere to enter their first A-10 tourney in years and keep their team alive.

First, a note on the football team. The Minutemen endured an uncharacteristic sub-.500 season, suffering from costly turnovers and an unforgiving schedule (four opponents were among the 16 invited to the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs).

However, Jerome Bledsoe's performance rushing the football makes up for some of that. He finished the season second in the nation in rushing yards per game. What a way to end a career, second only to the great Garry Pearson (if you remember him, good for you) in UMass career rushing yards. Is Bledsoe the greatest UMass back of all time? He has a strong argument given the fact he played against stronger competition much of his career. That one may never be answered. . .

As the calendar year draws to a close, there are some people associated with UMass sports worth mentioning by name for their individual achievements: Trish Riley, playing through pain; the parents of the men's soccer team, who wouldn't let the program be sacrificed; every athlete from every team affected by budget cuts, or "gone but not forgotten" (women's lax and volleyball and both tennis teams); the Blues Brothers; the UMass superfan who wears that grey animal suit; Eric "Elvis" Geldart, the favorite referee of UMass hoop fans; parents who make roadtrips to God-forsaken places like Norristown, Pa.; the guys who sang the Hartford Whalers fight song whenever Jon Gruber made a save (which was pretty damn often), the Minuteman Marching Band, as always "the Power and Class of New England;" and all the fans.

The sports exile is over. Long live the Buffalo Bills.

UMass may be minus McCoy tonight

Star guard injures left ankle during practice

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

As the University of Massachusetts basketball team (6-1) was preparing for tonight's game against the University of New Hampshire yesterday, star guard Jim McCoy sprained his left ankle.

McCoy, UMass' all-time leading scorer, fell hard to the floor during an intersquad scrimmage. He immediately grabbed for his ankle as he cringed in pain.

After a few minutes on the floor he was helped from the court, unable to put any weight on the ankle itself. After practice he was wearing an aircast and using one crutch. His status for tonight's game (7 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage) is questionable.

"As I went down the ankle hit hard against the floor," McCoy said. "At first it was a real sharp pain, now it is more of a constant throb. It is real sore right now, we can't tell until tomorrow about whether I can play."

UMass coach John Calipari said, "It is sprained, we aren't sure how bad it is right now, but he is questionable for tomorrow."

After a slow start to the season, McCoy has come on strong as of late. He is averaging 17.8 points per game in his last five outings which has increased his average to 14.4 points for the year.

"Jimmy is our breakdown player," Calipari said. "When our offense breaks down we can give it to him to get his own shot. Right now we are so balanced that in the short run it won't effect us too much. But, I hope he is not out for a long period."

Calipari added if McCoy can't play tonight, freshman Jerome Malloy would probably start in his place.

Another hazard Massachusetts will have to avoid is a let down coming off a big 91-72 win over Xavier on Saturday. New Hampshire (1-3 this year and 3-25 last season) has lost to Providence College by 19 points and Boston College by 35 already this season. Getting the team up could be a challenge for Calipari.

"A key to our team playing well is going to be the fans," Calipari said. "This whole Alaska thing is starting to effect us but on Saturday the fans didn't give us a chance to get down. We need the fans to come in and act like this is a great opponent and keep us going.

"I think the tradition that has been started of standing the whole game is just great. Duke is the only other place where that occurs, it is just real special for us."

New Hampshire coach Jim Boylan feels the Cage should be a factor in the game.

"We talked about the hostile environment," Boylan said. "We don't experience this type of a crowd in our conference but we will do what we can. It should be interesting."

The Minutemen, who went 9-0 against New England teams last year, would like to duplicate the perfect mark this season, but Calipari noted the better teams in the area would not play UMass.

"I like the regional games but most teams won't play us," Calipari said. "Providence, B.C., Connecticut and Northeastern all won't play us and they are who we want to play."

Game notes: The game can be heard on WMUA (91.1 FM) with Dave Oldred and Pat Borelli, and on WHMP (99.3 FM) with George Miller and Kevin Kennedy. WMUA will continue to broadcast the basketball games over intersession.

University of Massachusetts forward Harper Williams and the Minutemen will be in action at 7 p.m. tonight in Curry Hicks Cage against New Hampshire.

THE MATCHUPS

Anton Brown vs. Jose Powell — Despite being only 5-foot-11, Powell is New Hampshire's big gun. The freshman guard is averaging 25.5 points a game.

Harper Williams vs. Shaft Lewis — For the first time in three games Williams won't be matched up against a premier center.

William Herndon vs. Pat Manor — Manor, a 6-foot-5 forward, should have a tough time dealing with Herndon's superior speed.

Men's indoor track begins new season

By KEITH BENNETT
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's track team kicked off its indoor season Saturday at the Brown Invitation. There were no team scores kept, but the Minutemen got strong performances from a number of athletes.

One of the top performances of the day was turned in by senior Steve Brown in the 500-meter run. His time of 1 minute, 5.25 seconds was not only good enough to win the event, but also qualified him to run in the 1C4A Championship Meet.

"Steve Brown basically ran away from the field in the 500," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "It's very impressive to qualify for the 1C4A's in the very first meet of the year."

Joe Kourafas and Paul Doyle placed first and second, respectively, in the pentathlon. Kourafas scored 3,263 points in the five-event competition to Doyle's 3,085. In the pentathlon, Kourafas placed first in the long jump and high jump while Doyle won the 55 hurdles.

Kevin Walters, the top scorer from last year's squad, started off the 1991-92 season with a victory in the 55 dash. His time was 6.67. Teammate Lionel Benjamin placed third in 6.73.

Ben Nichols also took home a victory for UMass. Nichols took the 1,000 in a personal-best 2:38.6.

In the field events, Nelson Simao led the way for UMass with a second place finish in the shot put. His best toss of the afternoon was 44-feet, 8 1/2 inches.

Other athletes placing for the Minutemen were Luke Simpson and Andy Yahner. Simpson placed fourth in the 35-pound weight with a throw of 42-9 1/2. Yahner placed fourth in the triple jump in 42-5.

"Overall, all of the coaches were pleased with the results," O'Brien said. "This meet showed that the team is in very good condition and has some good potential.

"I think the results give us every reason to be optimistic for the season. We had some real positive results."

Women's hoop hosts Brooklyn at the Cage

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

After losing its last two games by a total of five points, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team will try to get back on the winning track today (4 p.m.) as they host the Brooklyn Lady Knights at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Last week the Minutewomen lost 58-54 at Boston University. This past Saturday Hartford played the spoiler, winning 51-50 on two free throws with :30 left.

Brooklyn (3-0) returns all five starters from last year's 17-11 squad, and is led by senior point guard Lashaina Dickerson's 12 points, 6 rebounds, 6 assists, and 6 steals per contest. Kathleen Murtaugh is contributing 10 points and 6 rebounds from the off-guard position.

The Minutewomen are led by senior center Kim Kristofik's 11.5 points and 8.7 rebounds per game. Point guard Trish Riley and forward Jen Moran average 11.2 and 11.0 points, respectively.

One of UMass' main problems is keeping their amount of turnovers to an absolute minimum. The team committed 20 turnovers in the game against B.U., and 23 against Hartford. Many of the miscues in the Hartford game were attributed to sloppy and risky passes, often trying to get the ball over or around their taller opponents.

A key to remedying this situation is the play of point guard Trish Riley, whose assist-to-turnover ratio is 14-25, but is bothered by a chronic back ailment that kept her out of the last 10 minutes of the Hartford game. Her status is day-to-day.

The crowd turnout at the Cage for the Hartford game was impressive, a reverse of last year's barren bleachers.

Losing doesn't keep Minutemen down

The University of Massachusetts basketball team is 6-1, and it's time to make some early season assessments of the Minutemen. Their thorough drubbing of the Xavier Musketeers Saturday night was the perfect remedy to cure any bad feelings about the loss to Kentucky.

Ted Kottler

They lugged their tired bodies into Rupp Arena last Wednesday, understandably exhausted from winning the GAS (my own clever acronym for the Great Alaskan Shootout) and then having to suffer through a horrendous journey to the Bluegrass State.

Those in charge of assembling UMass' schedule this season might want to do a few things differently for 1992-93. There was no way the Minutemen nor any other team in the NCAA could have played up to potential against Jamal Mashburn and his fellow

The year in UMass sports

1991 had its share of successful competition

Let's not waste any time and space on an introduction. You know who these people are.

They're your classmates and neighbors. They also represent the University of Massachusetts in various athletic competitions. So without further ado, let's look at the biggest moments of the 1991 sports year, spring and fall. I'll try not to leave anyone out.

• Winter 1991: If there was a recurrent theme in men's basketball (20-13, NIT Final Four), it was last-second, game-winning shots. Cal's Crew both lived and died by them, as both Rutgers (home) and Temple (away) escaped at the buzzer.

On the winning end, few will forget "Three-fer" Rafer Giles' 1,000th point — a buzzer-beating three-pointer that defeated Rhode Island. Absolutely no one will forget Tony Barbee's "shot of the century" against Siena in the NIT quarterfinals. I dunno, maybe it's me (I was there) but turnaround three-pointers with 1.9 seconds left in the game tend to leave an impression.

Meanwhile, men's swimming left its competition in the wading pool ... again. It won its fifth straight New England Championship by yet another lop-sided margin, at least 100 points as I recall. It is, in the truest sense of the word, a dynasty.

Greg Sukiennik

If you're looking for real character, though, the women's basketball team presents a compelling argument. Yeah, they were winless in 1990-91. They could have thrown in the towel and most would understand. But they didn't. That says a lot for the Minutewomen. It's a lot easier and a lot more fun to work hard when your team's winning, but when you can do that through tough times, now that says something.

Gorbachev's resignation said an option

By DEBORAH SEWARD
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Lawmakers in Ukraine and Beylorussia yesterday overwhelmingly ratified the Slavic commonwealth pact, and Kazakhstan's president called the Soviet Union's future doubtful. Aides to Mikhail S. Gorbechev differed over whether he would soon resign.

Nursultan Nazarbayev, the Kazakh president who is Gorbechev's last powerful ally in the republics, had said previously said he thought a union was still possible and Gorbechev could play a role in it.

But late yesterday, Soviet media quoted him as saying: "Today, prospects for signing the new Union Treaty forming an economic community are more problematic than ever."

While emphasizing his support for the union, Nazarbayev said from the Kazakh capital of Alma-Ata: "Kazakhstan must be ready for any change in events, and if that happens, we will have to live self-sufficiently."

His statements were far more alarmist than the reassurances he offered Monday in Moscow during meetings with Gorbechev and Russian President Boris Yeltsin.

Yeltsin, Ukrainian President Leonid Kravchuk and Beylorussian leader Stanislav Shushkevich declared the Soviet Union dead politically on Sunday and invited other Soviet republics to join them in the commonwealth. At least one, Armenia, indicated it might.

In Washington today, CIA director Robert Gates today predicted this winter may hold "the most significant civil disorder" in the crumbling Soviet Union since the Communist revolution in 1917. Gates called the Soviet situation "dangerously unstable" in testimony to the House Armed Services Committee.

Contradictory reports about Gorbechev's future indicated high-level uncertainty about his future role.

Gorbechev's top spokesman today denied speculation by another member of the inner circle that the president plans to resign. "Today he didn't think about it. As far as yesterday is concerned, you had better ask him," spokesman Andrei Grachev told reporters.

Grachev was commenting on a remark made by Georgy Shakhnazarov, one of Gorbechev's senior political advisers, who said the situation in the Soviet Union "is developing in such a way that it probably won't be necessary to wait long for [Gorbechev's resignation]."

But Grachev said: "The president's position is that, at present, and as far as he feels that he has the possibility to exercise the substantial political influence. . .he's going to secure for that [position] all his efforts so far as this is in his power."

Asked whether Gorbechev's authority extends to Russia, Beylorussia and Ukraine, Grachev said yes.

"Mr. Gorbechev considers himself to be the president of the U.S.S.R., which certainly includes the three states."

The Ukrainian parliament voted 288-10 yesterday to ratify the commonwealth agreement. It added 12 amendments emphasizing Ukrainian independence, stipulating that the commonwealth is not a legal state, and giving Ukraine permission to create an army.

White Eagle Center to close

Native American students join cultural center protest

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

Native American students will join the Latina/o, Asian and New World Theater groups and close their White Eagle Native American Cultural Center today Center to protest the University's "multicultural facade," said the Native American Student Committee yesterday.

Representatives of the Asian Students Committee, Latina/o Students Committee and New World Theatre met with members of the White Eagle Center Monday night, to ask for support and for the the Native American Center's closing. By closing the centers students have halted all cultural events usually coordinated through them.

Representatives from the White Eagle Cultural Center are expected to announce their decision in a joint press conference with the Asian and Latino/a groups and New World Theater to be held 10:30 this morning in the Skinner Hall auditorium.

"As of right now we have nothing to lose," said Chris Pegram, a student co-coordinator for the White Eagle Center. "The University has been saying for years that there are not enough Native students here to warrant a Native American Studies Program. But how will there ever be enough students if there is nothing here to challenge our needs."

"The Native Amercian community needs more than this univesity has spoon fed us," added Pegram. "We need a viable Native Studies program and adequate representation on the faculty level as well as proper representation in academic curriculums."

Chancellor O'Brien is expected to release a statement on the demands of the Asian/Latino/New World Theatre within the next few days. Today marks the fourth day past the deadline set by the cultural center groups for an administration reponse to the first set of demands.

University spokesperson Karin Sherbin said the Chancellor is attempting to respond. "He spent a lot of time talking to the students about the issues," she said. "Everyone is trying to put together a thoughtful response."

Sherbin said the chancellor has not yet had the White Eagle demands presented to him.

The Native American students' decision comes about a month after the United Asia Resource Center was closed by a group of Asian students Oct 21. The Asian students were joined by a group of Latin students who closed their center Nov. 7.

"When I first came here they said we have a great Native Studies program," said Kahon:wes Deere, a first year physics major from the Mohawk Nation of Kahnawake. "Right now it is one class. We have no Native Americans on faculty, one advisor and almost no students."

"It is always the minority curriculum which is cut," "It is always the minority curriculum which is cut,"

Foreign affairs key in election, says Anderson

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Although George Bush has been widely criticized for spending too much time on foreign policy and ignoring domestic issues, foreign affairs should form a prominent part of the upcoming presidential election, according to a former presidential candidate speaking at the University of Massachusetts last night.

Former Illinois Rep. John Anderson, who garnered 7 percent of the popular vote as an independent candidate in 1980, challenged Bush to define the phrase "new world order," that he used during and after the Persian Gulf war.

"At this epoch in history, this open moment, the President should take some time to explain to the American people what the phrase 'new world order under law,' means," Anderson said. "Is it just a rhetorical phrase?"

Anderson noted that the recent end of the Cold War, which he said provided the rationale of American foreign policy for 45 years, means the United States should undergo a "fundamental reassessment" of its foreign policy.

"Now is a chance for the U.S. to take world leadership to move in the direction the nations of Western Europe have been moving in the past 30-40 years," Anderson said. "[Europe] provides an example of what one region of the world can to do to establish cooperation."

Anderson was referring to the long-term process of European political and economic integration as an "example that the only remaining superpower could follow."

Anderson read a memorandum from Charles Colson, an aide to former president Richard Nixon, as an example of the thinking he said he believes is going on in George Bush's plans for reelection in 1992. The memo stressed the necessity for Nixon to appear busy working on domestic issues during the 1972 campaign as a substitute for extensive campaigning.

"The goal was to project a president working busily on the domestic front when he's not out on the hustings

Smith claims accuser seduced him into sex

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. - A tense William Kennedy Smith took the stand Tuesday and painted his accuser as a sexually voracious woman who seduced him into sex twice in a half hour, then cried rape for reasons he can't explain.

"What are you, some kind of sex machine here?" the prosecutor asked Smith sarcastically. An objection blocked the answer.

"The issue here is I'm innocent!" Smith exclaimed as he fended off repeated suggestions by Assistant State Attorney Moira Lasch that his story was unbelievable.

Repeatedly she challenged his assertion that the woman was the sexual aggressor in an Easter weekend encounter that began at a nightclub.

"What are you saying, that she raped you, Mr. Smith?" the prosecutor snapped.

"Absolutely not!" said Smith.

The 31-year-old defendant was pale and nervous as he took the stand but gained confidence during questioning by his attorney, Roy Black.

In 4 1/2 hours on the stand, Smith gave a calm, step by step account that contradicted many points in the woman's testimony last week.

Moments after he concluded his testimony, the defense rested its case. The prosecutor began calling rebuttal witnesses.

Smith said that after his sexual encounter with the woman, he told his cousin Patrick Kennedy: "This woman's a real nut."

The 30-year-old Florida woman testified tearfully for two days last week, portraying Smith as a cruel rapist who assaulted her without warning, without sexual foreplay or even suggestive language. She said he tackled her as she tried to leave the beach and raped her on the estate lawn.

He said the woman's bruises did not come from him.

Late in the day, Smith's attorney refused a request to tell jurors that the woman had an abortion in the past. The judge refused.

Smith testified after the prosecutor and Circuit Court Judge Mary Lupo clashed over limitations placed on cross-examination. The judge ruled out any questions even hinting three women's allegations that Smith had tried to sexually assault them in the 1980's.

The defense twice demanded a mistrial claiming Mrs. Lasch's hostile questioning had moved outside legal limits. The judge scolded the prosecutor and told her if she asked another impermissible question, "You will not get away with it."

Smith is charged with sexual battery and battery. If convicted, he could be sentenced to 4 1/2 years in prison.

The fateful encounter began, he said, when his uncle, Sen. Edward Kennedy, roused him and Patrick from bed in the early morning hours of March 30 to go out for a beer. They went to Au Bar, a nightclub where he said the woman "brushed against me."

"I said hi and she said hi," he said and recounted how a brief conversation led to dancing and kissing on the dance floor.

"I was feeling that I had gotten picked up," Smith said.

About 3 a.m., he said, the woman offered him a ride home and jumped at a chance to go swimming in the ocean off the Kennedy estate. The woman has said she doesn't know how to swim.

Warning system said obsolete

End of Cold War may mean warning system's demise

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The Emergency Broadcast System, originally designed to warn the nation of a nuclear attack, is being re-evaluated now that the Cold War has thawed.

Federal officials met with New England broadcasters Tuesday to discuss the future of the system, known to most people as an annoying test tone on the radio or television.

"We're concerned that it needs to be revitalized," said Richard Smith, chief of the Federal Communication Commission's field operation bureau. "I think over the last few years the attention and priority given to it has diminished a little bit."

Although the system has never been used to warn of a national emergency, EBS officials say it still has a role to play when earthquakes, hurricanes and tornadoes strike.

The FCC has been holding regional conferences around the country to discuss the best way to update the system. They met Tuesday at the Federal Emergency Management Agency headquarters in Maynard.

Dennis Snyder, EBS chairman for Vermont who works for WJOY-WOKO in Burlington, said it is not clear how the lines of communication should work for state emergencies.

"You have radio stations out there that are willing to serve the public, but it's unclear where the information is going to come from," Snyder said.

Problems with the system became apparent during the 1989 earthquake in San Francisco that killed 63 people. The system might have been more effective if state and local communication plans had been up to date.

"I think there was a great deal of confusion," Smith said. "Some of the local officials had information they wanted to disseminate, but they didn't know how to do that."

When emergency officials wanted to send a message out over radio and television stations, there was no single number they could call.

"They were sort of dealing with the stations on a one on one basis," Smith said. The emergency system was improved by the time fire swept through the Oakland hills this fall.

Broadcasters from New England told federal officials Tuesday that they need additional backup equipment, such as emergency generators, to make sure they can function during a power outage.

Former President Harry Truman initiated a national emergency system. Originally, the system was over AM radio, and broadcasters were automatically supposed to switch over to one or two stations.

"The idea there was to confuse the enemy bombers who might be using radio stations to navigate," Smith said.

The government has been working with broadcasters and state and local officials on a voluntary basis to develop EBS plans since 1976.

campaigning," Anderson said. "Right now, there's probably an aide toiling busily at his desk working on ways to present George Bush in this same way."

The issue of how political candidates are presented before the public has become an increasingly important part of American politics, according to Anderson.

"I hope the media will be very mindful of the heavy influence they will have in the upcoming campaign," Anderson said. "I've talked to enough media people to be convinced that they admit they were used and manipulated during the 1988 campaign into covering events that really weren't even events at all."

Anderson said the nastiness of the 1988 campaign between Bush and then-Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis demonstrates that the media's role is particularly important in light of the fact that "the level of public discussion has descended to such a lamentable level," and that serious efforts should be made to structure political campaigns differently.

Among Anderson's suggestions for restructuring are a public endowment for at least four televised debates between presidential candidates and increased public campaign funding to "clean up the sewer of loose money," that incumbents receive for reelection campaigns.

Anderson said he doesn't support term limitations for Congress, which he called "too blunt an instrument," to implement political change.

Carpenter denies Senator bribed him

BOSTON (AP) – A carpenter from Massachusetts who sold a story to a tabloid about Patrick Kennedy's drug rehabilitation denied that Sen. Edward Kennedy tried to bribe him, as reported in the New York Post.

Robert Remy, 23, of Milford, said he did not make the statements attributed to him by the Post reporter who wrote the story.

"That's wrong. That's 100 percent wrong. I've never said anything about Ted Kennedy calling me. I don't know where they got that from," Remy said Tuesday.

But Murray Weiss, the Post reporter who wrote the story, said he spoke to Remy several times.

"He said these things numerous times," Weiss said. "It's absolutely preposterous that he's denying talking to me even."

Remy is under an exclusive contract with the National Enquirer, and said he has not talked to other reporters. Remy said that he met Patrick Kennedy in 1986 in a drug rehabilitation clinic where he was being treated for cocaine abuse. Patrick Kennedy, now a Rhode Island legislator, came forward and confirmed that he sought treatment for drug use.

The Post reported Tuesday that Remy said Kennedy offered him money to retract his statements to the press.

Paul Donovan, a spokesman for the senator, denied the report.

• A man reported to the police on Monday evening the theft of his bicycle from the front foyer of the engineering lab. The estimated value of the bike, which was chained to a railing, is $775.

• A man reported to the police on Monday afternoon the theft of his Alpine car stereo from his bookbag which was in the lobby of John Adams Residence Hall. The estimated value of the stereo is $700.

• A man reported to the police on Monday afternoon the theft of his bookbag while he was studying in the library. The estimated value of the bag is $100.

Chimney traps boy

SAN DIEGO (AP) — With visions of Santa Claus dancing through his head, a 12-year-old boy who locked himself out of his house tried to slide down the chimney and became stuck.

The boy, who wished to remain anonymous for fear of teasing from classmates, was stuck for about two sooty hours Monday until rescue workers plucked him to safety. He was uninjured.

"He figured that if Santa Claus can get in though the chimney, he could too," his mother said. "He was so embarrassed. ...He said he might not go back to school for a week." She spoke to the San Diego Union on condition of anonymity.

The crisis started when the boy came home at 3 p.m. and realized the front door was locked, with his key inside. He clambered up to the roof and slid feet first into the brick chimney.

Deere added. "You would never hear of the history department cutting a non-native course and adding a Native history course to their department. It is always the minorities who get cut."

"Last year when Professor Emma Cappelluzzo retired from the anthropology department where she taught Anthro 270, Native American history, the position and the course were eliminated," said Alexander Nguyen, an Asian [illegible] mittee spokesperson.

Nguyen called for an immediate halt to recruitment of minority students until the demands begin to be met.

"For years we recruited for the University and held exotic food festivals and dance festivals but these were not for us," he said. "These were for the University but they have not been keeping in stride on the academic side by not respecting our cultures in the classroom."

IMPORTANT RESIDENCE HALL INFORMATION

It is important for all residents planning to live on-campus for the Spring 1992 semester to remember the following important policies and procedures. Please read this information carefully and be sure you understand and are aware of each of the following obligations. Thank you.

1. PAY YOUR SPRING FEE BILL BY THE BURSAR'S INITIAL JANUARY DUE DATE. As always, financial obligations must be met by all residents who wish to retain their assignments for the upcoming semester. Spring semester fee bills will be mailed to your permanent address by early December. Failure to pay your bill by the due date may affect your assignment status for the Spring.

2. MAKE CERTAIN YOU REMAIN IN GOOD STANDING throughout intersession. If you are withdrawn for ANY reason after the last day of the semester, December 21, 1991, your residence hall assignment for the spring may be cancelled.

3. YOU MUST TAKE BELONGINGS HOME if you have requested a change in residence halls or if you have submitted a blue In-House Room Request form asking for a room change.

4. RESIDENCE HALLS CLOSE at the end of the Fall semester on Saturday, December 21, 1991 at 4:00p.m.. Make certain that you follow indicated "check-out" procedures to avoid any unnecessary inconvenience or charges.

HAVE A GREAT INTERSESSION!

Robbery losses affect more than just the pocketbook

What a way to end the semester.

My roommates and I went to Colgate University Friday night to visit a friend from home. I wish we never went.

What we came home to on Saturday afternoon was a nightmare. As we stood outside our Townehouse apartment, my roommate Christine suddenly said, "What happened to the window?" We all stared in horror at the shattered glass of our bathroom window.

My stomach dropped. Our apartment suddenly looked so eerie and dark. I prayed someone had just thrown a snowball or rock through it, but in the back of my mind I knew.

Our worst nightmare had come true. We stared at the empty space in our living room where Laura's t.v. used to be. The wood piece that secures our sliding glass door had been moved. Right then we knew that everything must have been taken.

While my roommates ran upstairs to check our bedrooms, I went in the kitchen to call the police. All I could hear was screaming and crying as I dialed 911. I didn't even want to go in my room because I knew what I would find. Or rather what I wouldn't find. Which was everything.

A CD player, radio, Walkman, CD's, leather jackets, typewriters, everyone's entire jewelry box...gone. They even stole $100 dollars worth of asthma medicine from one of my roommates. To make matters worse, my key to the apartment was missing.

This morning I got out of the shower and walked over to turn on my roommate Moira's radio, and found an empty space instead. I went to grab a pair of my favorite earrings from the jewelry box my grandmother gave me, but then remembered that the box and everything in it is gone — forever.

Losing items such as my typewriter (even though it was my constant companion this semester being a journalism major and a!l) doesn't hurt me as much as losing the gold claddah ring my parents gave me last Christmas, or the watch my sister Becky gave me for my birthday. Typewriters and CD players can be replaced, but you can't put a price on sentimental value.

Amy Prendergast

I would not wish on anyone the feeling I had on Saturday afternoon. Walking into my room and seeing purses dumped, lamps knocked over, and drawers rummaged through, really turned my stomach. To know that people were in our rooms and going through our things makes me sick.

Whoever broke into our apartment climbed through the bathroom window which had been locked. The dead bolt on our front door did nothing, locking every window did nothing, and the extra piece of wood in our sliding glass door did nothing.

Don't let this happen to you. We had heard there were break-ins in the Townehouse area during the semester, but like most people, we thought it would never happen to us. Seriously — take my advice — don't leave anything you would like to see again in your apartment over break, or overnight for that matter.

Last night we all sat in the living room and jumped at every little noise we heard. At 12:30 a.m. we finally called a friend to sleep on our couch. (Thanx Rico.) This is no way to live. We have enough to deal with without having to worry about feeling safe when we go to sleep at night.

I had never called 911 in my life, but have had to call it three times this semester. For $900 a month plus utilities, living in fear, and freezing our butts off, my roommates and I have decided that living in Townehouse is not worth it. We are outta there, and I can't wait.

I know there are probably Townehouse residents out there who have never had a problem, and feel perfectly safe. But unlike us, you probably have students living all around you.

Today I will go home from classes and see the shattered glass, and stare down at my empty wrist and finger. I will go inside and no, I won't flip on Oprah. I won't be typing tonight, and Liz won't be cranking Eric Clapton on her CD player. We'll probably spend the night looking for somewhere to live next semester, and planning which one of our guy friends we'll beg to sleep over tonight.

Before I go, I'd like to thank the Amherst Police Department. They've been really kind and helpful to us this semester and have told us we should never hesitate to call them. I think that's good advice for everyone. And to my roomies: we made it through a fire, car accident and robbery — I think we can handle anything.

UMass can hold its own

The end of the semester is almost over and I am sure we all have a lot to reflect upon. For most of you freshman you have been subjected to issues that you might have only heard about and yet I am sure you all have experienced in one way or another.

Issues such as homophobia, discrimination and rape have all been main issues on this campus this semester. You have been inundated with these issues that are going to open up your minds and thrust you into what you now conceive as the real world.

Mark Preston

You probably had an image of college where you were going to party all the time and hook up every weekend. Movies such as "Animal House" and "Where the Boys Are 84" are two good examples of this stereotype of college life.

Before I came to college I held these misconceptions to be true. Every night I thought would be an endless party, with time to do homework on the weekends. Needless to say I was wrong.

Although the first two weeks of my freshman year began on this foot it quickly ended. Realizing that I was paying over $8,000 to go to this school, I decided to buckle down and try my best. I cannot say that I did particularly great, but respectable.

Now most of you are probably are probably doing the same thing I did, and have done fairly decent so far this semester. Now when I say fairly decent I mean a G.P.A. somewhere above a 2.3. I am not advocating that you sell yourself short or making excuses for your grades, but rather giving you confidence so you realize you had to adjust to an environment you had never before experienced.

People also come to college with the preconceived idea that college is going to be overwhelmingly difficult. To be absolutely truthful I think that this is wrong. You do not have to be extremely intelligent to do well. So far the people that I have met who have done well are those who use their time wisely.

When you go home this winter break, I am sure that most of you are going to run into people from high school and here some surprising if not interesting news. Besides the gossip, you will find out that "so and so" did not do so well this semester. These are the few people who you thought were unbreakable. A high school stereotype that only lasts for four years before it is bashed into little bits.

When I was applying to colleges, I had one teacher tell me that if I was accepted to UMass, she would call the admissions office and revoke my admission. Her reason for doing this was not because I did not deserve to go to this fine university, but rather because she thought I was going to flunk out. She didn't think I had what it took to survive at such a large institution. Other students in our class who she thought "had what it takes" to be in college ended up flunking out of schools with far less reputations for its party atmosphere and being insane.

Also, I am not sure if this university was your first choice, but I can safely say it wasn't mine. I did not want to go to this school because of the false reputation that it had achieved in my town. This reputation was merely a carry over of the days when this place was truly insane. The open container law, the Blue Wall Bar on Fridays before it became the cookie/coffee factory, and the infamous keg parties on the pyramids in Southwest. Those days are long gone, but their tradition still lives on in my town. The reason it does is because the few people who had clout in my high school were not able to handle themselves and indeed become grownups when they went away to college. They ended up flunking out and destroyed the reputation of UMass in my town.

I cannot say it enough, that I am indeed grateful that my guidance counselor was able to over look these blatant lies and encourage me to attend UMass. This school has so much to offer and although you will continuously hear about budget cuts, there is one thing that will never lack at this school... PRIDE! If you don't believe me go to the Cage to see a hoop game, or rather sit on the hill when UMass Lax plays in the spring. Looking beyond the sports, watch the band practice everyday, or rather read the Daily Collegian, the paper everybody seems to hate, but loves to read everyday. So when you go home don't let your friends who decided to go to those overrated Ivy League institutions put UMass down. Simply reply to them, "Who's going to be indulging in March Madness this spring at the NCAA's, baby!"

With that I would like to make two announcements. First and foremost I have achieved Columnist status. Secondly, I have reached an agreement with David Duke, and will be his running mate for 1992 Presidential election.

Writer advised to think carefully

As a subversive bisexual, it seems odd that I should be writing to commend you on your column. However, you seem like a thinking young man, which is why I am taking the trouble to write you. I think that people who actually use their brain (and there are so few of them) deserve to have their horizons expanded.

I commend you on your three first assessments of campus: "A lot of ignorant people go to UMass. A lot of these people are members of the Republican Club. Frat boys get drunk a lot and harass women." However, I must object to two of your most recent epiphanies:

"1. Every female-type person on this campus already has a boyfriend." My response: there are probably at least 1,200 women on this campus who already have a girlfriend. In order not to classify yourself as ignorant, it is unacceptable that you leave lesbians and bisexual women out of UMass — we exist and we are not invisible and we must be included ALWAYS. If you are upset about all the women at UMass being "taken" then the logical response is not to make gay women invisible, but:

A. Get a boyfriend, Jared.

B. Go to another campus for a girlfriend.

C. Introduce these "taken" women to the thrills of non-monogamy.

"2. Certain people (men and women) always have PMS." My response: Men do not get PMS. (This is not to be confused with the "blueballs" debate.) Although I appreciate the humor of this statement, saying that men get PMS takes away from the very real experience that women have during PMS. Taking your statement to its logical conclusion, one could say that a) if men have PMS but do not menstruate, then b) women do not really get PMS as a physiological response to hormones during menstruation. It is more exact to say, "Men act like they have PMS." This, I may add, is very true of the men I know.

I am only taking the time, as I said, to write this because I believe you have potential, Jared. If I thought you were an idiot, I wouldn't give you the time of day. Enjoy your next four years at UMass. Keep on thinking.

Cultural traditions ignored by Housing

Today we in Family Housing at UMass received a flyer. It announced that: "Santa and Ms. Claus will be coming to offer holiday greetings and treats to the children in Family Housing." The flyer was entitled "Experiencing Cultural Traditions." Ironically, the flyer was snuck under our doors (for lack of chimneys) on the last of eight days of Chanukah, a holiday the Family Housing Office chose to ignore.

Where are administration-sponsored celebrations of Idul-Fitr, Ramanavami, Sukkot and many more holidays of "other" cultural traditions? Does the University only want to impose that which Western Christians have tried to impose on the rest of the world for centuries?

Is this what multiculturalism means - the same old agenda under a catchy title?

MSP voting process should be reevaluated

I attended the Massachusetts Society of Professors' meeting (Nov. 19) where the "sympathy strike" vote was taken. The MSP leadership had called an emergency meeting but failed to inform large parts of its membership, a serious problem given the contract-breaking nature of the proposed vote. I learned from the meeting from GEO picketers outside my building. At the meeting I counted 75 MSP members, plus a few others including graduate students decked out in their GEO/UAW billboards.

During discussion of the motion for the sympathy strike, the question was raised about whether such a vote should be taken given the small number of faculty present. Several argued this was no problem since, as one member put it, "we know our members and they will honor such a strike."

At the start of the meeting our MSP president, David Lenson, asked the press to leave the meeting and to return for a briefing after the meeting was over. I wish the press could have stayed. The next morning when I read in the Union News and the Collegian, that 200 faculty had voted to strike, I was angry.

I was already disappointed that we had taken such a vote with so few faculty present, but now my union had deliberately lied to the press. The best face that can be put on this is that they viewed the end as justifying the means. In a week full of chants about who was lying, a small group of scholars chose to lie rather than report the truth.

The experience has forced me to think about how our union does business. To recall an MSP official, our constitution spells out a detailed set of procedures that among other things requires 20 percent of the membership to sign a petition. It also specifies rules on how and when a general meeting should be called. Yet a meeting to vote on an illegal strike requires only that the President and the Executive Committee call an emergency meeting and a quorum consists of whoever shows up. That alone is disturbing but it is unacceptable when many members were not informed of the meeting.

I think it is time to reconsider the process that allowed a small fraction of the MSP membership to vote to strike and then to enhance its impact in the press by exaggerating the depth of the support.

Tangelo Pie to leave Happy Valley menu

By CHRIS SHADOIAN
Collegian Staff

For the past three semesters, Tim Sniffen's cooking has been served to UMass on a plate of daily newspaper.

A recipe not quite like any other, Sniffen's specialty, Tangelo Pie, leaves a strange but tangy aftertaste that will keep one laughing throughout the day. Every day.

Yes, I am talking about the comic strip. "Tangelo Pie," which currently runs in both the UMass Daily Collegian, and Hampshire College's weekly paper, The Permanent Press, will not be reappearing at the beginning of next semester. Sniffen, like his strip's main characters, Gabe and Marcus, is graduating.

This Friday will mark the last scheduled appearance of "Tangelo Pie".

In my four years as a student at UMass, I've seen many student drawn strips appear in the Collegian. "Nipple," "Snooky Lanson," "Price," "Frotter," "Cast of Thousands" and "The Adventures of Fred." None have given me the pleasure "Tangelo Pie" did.

"Tangelo Pie," to say the least, is funny — which should be, the primary merit of any comic strip — but hilarious is a better word to describe it. There is, as in any really good strip, a certain, indescribable, magic quality to "Tangelo Pie," that makes it so funny. The "Tangelo Pie" magic lies in violence.

TANGELO PIE By TIM SNIFFEN

Hi! We're Bonnie + Ted, and we are just totally in love!
Why are you telling me this?
Well, we saw you standing over here alone, with nobody, and we decided to come over + smother you with our drippy, romantic presence!
Th nks. That was thoughtful.
Bonnie, wanna make out?
sure!
Let it be known that, had I had a flamethrower handy, this would have gone much differently.
mmm!

The first appearance of that loving couple Bonnie and Ted

TANGELO PIE By TIM SNIFFEN

WE INTERRUPT TANGELO PIE TODAY TO PRESENT AN EXCITING NEW FEATURE: TALES of the ANGRY SPARROW back off
We find The Angry Sparrow having breakfast in quiet solitude...
Damn, I hate bird seed. Makes me want to kill someone.
Ooooo

Then, Suddenly--
Oh, look at the cute little birdie!
THAT does it.
BLAM!
-HOW'S THIS FOR CUTE, GRANDMA?
AAIIIGH!
THIS is what we get bumped for?

The Angry Sparrow claims his first victim

The two main characters, Gabriel, and his roommate, Marcus, are absolute opposites. Marcus is the intelligent nerd of the strip, while Gabe is the resident blow-off artist. Their polarity leads to violent situations involving everything from acid to missile launchers. The violence is the primary creator of the strip's humor.

I managed to interview Sniffen as he was trying, frantically, to meet one of his final deadlines for this week's strips. He said the strip's violence is one of his favorite traits.

"It feels good to do strips like those," he said, "to just skip all the plot development and get right to the violence.

"That's a lot more satisfying to me than little plot twists and things."

Although all of "Tangelo Pie's" characters are violent, or capable of violence, three characters exist whose express purpose in life is to be violent: the UMass Tower Librarian, Ivy the waitress, and, of course, the Angry Sparrow.

The Angry Sparrow happens to be my favorite character, so during the course of our interview, I told Sniffen this. He already seemed to know.

I said: "My favorite character is the Angry Sparrow." As I spoke the last three words, he lip-synched them perfectly.

"I assume that means a great deal of people like that character," I said.

"It seems a lot of people have a bizarre fascination with the Angry Sparrow," he said, laughing. So I asked him where he got the idea for the character.

"I don't really know," he responded. "It just seemed like if you're going to make something violent, pick the most unrealistic thing. So I picture this small, tiny bird committing acts of horrible violence, and that's how it started. And the results were good. People seem to like it."

The imagery of a tough, gun-wielding bird mowing down a grandmother is hysterical. A bit sick, but hysterical. The Librarian is the same type of character. She wouldn't seem like the type of person to hit one over the head with a shovel just because of overdue books, so when she does, it's funny.

Needless to say, Sniffen is a master of bringing latent violence out of unlikely characters. The last person I remember doing that as well is Berke Breathed, who drew "Bloom County," and there are definite aspects of that strip in "Tangelo Pie."

"I do borrow a lot from 'Bloom County'," Sniffen admitted, "especially the eyes." He said it was one of his all time favorite strips. Others include Walt Kelly's "Pogo," and Charles Schultz's legendary "Peanuts," both of which, like "Bloom County," and "Tangelo Pie," involve cute, fuzzy animals acting like humans.

Tim Sniffen and his character Marcus.

"Tangelo Pie" first appeared in The Permanent Press at the beginning of the 1989 spring semester. It was originally titled "The Tangelo Two-Step," but after it's first appearance in the Collegian, on Sept. 6, 1990, the name changed.

One of the inherent qualities of the very first and subsequent "Tangelo Pies" are the oddities that pop up everywhere; things that most people won't understand. But Sniffen somehow manages to make them funny. Again, the reason is the outlandishness of the situations.

Even the title of the strip has the feeling of something mysterious. One gets the idea that only Sniffen knows what it means. But Sniffen said even he isn't sure what the title symbolizes. A great deal of people must have asked him about it, though, because earlier this semester he made up an explanation.

In one strip, he defined a "tangelo pie" as an "unresolvable situation." He said he faked the definition in order to have more material for the week.

"I like to have a confusing name," he said, "because it gives people something to think about. But if you take the explanation I gave in the strip, then [an example of a tangelo pie] is Marcus and Gabe relating to each other."

The tangelo pie of "Tangelo Pie" was briefly resolved when Sniffen and fellow Collegian cartoonist, Barry Deutsch ("Cast of Thousands") combined their strips for a week earlier this semester.

In those strips, Gabe traded places with one of Deutsch's main characters, Cass, who took Gabe's place in "Tangelo Pie." Gabe got along with "Cast of Thousands" Zack, and Cass...uh, Cass and Marcus ended up having the equivalent of cartoon sex.

For fans of the crossover and Cass' and Marcus' relationship, a mini-crossover appears on today's comics page.

But now, finally and sadly, "Tangelo Pie" is leaving. Don't count Sniffen down for the count yet, though. He will be sending samples of "Tangelo Pie" to some major comic strip syndicates for their consideration. Possibly they'll ask him to start drawing his strip for other weekly newspapers.

Until then, I, for one, will truly miss my daily slice of "Tangelo Pie."

Third World Affairs

To the sleepwalkers in a nightmare world

WAKE UP!

As the earth merrily spins away on its axis, the world of international relations, the human world, is quickly spinning out of control. Changes, entirely for the worse, are proliferating with wild abandon, yet few seem to have a sense of the immense dangers that their peoples face.

We are entering the age of the darkest tyranny. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth. And yet most people here seem to be sleepwalking, blithely and blandly enjoying their serene and implacable boredom, the legendary European "ennui."

I suppose we may as well start with Europe. Last weekend, the Soviet Union formally ceased to exist, replaced by a pan-Slavic confederation, anti-Muslim to the core, led by three chauvinistic and fascist reactionaries.

Hussein Ibish

The scramble for control of the nukes, all those lovely nukes, has finally begun. The targets, for now, are the Caucasian and Central Asian Muslim republics, led by Kazakhstan. Its leader, Nursultan Nazerbayev, knows the score. He is unmistakably horrified by the recent turn of events, because he knows full well who these pan-Slavs think their enemies are, and the likely course of future events. Now it is up to the Muslims to defend themselves. Even James Baker, not perhaps the man among us most given to the rhetoric of sensationalism, has spoken of the dangers of a "Yugoslavia" with nukes thrown in emerging in the ex-U.S.S.R.

ATTENTION EUROPEANS: Your region is on the brink of a disastrous war, not that the Third World has any cause to weep over the fate of its colonial masters, but others are involved.

Let us move right along to the Middle East.

ATTENTION ARABS: We are now the lowliest of the planet, an utterly colonized people. Those who are not scrambling to serve our friend Uncle Sam, are under siege and attack. Is it conceivable that Arab peoples should actually have encouraged, paid, and helped the great imperial power to wreak havoc on one of our own most advanced and ambitious nations? That Arab people should have participated in the genocide of the Iraqis? That we happily give away our resources and money to the United States while tens of millions of our people live in abject poverty? That we should help the Israelis obliterate Palestine? It's all true. There are no excuses. Shame and disgrace be upon our generation, especially those living in the West who remain silent as they watch the rape of their people. Shame and disgrace be upon us.

ATTENTION INDIAN CITIZENS: Your country is in great danger. You are on a collision course with the United States over the most serious issues. The new focus of the imperial power is nuclear proliferation. Are your people willing to unilaterally disarm themselves, to undergo the final humiliation of colonial genuflexion? "Where are your warheads? Cough them up now!" Signing the NPT, deals with Pakistan — none of this will be enough.

Or, do you imagine that you will be let into the colonial club? If so I admire your optimism. I suggest that there is no room at the table for you. No Hindus or Muslims need apply.

I have no doubt that to many of you this sounds quite unreasonable. Nonetheless, your nation is in grave danger of suffering a fate that many of you watched in fascination on CNN.

ATTENTION LATIN AMERICANS: Cuba is likely to be attacked by the United States at any moment, although things have come to such a pass that a physical invasion may not even be necessary to destroy the gains of the Cuban revolution. Are you feeling particularly independent in these "glorious days of the spread of democracy"? Argentina has all but declared itself to be a European state, left the Non-Aligned Movement, and scrapped its nuclear weapons and missile development programs. It and several other South American states have signed "investment protection treaties" with the U.S. that would preclude the future nationalization of resources that are currently being given away. A senior IMF official blandly told Brazil that it would have to "change its constitution."

Your sovereignty is being sold at discount rates through the debt-nature swap. Psuedo-environmentalists seize large tracks of land paying one third of a dollar for a dollars worth of your nation. Somewhat reminiscent of the Manhattan land grab? Does it profit a nation to gain "democracy" if it loses its soul?

ATTENTION AFRICANS: Notice an increase in the number of French and Belgian troops in the vicinity lately? In Zaire? How about Togo? The World Bank has a new regime in place just for you. It talks openly about "political conditionality" and the need for intervention in the "crisis of governance" in Africa, egged on by the "Council of African Advisors". All hail new bank president Lewis Preston, of J.P. Morgan & Co. He's got big plans. The World Bank and IMF, which have accumulated tremendous power and influence in Africa, fully intend to openly use their leverage to dictate policy to African nations on all aspects of life.

ATTENTION SOUTHEAST ASIANS: In Cambodia, the Khmer Rouge is back and raring to go, thanks to the support of the United States. The treatment accorded Khieu Samphan in Phnom Phen suggests the potential for the onset of a new civil war. Meanwhile, Vietnam is bending over backward to invite in the very same agencies and investors that have done so much for the economies of Mexico, Brazil, Egypt, etc. Win the war, lose the peace. Heads up, the investment mafia is coming to town.

ATTENTION AMERICANS: This country is totally out of control. It is running amok. Everyone in the United States seems to expect another war immanently, for either foreign or domestic policy reasons. Nobody seems too concerned, in fact it is really just the butt of many a good joke. Yet, no one really doubts that it will happen again.

So, who will it be next time? Libya? It could be, the excuse is in place, why not? Cuba? Boy, wouldn't that feel good. The final come-uppance of that irritating man with the cigar who tugged the lion's tail in its own den. Sounds like a big parade to me.

Of course the possibilities are endless, but what about another attack on Iraq. It is amazing how many Americans who ought to know better think that the war against Iraq is over just because no more Americans are threatened. But Iraq is still under siege, and the genocide goes on, so why not another attack, just to get rid of this irritating fellow who is foolish enough to resist?

Apart from the few who are still dedicated to stopping the killing, such as the "National Coalition to Stop U.S. Intervention In the Middle East" and some religious organizations, the political opposition here is totally useless. Pat Buchanan was more reasonable than most of the Left on the issue of the Gulf War. Most called for sanctions, and thus gave their approval and imprimatur to the biggest part of the genocide in Iraq. During the much vaunted protests, concern focused on the cost to the United States in terms of lives and money, and since most of the concern vanished with the threat to American lives, what are we to conclude?

The truth is that there is no organized, effective, broad- based, movement in the United States that opposes imperialism.

This is a strange and chaotic article, to describe a strange and chaotic world. But only a sleepwalker can fail to see the ominous descent into the worst kind of tyranny that is taking place. The system is out of control. Good night and sweet dreams.

Oh, and by the way, Happy New Year 1992 couldn't be worse than 1991. Or could it?

Tragedy in East Timor: Western complicity

"The West will bear direct responsibility for the fate of the Timorese if it continues... to connive with the military regime in its war of aggression." — FRETILIN representative Jose Ramos-Horta

In fact the West bears direct responsibility anyway.

On December 7, 1975, 10,000 Indonesian troops, equipped with modernized military hardware 90 percent of which was U.S.-supplied, invaded East Timor, a former Portuguese colony located on an island in the center of the Indonesian archipelago. A brutal "integration" program commenced, which today has taken the lives of a third of East Timor's pre-invasion population of 690,000.

Madanmohan Rao
Misa Wong

A campaign of population resettlement and structural transformations has disrupted the socio-economic life of the Timorese, and "re-education" undermines their cultural identities.

Behind the largely untold tragedy of East Timor lies one of the more sordid chapters of U.S. adventurism in Southeast Asia.

Endowed with vast oil and mineral resources, including 10 percent of the world's tropical forests, the Indonesian archipelago is of strategic importance because it sits astride important sealanes between the Indian and Pacific Oceans, such as the Ombai-Wetter deep-water straits and the straits of Malacca.

Towards the middle of this century, the policies of Indonesia's leader Sukarno became profoundly troubling to the U.S. Sukarno was one of the Third World's major leaders, and was instrumental in forging the Third World bloc through associations like the Non-Alignment Movement.

NAM was progressive and strongly anti-imperialist; it provided useful linkages between liberation struggles during the decolonization that was sweeping much of the Third World.

In 1958, the CIA attempted to overthrow the bothersome Sukarno, but failed. They then resorted to another path, which subsequently proved useful in other endeavors in Latin America — a courting of the military and strengthening of their assets.

In 1965, a pro-U.S. general, Suharto carried out a successful coup. The U.S. embassy and the CIA provided the Indonesian military with lists of suspected communists, who were executed.

All barriers to Western investment were removed, and Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara hailed the developments as the "West's best news for years in Asia."

The fruits of the bloodbath were then harvested — within years, U.S. exports to Indonesia touched a billion dollars a year, with foreign investment controlling 96 percent of the mining industry, 59 percent of forestry, and 33 percent of agriculture.

Developments took a new twist when the Portuguese dictatorship collapsed in 1974, relinquishing control of its colonies in southern Africa and East Timor. Just as the decolonization of East Timor began, Indonesia set its sights on it. Perfect timing.

1975 was not exactly a favorable year for the U.S. It had been humiliated by Vietnam. Laos and Cambodia were also "lost." With the southward movement of the Soviet fleet, control of sealanes for nuclear submarines became a top priority for the U.S.

Consequently, U.S. interests were easily swayed by Suharto who proposed military action against East Timor, where an an independent nationalist party, FRETILIN, had come to power.

On Dec. 7, 1975, Ford and Kissinger gave Suharto the "big wink." Hours later, Indonesian troops overran East Timor.

Within a year of Carter's election in 1976, military assistance to Indonesia doubled — particularly with respect to deadly counter-insurgency weapons, such as Bronco and Skyhawk aircraft, and Huey attack helicopters. The FRETILIN forces suffered major setbacks with each peak in U.S. military aid.

This trend gathered momentum during the Reagan years, with billion-dollar military sales including F-16 fighter aircrafts. Even today under Bush, $50 million per year flows to Indonesia.

The people of East Timor tried to rally support for their cause, but were met with apathy, indifference and hostility.

An analysis of Western powerbrokers' attitudes towards Timor proves interesting.

The Portuguese withdrawal had been several decades overdue, and was hastily and irresponsibly carried out.

Australia was a major regional power, and had important links to Western power structures. 60,000 valiant Timorese, or 13 percent of the population, had died during World War II assisting the Australians and the allied forces in their fight against Japan.

They were now to be repaid. The Australian response can best be characterized by the word "betrayal." In a classic "blame the victim" manner, FRETILIN was accused of being desperate terrorists, and reports of Indonesian brutalities were dismissed as "unsubstantiated" and "exaggerated."

Clearly, Australia was interested in profitable oil extraction within the Timor Sea and preferred good relations with 140 million Indonesians rather than a few hundred thousand Timorese.

New Zealand, notorious for its attempts to stifle international debate on New Caledonia, turned a deaf ear.

Norway too, kept aloof for fear of jeopardizing its lucrative ship-building contract with Indonesia. Canada, one of the top five Western investors in Indonesia, was busy shipping light tanks, Pratt and Whitney engines, and transports to Indonesia.

And of course, the French dramatically increased sales of Puma and Allouette attack helicopters, and British Aerospace shipped Hawk attack helicopters. Holland provided rapid-firing patrol boats and West Germany supplied submarines.

As for Japan, another investor in Indonesia and a primary importer of Indonesian oil, it actively obstructed attempts at resolution of the crisis in favor of the East Timorese.

BAKIN, the Indonesian intelligence agency, has cordial relations with the CIA and Israel's Mossad. Israel actively ships military supplies like Uzi guns and U.S. aircraft to Indonesia.

The East Timorese have tried in vain to get U.N. support for their cause. Unfortunately, as the ongoing genocide in Iraq illustrates, the functioning of the United Nations has very little to do with morality and such other lofty principles — instead, hypocrisy and double standards are the order of the day. Progressive resolutions, if any, are but empty verbiage.

The Western media largely towed the Indonesian line. While they agonized over the atrocities of the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia, they were silent about the genocide in East Timor.

Less than a month ago, on Nov. 12, close to 160 Timorese civilians were massacred by Indonesian troops in the capital of Dili. Perhaps this massacre will draw the world's attention to the ongoing plight of the Timorese.

The problem of East Timor, like that of the Kurds in Iraq, was largely created by Western colonial interference, and will not be resolved by further imperial intervention. While the West's support of the genocide in East Timor and its aid to the Indonesian military must be condemned, so must any attempts to impose a Western-oriented solution.

In any case, the Timorese deserve to have their right to self-determination and their fundamental human rights respected. The human suffering they have endured cannot be justified and must not continue. May their long nightmares soon come to an end.

grams is way beyond logic and borders on lunacy. To top it off, the administration has handled the situation so poorly that they're making Watergate look like a political masterpiece.

Members of the women's volleyball team had to learn of their termination through the grapevine and the media. There's an incredible injustice being carried out here and there are very few answers being given. Stay tuned next semester.

Best Supplier of Sweets on Campus:

Hands down, no contest, a unanimous choice - the honorable Ruthie Drew in the Sports Information Department gets the award. For a stretch around Halloween, my diet consisted of candy corns and those little pumpkin treats conveniently located on the SID counter. If Sammy Davis had known Ruthie, the song would have been called "The Candy*woman*."

Best Portrayal of a Real Quarterback by a Fake Quarterback:

Sure Hugh Millen is putting up the numbers, and yes Dick MacPherson has called him "special," but in reality the guy has no vision whatsoever. Linebackers were coming straight at him on Sunday and Millen just stood there. While a lot of the blame can be placed on the offensive line, Millen simply has to learn to scramble and get rid of the ball.

Best Move by a Red Sox Manager (not incluing the benching of Mike Marshall):

Rookie skipper Butch Hobson's decision to bring back Don Zimmer. There's something about Zim that has Boston written all over his round belly. With Zim on the bench you get the feeling that next year is THE YEAR.

Best Dynamic Duo Since Batman and Robin:

As much as we hate to admit it, Brett "Actually didn't bore-us" Morris and Tamir "Ya can't get there from here" Lipton did a respectable job in Kentucky last week. They both have faces that were made for radio, so let's hope they have no television aspirations.

Best Move by a Writer at the Collegian Sports desk:

Dancin' Dan's tango from sports associate to managing editor, a move that will surely decimate the sports page, but enhance the rest of the paper. We wish Dan well, but we hope he remembers that "Once you go to news, you inevitably lose."

Best Bets for Next Year:

• Another tournament berth for Coach Rudy's ladies without any fluke Connecticut goals to impede their march to a national championship. Also, the Hermann Trohpy for Holly Hellmuth because the third time's a charm.

• The coveted "Cravat King" title to the founder and creator of the award, moi. The competition is already lagging far behind, this race could be over by the middle of January.

Keep your bubble sheets in bounds, and your eyes on your finals.

when Brooklyn came out of their locker room for pre-game warmups chanting (M.C.) Hammer's "Too legit to quit" refrain. By halftime they had turned the ball over 17 times, many of which were attributed to UMass' tenacious defense in the paint. Each time one of Brooklyn's big people got the ball down low, she was treated like a car in a carwash, and was stripped of the ball on many occasions.

from Sacramento to Golden State. Owens has shown his overall talent which made him the number three pick in the draft.

The best rookie in the league thus far has been the big man in Denver, Dikembe Mutombo. The fourth pick in the draft, Dikembe has displayed surprising offensive prowess to go along with his defensive presence that was so feared at Georgetown. Steve Smith, picked fifth by Miami, has shown remarkable poise as a rookie and has also made point-guard hold-out Sherman Douglas expendable.

Other impressive rookies so far, include Stacey Augmon, Brian Williams, and Boston's own Rick Fox. Augmon has started at off-guard for the Hawks, showcasing his well-known defensive skills along with tremendous open-court ability.

Despite signing very late, Williams has provided Orlando with exactly what they needed, size up front with scoring ability. As for Fox, he has given the Celtics solid all-around play with many John Havilcek-like intangibles.

Who would've guessed that Atlanta's Kevin Willis would be leading the NBA in rebounding at 17.4 a game. Willis has displayed a new found affection for rebounding much the way a man reacts to his first child.

Another surprise has been the way the Lakers have played in view of Magic Johnson's sad and shocking retirement due the HIV virus. Los Angeles, in fact, had a nine game winning streak earlier in the year.

The Lakers brought that streak into the Boston Garden to play the C's. The game itself didn't seem to be in the mold of the classic Celtic-Laker rivalry since the C's blew the Lakers out by 25. For some reason I could still see Magic stepping out of the crowd and hitting a 26 point shot at the buzzer for a Laker win. There isn't a more fitting compliment to describe the way Magic plays the game and lives his life. Somehow, Earvin will find a way to win his latest battle. . . he always has.

Right now the Chicago Bulls look like a strong bet to become the third straight team to win back-to-back titles. The Portland Trailblazers and San Antonio Spurs look like they are the Western Conference's co-favorites to reach the finals. Other tough competition come playoff time should include the Lakers (provided Vlade Divac has recovered from back surgery), Jazz, Cavaliers (now that everyone is finally healthy), and even the Celtics (once they get Dee Brown and Kevin McHale back). It should be one fun season the rest of the way.

College baskeball right now is starting to provide the excitement that it is known and loved for. Here at UMass, there has already been a lot of excitement in the young season. The Minutemen have a 6-1 record and are the Great Alaska Shootout Champs.

By the way, Jim McCoy appears to be very effective when he takes the ball to the hoop. He either gets fouled or scores. Perhaps if he is able to penetrate more often it will also set up his patented perimeter game.

As for the rest of the year, the Minutemen look like they will perhaps capture the A-10 crown and be invited to the Big Dance, the NCAA Tournament. The team has many strengths including a balanced attack, tough team defense, athleticism, and strong leadership.

Out west, UNLV is showing that it is by no means dead. The Runnin' Rebels stressed this point with a shellacking of Shaquille O'Neal and LSU.

Georgia Tech hasn't missed a beat despite losing the aforementioned Kenny Anderson to the NBA. Springfield's own Travis Best has done an admirable job in replacing Anderson. The remaining balance in college hoop should be as exciting as ever.

If you haven't heard, the rumors are false; Elvis is not dead! Nor does he own a gas station in Topeka, Kansas. Elvis Presley is right here in Amherst. Everyone who attended Saturday night's basketball game saw the Elvis Presley dancing and cheering up a storm. I must say that Elvis showed remarkable talent and spirit for someone so past his prime.

What is a Textbook Buyback?

Three times during each semester the Textbook Annex brings in a wholesaler to buy textbooks from students. Wholesalers are in the business of selling used books to colleges and universities across the country. Therefore, in determining how much they will pay a student for a book they must consider the demand for that book as well as the shipping and handling costs involved in processing and reselling the book. This is why prices vary and indeed change frequently.

The best time to sell books is at the end of the semester. At that time the Annex will pay 50% of the new price for a book if we have an order for that book for the following semester. If we do not, the wholesaler may make you an offer.

If you have questions please ask the people doing the buyback or the Annex staff. They will be more than happy to answer your questions and give you any tips that may be applicable to your situation.

When is the next Textbook Buyback?

The end of the semester Textbook Buyback is:

at the Textbook Annex:

Dec. 11-13, 9:00 am-4:00 pm
Dec. 14, 11:00 am-4:00 pm
Dec. 16-17, 9:00 am-4:00 pm
Dec. 18-20, 9:00 am-8:00 pm
Dec. 21, 11:00 am-4:00 pm

SINCE YOUR MOM'S SICK, I'LL BE MAKING DINNER TONIGHT
YOU CAN COOK?
OF COURSE I CAN COOK
AS YOU CAN SEE, I SURVIVED TWO YEARS OF MY OWN COOKING WHEN I HAD AN APARTMENT AFTER COLLEGE
MOM SAYS YOU ATE FROZEN WAFFLES AND CANNED SOUP THREE MEALS A DAY.
YOUR MOM WASN'T THERE, SO SHE WOULDN'T KNOW GET THE SYRUP OUT. WILL YOU?

TANGELO PIE
By TIM SNIFFEN

Well, Gabriel, I've checked over your resume and made a few changes.
What!? You killed almost half of it?
-I didn't think the color illustrations were quite... appropriate.
Gosh, it looks so barren with just words...
I suppose this means axe the pop-up section on page five...
What are we making, anyway? A Tangelo Pie?
But of course! mon petite poisson noir...
HEY, HANDSOME! LEND ME SOME SUGAR, WILLYA? THANKS.

UHH... MOM, DAD... THIS IS MY ROOMMATE, FLESH.
YEAH, SURE! NICE TA MEETCHA! WILL YOU EXCUSE US FOR A MOMENT?
LISTEN! HOW SERIOUS IS YOUR MOM ABOUT YOUR DAD? ARE THEY HAVING ANY MARITAL PROBLEMS? DO I HAVE...
WHAT'D I SAY?!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Important discussions may be scheduled on this date. Negotiate from a position of strength. A loved one could be sending you mixed signals; delay making a judgement. A loving attitude works wonders.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Someone may act stubborn and unyielding over the next few days. Changes are indicated in certain business arrangements. Be discreet about your plans. A loved one shares a delicious secret. Yum!

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): A difference of opinion could lead to a stressful situation at work. Diplomacy serves you well. Seek an expert's advice about a legal or financial matter. Continue to watch the stock market.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): You could endanger your future prospects by pushing too hard for immediate gains. Avoid becoming antagonistic around higher-ups. The romantic outlook is bright for those who are eligible.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Idealism is at the center of a business decision. Those who work behind the scenes may hold the trump card. Proceed at your own risk. Member of opposite sex's motives may be questioned.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your earnings should increase soon. Widening your circle of contacts is the key to greater success. The mail brings welcome news. A member of the opposite sex deserves a prompt answer. Be candid!

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Concentrate on settling a financial matter early so it does not consume your thoughts during later business negotiations. You may be involved in a romantic triangle without knowing it.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Conserving your resources is the key to financial security. Direct your energies towards projects that will benefit you and your loved ones. Friends and family members are supportive.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Look for big improvements on the business scene. Certain longtime obligations could restrict financial growth. Although an older relative has been slowed down by ill health, the outlook is favorable. Offer encouragement.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Thrift may not be the whole answer to a financial problem. Travel and a new communications system are featured. Be open-minded about a friend's problem; blaming the victim never helps.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): By assuming few responsibilities, you become eligible for career advancement and greater monetary rewards. Emphasize your versatility. Keep any promises to your loved ones.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): Strive to make your closest relationships endure ones. Speak from the heart. Finances could be a sensitive subject now. Use common sense. To avoid irritating influential people, keep appointments on time.

Preliminary Information

The Commencement ceremony for Bachelor's Degree candidates will be on Sunday, May 24, 1992, 10:30am, Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium, rain (it wouldn't dare) or shine.

Undergraduates who will complete their degree requirements in February, 1992, and those who anticipate completing them by May or September, 1992, are eligible to participate.

If you are unsure of your academic status or have questions in this regard, please immediately contact a member of the "Senior Staff", Records Office, 207 Whitmore.

Further details about the ceremony and related activities will be provided in a brochure to be mailed to you and your parents in February or early March. Included, among other things, will be information about:

Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations (invitations are not required)
Disability services
Parking and shuttle services
Routes to campus
Seating for graduates
Seating for guests (tickets are not required
Where to assemble on Commencement day (there is no rehearsal beforehand)

The last issue of the "Collegian" in May will provide further, important details.

Information about the speaker and honorary degree recipients will be available in May.

Inasmuch as there are several other area college Commencements occurring on May 24, hotel/motel and restaurant reservations should be made forthwith.

For further information, please contact the Visitors Center, 545-0306, or Student Affairs Special Services, 545-3480 (236 Whitmore). Commencements updates will be posted on the bulletin board outside 236 Whitmore.

Congratulations to all concerned.

Minutemen win despite sluggish play

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Good teams are supposed to know how to win ugly.

The University of Massachusetts basketball team (7-1) proved it can do just that, as it defeated the University of New Hampshire 84-63, last night in front of a subdued crowd at the Curry Hicks Cage.

The Minutemen's play was marred by poor shot selection, a lack of ball movement on offense and horrendous foul shooting. They managed to survive all of that and a 27 point performance by New Hampshire guard Jose Powell to post their fourth home win of the season.

"I like to look at a game and ask did we get better or did we get worse," UMass coach John Calipari said. "Tonight we got worse. It is good though to play bad and still win."

UMass forward Harper Williams (12 points, 1 rebound) said, "We just didn't execute like we wanted to. We came out flat. Although I'm glad we won, I'm not happy."

Behind three pointers by Anton Brown and Jerome Malloy, UMass jumped out to an early 13-2 lead. Despite some poor play the lead bulged to as high as 22 after a Kennard Robinson free throw with 1:42 left in the first half.

In the second half, the play got sloppy and physical as New Hampshire (1-4) crawled to within seven after two free throws by Danny Williams with 13:44 remaining.

On the ensuing trip down the court Powell stole the ball from Michael Williams and drove down alone but missed the layup. UMass' Tony Barbee grabbed the rebound and outletted to Malloy, who drove in alone for the easy layup. The play started a 16-5 UMass run which put the game out of reach.

Massachusetts was forced to play without the services of all time leading scorer, Jim McCoy. McCoy sprained his left ankle in practice on Monday and did not dress last night. According to McCoy the swelling has gone down but he is still questionable for tomorrow night's game at Holy Cross.

UMass, ranked No. 34 in this weeks Associated Press poll, for the second game in a row was lead by Anton Brown (21 points).

"Coach Cal said before the game that someone had to step up with Jimmy out," Brown said. "I think I was able to do that, I just played as hard as I could. If they leave me open, I'll take the shot."

Freshman forward Scott Drapeau played well, according to Calipari. Drapeau scored 9 points and hauled in 12 rebounds, seven offensive.

The Minutemen shot a miserable 64 percent (30 of 52) from the foul line. New Hampshire hit 29 of 38 free throws for 76 percent.

Second half puts Minutewomen past Brooklyn

• Moran, Anderson help end home skid

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team broke a 22-game home losing streak Tuesday by defeating the Brooklyn College Lady Knights, 65-58.

The Minutewomen were aided by outstanding second half performances by Jenny Moran and Cass Anderson, but almost let a ten point lead slip away with 1:32 left in the game.

Fortunately the Minutewomen (3-4) boxed out their bigger, stronger opponents in the stretch, rebounding Brooklyn's many missed opportunities.

"We made a few mistakes, but we hung in there tough," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "We did a great job rebounding in the last four or five minutes of the ballgame."

The Minutewomen hung tough in the first half, although they played very sloppy. Despite making 13 turnovers in the first half, UMass was able to go into the locker room tied at 26.

The story of the second half was Moran. Her free throws at 7:06 gave UMass the lead for good, at 48-46. Moran scored 20 points and grabbed 11 rebounds overall. UMass would reel off 10 more points before Brooklyn could answer, and the frustrated Lady Knights used two precious timeouts.

As important as Moran's shooting from the field was, Anderson's work from the foul line was just as crucial. Anderson, a freshman walk-on, hit seven of eight free throws in the last three minutes that gave UMass the victory.

"Cass is a basketball player," O'Brien said in praise. "Some girls are athletes, but Cass is a basketball player. She's a good shooter, and she showed it tonight."

Kathleen Murtaugh scored seven of the Lady Knights last nine points, keying a 7-0 run with a layup with only 1:32 left. Brooklyn cut the score from 60-49 to 60-56 in one minute by capitalizing on opportunities resulting from a full-court press on the Minutewomen.

Murtaugh had a three-point play with 1:18 left to make the game 60-54. Marcy Kornegay then stole the UMass inbounding pass and scored on a layup to make the Minutewomen sweat.

Point guard Laurie Dondarski was able to settle down and get the ball to Moran early in the second half, and to Anderson late. Anderson scored the last five points for the Minutewomen, and her free throws with twenty-four seconds remaining sealed the Lady Knights' fate. Brooklyn dropped to 3-1.

• Injuries, miscues typify home win

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

For the first time since January 18, 1990, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team won a home game. The win came yesterday, a 65-58 decision over Brooklyn College, and it was not a game for the faint of heart.

The Minutewomen and the Lady Knights turned the ball over a combined 51 times (24 and 27 respectively), and committed 43 personal fouls (20 and 23).

Several of Brooklyn's players are big, and they are an aggressive team to boot, so there were bound to be mishaps. UMass forward Gloria Nevarez took an elbow to the eye late in the first half, and was sporting a nifty shiner after the game.

"But there was no foul on the play", she said sarcastically.

UMass point guard Trish Riley, already bothered by pinched nerves in her back, was tossed to the floor late in the game while fighting for a loose ball. Her head hit the floor with a scary amount of force, causing her to leave the game. Afterwards she looked a bit dazed, as one might expect.

Brooklyn's Kathleen Murtaugh, who tied UMass' Jen Moran as the game's high scorer with 20 points, was in obvious pain throughout the contest, due to a ruptured disc in her back. Despite her physical condition, she was instrumental to her team's comeback late in the game, scoring 7 of their last 9 points.

"It was extremely sloppy," Murtaugh said. "We didn't play as well as we could. We didn't execute very well. UMass kept their composure and hustled after every loose ball."

It was bound to be an interesting game

Basketball season revving into gear

Well, as we head into Christmas break, both the college and pro basketball scenes are starting to pick up steam as usual. Right about now, experts and analysts are starting to theorize on what has happened thus far and what they think will happen over the course of the season. Therefore, I think it is time to throw my own hat in the ring and tell you of my own hoop theories.

This year's rookie class looks to be one of the most promising in many a year.

The number 1 pick Larry Johnson has so far lived up to his billing as the next Charles Barkley. Johnson has provided Charlotter with muscle, tough rebounding, and a nice scoring touch. Kenny Anderson, picked second by New Jersey, has been sloppy, but, at times has also shown his considerable playmaking and scoring skills. Billy Owens has adapted well, seeing that he signed late and was traded

Jury acquits Smith of rape charges

By LINDA DEUTSH
Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — William Kennedy Smith was acquitted Wednesday of sexual assault and battery in a case that focused national attention on date rape and tarnished the Kennedy legend.

The jury of four women and two men took little more than an hour to reject the allegations of a 30-year-old woman who said Smith chased here, toppled her on the lawn of the Kennedy estate and raped her under a full moon.

Smith, 31, had taken the stand on his own defense, adamantly denying her charges and painting her as a sexually aggressive woman who initiated sex after they met at a trendy night club during Easter weekend.

Smith grinned as the verdict was read and embraced his lawyer, Roy Black, who had argued passionately in his defense earlier in the day.

There was no other reaction in the courtroom because the judge warned the spectators they would face punishment if they made any noises to show approval or disapproval.

After the verdict, Circuit Judge Mary Lupo thanked the jurors, saying "You have done justice regardless of your verdict."

"This has not been a movie made for TV," she told them. "The TV has come into the courtroom. The only difference between this case and any other is that more people want to see this case."

She told jurors it was up to them whether they wanted to talk publicly about their decision, but "I need to tell you that you are the story now."

As he left the courtroom, Black was asked how he felt. "Terrific, just terrific."

"I feel great, just great!" said Smith's mother, Jean Kennedy Smith.

Before the jury began deliberating, prosecutor Moria Lash denounced Smith as a rapist who inflicted "violence, humiliation and degradation," on the Florida woman. Black said the sexual encounter was "right out of a romance novel."

The sensational case was submitted to jurors at midafternoon by the judge, who told them "all of us are depending upon you to make a wise and legal decision in this matter."

"This isn't a date rape," Lasch told the panel in closing arguments. "This is a stranger rape. She didn't know this man."

"This is the act of a rapist," she said. "This is not the act of love."

In his summation, Black stressed that the prosecution had to prove Smith guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

He said the woman was not bruised enough and her clothes were not damaged enough to corroborate her account of a violent rape.

"There are no objective signs of trauma on this body," he said, holding up pictures of the woman.

The jury had to consider testimony form 45 witnesses during 10 days. They also have access to physical evidence, including the woman's dress and underwear worn the night of the alleged assault.

The key evidence was the testimony form the accused and the accuser. She said he raped her. He said she enticed him into sex.

Smith, nephew of Sen. Edward Kennedy, was charges with sexual battery and battery on the woman shortly after they met at the Au Bar. He could have been sentenced to 4 and a half years in prison if convicted.

O'Brien details plan for cultural centers

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

In a seven page document obtained by the Collegian yesterday, Chancellor Richard O'Brien detailed his plan of action for dealing with the issues raised by student groups involved in the closing of three University cultural centers.

In the letter, which is expected to be released officially today, O'Brien also defended the University's commitment to multiculturalism.

In response to demands that the Bilingual Collegiate Program be moved to a different building or have its current location remodeled, O'Brien said he has asked Associate Vice Chancellor for Physical Planning Beverly Nuckles to examine Wilder hall and report on possible alternatives.

O'Brien said he was unsure if increasing BCP's staff is necessary.

"It appears that for the number of students which the BCP serves, it has a reasonable Councilor to student ratio," the letter said.

O'Brien, however, pledged to continue funding for the "excellent" BCP outreach program which services seventh and eighth graders in Holyoke.

O'Brien quoted a letter Associate Vice Chancellor of Affirmative Action Fred Tillis sent to him Nov. 27 in which Tillis evaluated the New World Theater facility, equipment and funding operations.

"Additional funding would be most welcome for New World theatre," he said. "Adequate office space and functional facilities have not been provided."

Tillis recommended the New World theater be moved to the Southwest Residential Area where it could be closer to the Hampden Theater.

O'Brien said the student demands asking that multiculturalism be better incorporated into the univeristy's curriculum must be brought to the Academic Matters Council.

Students had asked for a re-evaluation of "cultural diversity" courses and the addition of Asian, Puerto Rican, and Latin American studies to the University.

O'Brien agreed to transfer funding from the Asian Cultural Center to the Asian Learning Resource Center but pointed to the "need to discuss the issue of the cultural center at greater length before committing it to Fiscal year 1993 and future budgets."

O'Brien addressed allocations of a computer, laser printer and photocopier as priority consideration within the Academic Support Services budget.

As for the trasfer of the Latin Cultural Center's funding, O'Brien said the funds have been exhausted for this year but the administration would be willing to transfer funds for fiscal year 1992 to BCP provided they be used for tutorial services.

Again, the chancellor said further discussion is needed before future budget transfers could be made.

In addition, O'Brien defended the University's commitment to multiculturalism. "During the recent period of repeated state budget cuts, the University has actually increased the resources allocated to Academic Support Services for Minority students."

The Chancellor went on to say the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students, the BCP and the United Asia Learning Resource Center have had their budgets increased by "nearly 13 percent" while the University has lost one third of its state funding.

The Native Amercian Committee announced their decision to close the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center yesterday morning in a joint press conference with representatives from both the Latin Students Committee and the Asian Students Committee.

Led by Chris Pegram, students added

Motives behind staff support questionable

RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Staff

Hours after Native American students announced to the press that they would join the Asian and Latin student groups' protest and close their cultural center, some in Whitmore said they believe the students involved in the "multiculturalism facade" protest are being used by University staff to further their own interests and career goals.

Associate Dean of Academic Support Services Ric Townes said yesterday that some University staff may be using students to gain raises or promotions and that they should stop hiding behind the students.

"I think to some extent that some staff people are not willing to come out and be public and take responsibility of the issues which they find important," he said. "They should not use students to advance their issues.

"The point I make is if that is what they really want then they should say that," he added.

Townes, who said he agrees with the issues raised but not the tactics used, said the four remaining centers

Plans for after prison

Convicts look ahead to life after release

By JOHN PETERSON
Special to the Collegian

Editor's note: The articles in this two-part series were written by inmates of the North Central Correctional Institute at Gardner and the Massachusetts Correctional Institute at Shirley. It was written last summer as part of a journalism class offered through the Prison Education Project, which is run by the University of Massachusetts Division of Continuing Education.

The authors are all matriculated UMass students working towards a bachelor's degree. In some cases the names of the people they interviewed have been changed.

Billy B. knows how to steal cars. He in boning up on the newest ignition systems while in prison.

He reads Car & Driver religiously because when he gets out this time he hopes to embark on a career as a repo man. "They won't even have to give me the keys," said the 22-year-old, who is doing his seventh stint behind bars.

Spike T. is more ambitious. He is looking forward to striking it rich as a professional wrestler when he finishes his sentence. "I'll go to the gym when I get to the street, and put on about 25 pounds, then I'll start with the steroids again," he said. Spike expects to be earning a six figure salary within six months. When asked about retired pro-football player Lyle Alzado's recently revealed health problems, Spike seemed unconcerned. "He didn't stop between cycles of steroids — that's why he got brain cancer."

Spike is 26 years old and has spent seven of the last 10 years behind bars. "I managed to stay out of jail for three whole years once," said the aspiring Hulk Hogan. He admits to having "bashed a few skulls" before coming into the joint.

Men in prison have time on their hands, and many of them pass it by dreaming of how they're going to turn their lives around and accomplish great things when they finish their terms. Sometimes these goals are realistic, with a chance of success. More often they are pipe-dreams.

Prison is not the best place for clear thinking. After living in an artificial society for several years, the line between reality and self-delusion can become distorted. It often leads to an unreal remembrance of what life was like before jail. After years of being told exactly what to do and how do it, it is easy to forget what it was like to provide for yourself, to make your own decisions.

Billy and Spike are roommates at the minimum security prison at Shirley. They can both expect to see the street within months. Statistically, they have a one in four chance of staying out of prison. More than likely they will come back to prison along with the 75 percent of ex-convicts who are sentenced as repeat offenders.

Seven years of incarceration have given Spike few options or ideas about finding a productive niche in society other than doing in the wrestling arena what he did on the streets: take drugs — in this case steroids — and bash skulls.

Two more enter primary

Challenge McGonnigal in Republican race for rep.

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Two more Amherst men have entered the Republican primary to fill the Third Hampshire District state representative seat.

Amherst resident Kevin J. Smith, 35, and University of Massachusetts sophomore Peter J. Wagner, 19, announced their candidacy Tuesday for the Amherst-Pelham seat vacated by Stanley Rosenberg's election to the state senate.

Wagner, previously a Democrat, said he first considered registering as a Republican in June, following former State Senator John Olver's election to the U.S. House of Representatives. Wagner called the Republican Party the "party of honesty," stating "when Republicans say they don't care about a minority, they mean it."

Smith, who has worked at the University library since January 1989, said he is also planning to switch his registration to Republican from Democrat.

"If you ask anybody on the street the difference between Democrats and Republicans, they'd be hard-pressed to tell you," Smith said. "In this country, we basically have a business party with two factions."

"By running as a Republican, I feel I'm sort of entering the den of wolves," Smith said.

Wagner said his platform includes mandatory sex education in public schools, treatment on demand for drug users, universal health care, free higher education for Massachusetts residents and reform of the state's prison system.

"I hope the public can see my enthusiasm and my high energy level as an example of how far I'm willing to go in working on the issues I'm talking about," Wagner said.

UMass senior Paul McGonnigal is the only other Republican in the race. Wagner said while "Paul's running is the reason for my enthusiasm," he and Smith did not enter the race simply to block McGonnigal's chances to be elected to the State House.

The Springfield Union-News reported yesterday a number of charges Smith and Wagner made against McGonnigal, centering around alleged comments he made during a "Conservative Awareness Week," and a "straight pride rally" at the University last March.

Smith and Wagner both have videotapes of the two events, which Smith called "very telling about [McGonnigal]."

According to both Wagner and Smith, among other things, McGonnigal called Gregory Levey, an Amherst resident who set fire to himself and died on the town common on Feb. 18, "a bonehead."

"I don't see him as having any great compassion for the human race," Smith said. "I think he's in it for himself."

Both Smith and Wagner said they would be willing to debate McGonnigal. "I'd love to debate Paul McGonnigal on the issues — separate from the video expose," Wagner said.

McGonnigal declined to comment on any of Smith and Wagner's accusations, stating "with regard to the substance of the comments, I can't respond because of the dignifying effect that comment might possibly have."

"I will debate any serious and real candidate from either party," McGonnigal said. "I can't consider the two gentlemen who have announced their bid for the Republican nomination as either serious or real.

"Scurrilous and personal attacks, especially when founded in little more than scant information, the interpretation of which is often subjective, have unfortunately become all too common in American politics," McGonnigal said. "By debating either of these two gentlemen, I would be condoning just that."

Campus loses power

Several buildings on campus lost power for 10 minutes yesterday afternoon cutting off electricity in various classrooms.

Buildings which lost power at about 2:50 p.m. yesterday included the Physical Plant, Morrill, Goodell, Machmer, Munson and the School of Business Administration, according to a University spokesperson.

Spokesperson Karin Sherbin said the cause was still being investigated but Physical Plant officials believe an on-campus sub-station failed, causing the outage.

Director of Physical Plant engineering Hermine Randall said, "I think it has something to do with the Mullins Center."

Explore U.S. with 'exchange'

By CHRISTINE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Tired of UMass?

The National Student Exchange Program at the University offers undergraduate students the opportunity to study at one of 107 participating colleges and universities throughout the United States.

UMass has been a participating school in the exchange program for 12 years, said Sheila Brennan, assistant coordinator of NSE. Brennan said many students take advantage of the program.

"There are 115 UMass students on exchange now, and 125 exchange students at UMass," said Brennan.

"The largest number of exchange students at UMass come from the University of Hawaii at Manoa, although a large number are from California," said Brennan.

Kesten Migdal, an exchange student from Humboldt State University in California, said some of his friends went to UMass on exchange last semester. "I chose UMass because they said it was a great experience and a different lifestyle."

Madelaine Gonzalez, an exchange student from Florida International University said, "I chose to go New England because it is very different from the South, and I wanted to see the winter aspect of it.

"NSE is highly organized, and it helps students learn more about their own country," said Gonzalez.

Brennan said Hawaii used to be the most popular destination for students on exchange. "It changes over time," she said. "At present, the most popular states for UMass students are New Mexico, Montana and California."

Migdal and Gonzalez agreed that applying to the program was easy.

"It wasn't hard at all. It is facilitated to the students and very well advertised," said Gonzalez.

Migdal said getting classes approved to fullfill general education classes was a problem. "I was not able to take all the classes at UMass that I would have been able to take at my home institution," said Migdal.

Tyler Parrish, an exchange student from Utah State University, faulted the University's size. "I like being in this area of the country, but [UMass] is too big," he said.

"I love UMass, it has so many possiblities for students to take advantage of," said Gonzalez.

Migdal said, "I like the social aspect of UMass, but I don't like the classes. The classes are too big, and there is not enough individual attention as at my home campus of Humboldt."

A few students on exchange each year choose to transfer to their host school, Brennan said. "It is not common, and not considered part of the exchange," said Brennan.

In the program, students pay either the same tuition as they normally pay at their home campus, or the in-state rate of the host campus.

Students applying must be full-time students and have a 2.5 grade average.

Feb. 28 is the next deadline for planning an exchange in either the fall or spring of 1993. "A yearly placement conference is held in March," said Brennan.

"I think the most beneficial part of the program, is the opportunity it gives to students," said Brennan. "It is a chance for students to take part in an experience outside of UMass."

Parrish said "It is a lot of work, but really worth it!"

Floor flooded

Compiled by DAVE MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Cance Residence Hall Housing Staff reported to the police on Sunday that the women's showers on the 3rd floor bathroom had been turned on.

The floor was flooded, causing extensive damage to carpeting and rooms. The estimated value of damage is $1,000. The incident is under investigation.

A man reported to the police on Tuesday evening the theft of two pairs of skates, a radar detector, a CB radio and $10 in coins from his car in Lot 40. The estimated value of the items is $590.

are upset that some of the centers closing to join the protest are actually receiving more money than they get.

The Malcolm X Center, the Martin Luther King Jr. Center, the Sylvan Multicultural Center and the Anna Caona Center all have yet to join the coalition of minority students responsible for closing the cultural centers.

A committee of Native American students officially announced they would close the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center during a press conference yesterday demanding that the Chancellor address what the cultural center coalition calls "the facade of multiculturalism at the University."

Deidre A. Lmeida, a graduate student who was the coordinator of Native American recruitment from 1985 to 1988, angrily walked out of the press conference after reading the Native American students' demands. She was disturbed by students' remarks describing the cultural center as a "token center."

"Josephine White Eagle was not a token Indian. She gave her life to the center along with the Mohawk people who drove here and initiated the center," she said. "They are not token people."

their demands to the list already issued by the Latin, Asian, and New World Theater groups.

The United Asia Resource Center was closed by the Asian Students Committee Oct. 21, while the Latin Students Cultural Center closed Nov. 7.

The Native American committee called for:

• The funding for the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center be allocated to the American Indian services, including any across the board increase in funding of University cultural centers.

• That the American Indian services be expanded to a full fledged Academic support program which will include a director, assistant director, counselor and secretary.

• That an outreach position be created for American Indians

• The introduction of an academic program (major) in American Indian Studies.

• That tuition for all American Indians at an in-state level because of their refusal to accept state boundaries.

• Allocation of Skinner Hall as the future Asian, Latin and American Indian Resource building to accomodate work of the aforementioned groups.

A semester filled with coffee, cookies and lots 'o' stress

Greg Sukiennik

It happened every day. I would be sitting at my messy desk in my messy corner of The Largest College Daily in New England eating a cookie and sipping espresso when I would hear a voice or voices.

"Excuse me, is the Editorial Editor around?"

"Uh, that would be me," I'd reply, putting my coffee down. Then we's start to talk about whatever it was they wanted to write, or what I had done "wrong" the day before.

Sports exile? Hell, I wanted this job. I recall pacing around the newsroom last may, trying to decide. "They'll hate you," some warned. "You won't run their 120-line masterpieces and they'll come down screaming at you." Ahh, but being a Red Sox fan I love pain. Besides, what of the fabulous resume potential? ("Hello, Washington Post? What do you mean, you never heard of us? New England's largest. . .yes, I'll hold.") Undaunted, I took the job.

So what was it like, being in the crosshairs of an entire campus? What of the crushing responsibility, the day-to-day grind, the exclusive Collegian slush puppy machine, rotisserie chicken and endless salad bar? [Okay, we don't have slush puppies.]

Well, first and foremost, what you see here in smudgy ink would never have been possible without the help of Darienne Hosley, the associate editorial editor. Her help was invaluble and she deserves most of the credit I've gotten. Darienne, it wasn't coffee and doughnuts but it sure beat flossing. Thanks.

Second, I'd also like to thank everyone who wrote a column or letter or sent a cartoon. We couldn't use 'em all, but enjoyed reading all of them. A special note of thanks also goes out to those who made columnist this semester. You know who you are.

Now then, where was I? Oh yeah, describing my semester. From the UMass Cannibis Reform Coalition to the Graduate Employee Organization, angry students, happy students and everyone in between, they all came on down and said hello, and hopefully dropped off a letter or something.

Or something. . . when I took this job, I had a vision, not quite like a Vision of Love (sorry, Mariah) but something big all the same. I thought about balancing opinion on the page, something many students I talked to told me they wanted to see.

"It's all liberal this, strike that, Republicans suck, I hate everyone, blah blah blah," they complained. "Make it different. Show both sides. Make people laugh."

So I gave it a shot. From what I've heard, it worked. Maybe too much. Rewind to the GEO strike and you'll see what I mean.

"We're concerned about the amount of anti-GEO letters on your page," some said. "We don't think you're being fair. We don't think the undergraduate newspaper should be doing that."

So much for balance, huh? Well it worked, at least — both sides got their points across and things worked out in the end.

Making people laugh was a little easier. I left that up to the pages' contributors, and they came through more often than not. After all, I doubt I could have come up with "Beer Nation."

Serious issues found their way in too. It wasn't all fun and games. AIDS was probably the biggest issue of the semester, save the graduate strike, and it hit home on the page more than once. One can only hope someone became more careful because of something they read, if not on the Editorial page then somewhere, anywhere.

Well, now that it's about over, one piece of advice. Just remember no matter who you are or what you do, don't take yourself too seriously. I met plenty of people who could laugh at their situation, but I also met many who truly believed they were beyond reproach, and that's a damn shame. If I had felt I was somehow above bouncing around the newsroom like a kid, playing air guitar and telling bad jokes, the job might have gotten the best of me.

Guess what? I'm still here. And glad I took the risk.

Trying to make diversity a reality

Trystan Skeigh

Integration vs. Liberation. These terms frequently pop up in letters and columns. It's important to consider the very distinct differences in these two concepts.

Integration means "to form into a whole," or "to incorporate into a larger unit," according to Webster's Dictionary.

Liberate means "to free from bondage or restraint," or "to raise to equal rights and status."

The third definition of integration matches the second definition of liberate. I think that's wrong. There's a fine line between integration and assimilation. It is not the goal of the lesbian/gay liberation movement to blend into a larger homogenous society. We are proud of our differences. We want mutual respect.

From the conversations I've had with Black friends and allies, some in the African-American Liberation Movement feel the same.

The idea of an American melting pot is a White male idea. It really stands for a bucket of heterosexual whitewash in which we're all supposed to take frequent dips. Differences are meant to be hidden, discarded, forgotten, removed, exorcized, or ended.

Unlike nearly every mainstream national newspaper, the UMass Collegian has developed an editorial structure, admittedly in response to strong community pressures, designed to reflect the myriads of differences present in this large, multi-cultural campus community. Although many students were probably unaware of this fact, this fairly large East Coast student newspaper is perhaps the first in the country to dedicate an editorship to GLB issues. It is also one of the few to include a Third World Affairs page, a Multi-Cultural affairs page, and commit to covering issues of concern to women, Blacks and Jews.

There are no national mainstream newspapers that even attempt to cover society's diversity as regularly and extensively as the Collegian. The fact that this student paper has dared to take a leadership role in radically expanding its news coverage to accurately reflect social diversity is a fact about which its staff and readers should feel very proud.

But we also need to think about why the rest of the media is lagging so far behind.

To be ignored is to be rendered invisible. To live without affirmations of one's own self is to become hollow and aching. When I came out as a lesbian a decade ago, I couldn't find any books or newspapers about lesbian issues. I felt alone and completely misunderstood and devalued.

This feeling is not unique to me. It is felt by oppressed people everywhere in this society. Our media remains committed to white, heterosexual male news coverage, even though women are the majority in this country and, by the turn of the century, people of color will outnumber Whites.

We have been told to "integrate" and accept White male views and values in this culture, although for most of us, they do not reflect our own life experience.

In her poem "Tokens" Natasha Josefowitz writes "Survival is in the finding of kindred spirits anywhere."

For some gays, lesbians, Blacks, Latinos, and other oppressed groups, being able to pick up a newspaper and read a story written about issues that are vital to us is like pouring water on cracked earth during a drought. We are parched for reflections of ourselves — glimpses of the beauty within our own cultures, as well as hard-hitting looks at problems facing our communities.

It is up to all of us to demand that this nation's news media improve its coverage of the diverse cultures present within this society. We are not a White melting pot — we're more like a massive platter of very differently flavored, colored, and shaped hors 'deuvres, each meant to be savored separately.

The fact that many mainstream newspapers have gone bankrupt suggests many readers are no longer interested in their White male content. It's time readers were offered something else.

Publishing technology has become cheap and easy, and I believe there are readers out there hungry for news relevant to their own lives. I predict over the next few years we will see an explosion of interesting, well-written grassroots newspapers that reflect many different aspects of the diverse society in which we live.

Frankly, I hope I'm working for one of them.

Coloring movies destroys the magic

Diana D'Avanzo

Christmas is rapidly approaching. A warm, happy time of year characterized by decorations, gifts, Carols and anticipation. Family and friends gather together to enjoy a splendid Christmas feast and share good times with those they love. Children, old and young, awake at the crack of dawn to rip open wrapping paper and enjoy their newly acquired presents. Snow, cold weather, smiles and the Christmas spirit symbolize the hope and happiness that is the true meaning of Christmas.

Another Christmas tradition is watching Frank Capra's "Its a Wonderful Life." Who can find fault with Mary's undieing adoration for George, the manner in which the naive second class angel Clarence shows George that life is worth living and the film's main theme: love. In depicting the trials and troubles of George and proving that life is worth the effort "Its a Wondertul Life" reminds us that despite all the hardships we face daily, life is valuable and meaningful.

However, in recent years we have been dealt a great injustice concerning the feelings we receive when viewing Capra's classic. We have been robbed of a good deal of the comfort we once experienced through George's realization. The crime committed is that of colorization. Adding color to a black and white film is something that ought not be done. It certainly takes away from the movies original purpose and meaning. How did the atrocity of technicolor come into being?

Film major Scott Hyman explained what happened. In short, colorization has been around forever. However, the force came in the early eighties when Ted Turner, Mr. Grinch himself, bought MGM's old film library, along with complete rights, and began doing the Crayola thing in hopes of attracting a new and younger audience or profit. From Stewart to Grant to Hepburn colorization has run rampant. Steven Spielberg went as far as asking Congress to set up a National Film Registry in order to protect artists' work. Each year about twenty films are added to this registry.

The story behind "It's a Wonderful Life" is a little different. It seems that through some sort of mix up between Mr. Capra and his lawyers the copyright of some of Capra's films ran out and his works suddenly became public domain. These movies can now be played by anyone at any time and no royalties need be paid. What happened next is clear — actually it's kind of purple and bluish and a little green.

Mr. Turner obviously miscalculated. At age 14 and in black and white I loved Capra's film. At age 20 and in color I have lost my enthusiasm to view this excellent work and refuse to watch unless the original black and white version is playing. In an attempt at modernization the public has been had. Though non-colorized movies are a simple, practically not worth mentioning pleasure, they are still a pleasure and should be enjoyed as is.

I sincerely hope that the movie industry has noticed and learned from this failure and will never again repeat the horror of colorization. Unfortunately, Turner now owns Hanna Barbara and I fear that any change in Yogi, Booboo or the Ranger will result in yet another unpleasant trend.

Bidding this semester a fond farewell

Felice Cohen

The semester began abound with new faces, everyone different from various places.
I was eager to learn and ready to study,
while pulling all-nighters my brain turned to putty.
As the days grew cooler and the leaves fell fast,
Bar-b-ques and swimming had become a thing of the past.
This semester has proved to be especially sweet,
for I landed good classes without missing a beat.
There is one other plus that I really must add, that is — nothing compares to having your own pad.

Now it's good-bye to fire alarms, smelly johns and loud thugs, for I have long since discarded my sound proof earplugs.
Although these past months have been somewhat nice,
only once did I complain, okay maybe twice,
about the overload of courses and homework I had,
though when I was finished, I admit I was glad.
After midterms were done, Thanksgiving came quick,
we all made it home and ate and got sick.
Now it's all almost over — only one week and we're gone, till we're home, just relaxing with the radio on.
For those who are graduating, Debra you're one,
don't stress — just enjoy — 'cause "Baby, you're done!"
To look back on the years and see how you've fared, could be scary, but I think that you are prepared.
For life in the real world is aimed at making a buck,
So go out there — work hard — and by all means, good luck.
Now the semester was calm and not too bizarre, except for "GEO the Union" or is it a car?
Will the budget cuts ever stop making us moan?
or is it back in line we should go for a loan?
With finals upon us the future looks dim,
with no snow, just cold air the outlook seems grim.
But don't get all gloomy and worn out and tattered, remember my friends, does it all really matter?
When finals and papers are all in the past, you'll be glad that you studied (that is if you passed)
Now winter break is a long one, make plans if you're able, don't sit around yawning or watching the cable.
Read a book, take a walk or sketch out your resume, cause when you return, jobs are scarce come the-month-of-May.
So until then my friends, study hard 'cause remember, you promised your parents you would last September.

Eastbound for Amherst: the travelogue of a 'Tripper'

Nick Nyhan

I'm a Tripper.

There are a lot of us Trippers out there. We move in the same circles and go to the same places, but more importantly, we ride together. Trippers probably spend more time on the bus going back and forth between Northampton and Amherst than we do in either town. For us, the town of Hadley is just one big Drive-Thru.

As a Tripper, when I feel the road calling, I don't care what time it is; I just leave. Like the scenery along the route, I know the bus schedule by heart. If I'm a little late and the bus is late too, then the world is wonderful. But if the bus is late and I'm there early, I curse the driver and the wretched earth. Not fair? I know. Traveling makes me irritable.

How can you tell who's a regular Tripper? Look at the way people wait for the bus. Trippers don't stand at the bus stop with their heads cocked to the left on look-out. They don't search the oncoming headlights or keep asking people what time it is. They know that the ebb and flow along Route 9, like the sea, is unchangeable, vast and indifferent. Call me Tripper.

Trippers don't care for pedestrians. They slow us down. Unfortunately the driver is forced to stop whenever someone so much as steps off the curb. I think some people, before they get out of bed in the morning, look both ways and see if the bus is coming; and if so, they rush down to the sidewalk and stand there. Brushing their teeth. Opening their mail. Just waiting for us to come down the street. And we stop because we have to; it's the law. It's at these moments that I can hear the drip-drip of oil drops staining the street below me — oil that should be racing through the engine. That's when I bury my head in a book.

I don't look up again until I hear the diesel roar, not until the black smoke chokes the next pedestrian, then I know that we're safe until the next crosswalk.

Making our way down Rte. 9, other Trippers get on, some throwing half-finished cigarettes behind them, or hiding their coffee cups from the gaze of the driver as he click-clicks on his "Tripper counter." Friends look for adjacent seats. The friendly smile. The rest of us must walk the walk, down the aisle, making split-second decisions on who to sit with and what it will entail. Meanwhile, those seated feign sleep, itch, cough, pray and pile — all in order to preserve the seat next to them. Keep going, keep going, and suddenly, you're all the way back to the lounge.

For those who have not been back there, the lounge area is the PVTA's best-kept secret. It contains a dazzling array of local artwork which hangs on the wall for your visual pleasure, and all of it is priced with the student in mind. There's also a rack of periodicals and daily newspapers, just in case someone, in the course of a heated conversation, says: "I know what I'm talking about. I read it in a magazine." Then you can say, "Oh, really? Which one? We'll check on it here in the mobile Microfiche unit." And just in case things start to get testy, you can be sure that the Five-College Hostess will be there in a jiffy ready to take drink orders. If you don't have the money this time, that's okay because she knows that as a Tripper, you'll be back tomorrow.

Some Trippers talk loudly and some Trippers talk softly. I've gotten to know many of them even though they don't know me. You can't help but listen. Some are obviously performing for the crowd and then there's the others who are sharing secrets so personal that you'd think they were oblivious to everyone around them. And it's quite possible that you, yourself, will be walking the walk one day and suddenly, there's a pang. You need to find someone, anyone, to talk to: the person next to you, someone you recognize from a class, the pregnant woman who got on at the mall, the old farmer who chews incessantly, even the driver; find someone immediately or else you'll go crazy taking this trip again! Then again, you can just talk to yourself, but you'll find that those Trippers usually sit up front and never get off.

Here's a few questions you can use to find out which of your friends are Trippers:

1) What year was Hopkin's Baseball team the State Champs? (see barn near Katina's)

2) How many passenger "alarm bongs" does it take to make a driver stop? (three, after which it's usually turned off)

3) What kind of gum is Edie the Chewer chewing? (Edie's)

4) What sound does a leather motorcycle jacket make? ("DO you like my new leather jacket? It's recycled road-kill. Costs more, but worth it.")

5) Where's your homework? ("My coat ate it.")

If you answered more than one of these correctly, I'll see you on the bus. You're a Tripper.

- The mysterious bubbling "water from hell" in Southwest
- The murals in the library stairwell

Clip 'n save. See ya next semester.

Brooke C. Wheeler is a Collegian columnist.

A group making a real difference

I'm in a bad mood today. O.K., so I'm in a very bad mood. Partly because of the usual end-of-semester traumas, partly because I just quit smoking. But mostly because a really important organization had its first meeting at UMass last night. . . and nobody noticed.

Posters don't work at UMass. Everybody who has ever worked publicity for a play, a concert, a meeting knows that — unless you have hundreds of dollars to throw around to create thousands of the damn things. To get a meeting off the ground, you need something in the Collegian. Anything. An announcement, a letter, an FYI, an article . . . anything.

The organization, 20/20 Vision, UMass chapter, that had its first meeting in Earthfoods last night is going to be an important force in this nation's politics. 20/20 Vision informs and mobilizes otherwise well-meaning-but-busy people to get involved in decision-making on a local and national level. It is different because it only asks for twenty minutes a month of its subscribers' time. It is important because it gives ordinary people the necessary information to put intelligent pressure on decisions makers en masse (in the form of letters and phone messages) and because it works.

Every day the Collegian is filled with articles and editorials expressing disgust, directly or indirectly, with U.S. government policies — economic, social, environmental and military. So why is it that when an organization is formed here at UMass for the purpose of putting these dissatisfied people in touch with the decision-making process, the Collegian cannot find space for two lines about it?

As a European exchange student, I find the lack of political involvement in this country disturbing. As a citizen of a tiny country (Ireland), I find it worrying because every step America takes affects the rest of the world acutely. You have a lot of responsibility as members of the world's most powerful nation. Think about that.

Although the Collegian has several very entertaining writers and I plan my day around the Far Side cartoons, sometimes I wonder what has been left out for the ninth "what-I-did-with-my-weekend" editorial. While I don't want to beat anyone over the head with these issues, 20/20 Vision is more than just another well-meaning but time-consuming student group. I am not a member of the core group of 20/20 Vision but I did submit an article, press release and calendar listing on their behalf. I am simply a student who is worried that America is trampling over the rest of the world. There is nothing I can do about this from Dublin. While I am here I would like to make a difference.

Vandalization of menorah proves anti-Semitism a problem at UMass

To the party or parties responsible for damaging the Hanukkah menorah near the Student Union:

I was walking to the Student Union on Saturday afternoon when I came upon a sight that appalled and outraged me — the Hanukkah menorah provided by Chabad House had been vandalized. Someone, or something, had smashed the stem of the menorah causing it to break in half. The top part of the menorah lay resting on a wooden construction horse.

In my four years at the University of Massachusetts, I have never seen such a blatant display of anti-Semitism. As the daughter of a Holocaust survivor, and a Jew, I was deeply hurt and offended by this thoughtless and disrespectful act.

Hanukkah is a celebration for Jews all over the world, a celebration of freedom of spirit, freedom of expression, freedom to practice our religion. During the holiday we remember the reclamation of the second temple after it had been vandalized by the Greek army. The Hasmonians defeated the Greeks and, on entering the defiled temple, they located a menorah and found a container of pure oil — just enough to last one day. The menorah was lit, and a great miracle happened — the oil lasted eight days!

The message of Hanukkah is not just for Jews but for people worldwide, that all peoples should be free to practice their religion.

Seeing a Hanukkah menorah on campus gave me a feeling of pride as a Jew, and I was happy to see UMass acknowledging our holiday. I had the mistaken idea that anti-Semitic attacks were on the decline at UMass. Unfortunately, I was wrong.

Last year's defacement of the Hillel office door, vandalization of the Hillel House menorah, and two years ago a red Israeli flag being placed on the sidewalk in front of Whitmore so that people would be forced to walk over it apparently were not enough. Our menorah — the symbol of our celebration — also had to be attacked.

The attack on the menorah proves that anti-Semitism is on the rise at this university. I am not implying that a UMass student committed this atrocious display of hatred. It could have been anyone. To whomever is responsible for this abomination, I have one thing to say: acts of hatred won't get you very far in this world.

We all share a right to opinions

In response to Mr. Labonte's article titled, "Local Slams UMass [Collegian, Dec. 10], Mr. Labonte presents a reasonable argument concerning some Amherst residents having to put up with certain college students' attitudes. However, that is the only plausible point he makes.

First of all, he expressed his frustration at the "flat-topped, drunk jocks and the Southwest hair spray queens" who ride the buses. Congratulations, Mr. Labonte, you successfully stereotyped about 5,500 students based on the actions of a few you may have observed. If it weren't for UMass and the five college consortium program you wouldn't even be able to ride the bus for free. So, if you don't like it, walk!

Secondly, there hasn't been one issue of the Collegian published in which I have agreed with everything that was printed on the editorial/opinion page. However, everyone has a right to their opinion whether you and I agree or not. It has to do with a little concept we call Freedom of Speech. We are not wasting our time by expressing our views. You are wasting our time by submitting a thoughtless and ignorant opinion. Mr. Labonte has the right to his opinion, and I have the right to conclude that it's wrong.

The very name of our newspaper, the Daily Collegian, and the fact that much of the material is written by students obviously implies that it is geared towards college students. If you don't like it, don't read it. If you think you can do better, maybe you should start your own newspaper called the Amherst Anal Retentive Resident Daily. By the way, I kind of like "The Far Side."

Walden Learning Center urges 'Grinch' to return stolen VCR

Over the weekend of Dec. 6 and 7, a VCR was stolen from the Walden Learning Center, a campus preschool for disabled and typical children.

The VCR is used during rest time each day. This is a particularly devastating time for such a theft to occur, since the recession has hit the preschool too. Ironically, the video "How the Grinch Stole Christmas" was in the VCR unit when it was stolen. The children are hoping the thief will follow the example set by the Grinch and return the VCR.

The preschool is located next to College Pizza, at the corner of Sunset Avenue and Fearing Street.

If anyone would like to return the VCR anonymously or if anyone knows anything about the theft, please contact the Center at 545-4791 and we will be happy to assist you without any questions being asked.

Chucklehead's 'evil circus' returns to funk up your weekend

By ERIC POULIN
Collegian Staff

Bob Dylan was old and boring, De La Soul pulled a no-show and the Feelies were, well, the Feelies. So was there anything memorable about an unusually sub-par Pond Concert this past spring?

Chucklehead, naturally.

It was something that could almost have been predicted, as anyone who has ever caught their live act could tell you. These eight comic funksters were simply doing what they do best — that is, giving the audience a chance to shake their thang while tickling their collective funnybone in the process.

The rise of Chucklehead from relative obscurity to national recognition has been one that's taken place primarily within the last year, highlighted by their appearance on MTV's Generation program. Their debut EP, and its single "Stalagmite," have both logged airplay throughout the northeast, although the real treat about these guys is their stage act.

"The club owners are very interested in what we're doing 'cause it's very different from everything out there (the local scene)," says drummer E-Rock.

"We feel a lot of what we see is the same stuff that was happening two years ago — a lot of angst-ridden garage rock — where the band is up on stage and the crowd is 20 feet away, and there's like, this wall of steel between everyone in the band; like a carnival. Funk is a carnival."

Chucklehead

If you've never experienced Chucklehead, try to imagine George Clinton and James Brown crashing head on with hip-hop and Sesame Street. The result is a funky jive that is spiced with the humor and wit of eight clowns, and is impossible to sit still to.

"We walk the line between being nasty and being clowns," says guitarist Eb-Tide. "It's like evil circus music."

Although evil may not be the exact word, there is a bit of an "adult" flavor to their music, as many of the songs have double meanings relating to sex. The remix of "Jeopardy" (their musical spoof of the game-show) features newly added samples that are designed to create images of nasty stuff going on between the host and the contestants.

"Prince is into sex and God. We're into sex and humor," says keyboardist Brainy B.

So, if you're looking for an eight-ring circus to help you forget your troubles, look no further than Chucklehead. Oh, yeah, what was that about Sesame Street?

"Sesame Street tells everyone to be together, be yourself, and have fun," says Eb-Tide, "It's beautiful."

If you don't get down to these guys, you probably never thought "Tangelo Pie" was funny.

Chucklehead will perform at Pearl Street Nightclub this evening with the Tribulations. Doors open at 8:30 p.m. and the show is 18+.

Tough women, thrillers, big bucks tops in '91

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

What to make of 1991 in films? Redemption was in. The lesson in Regarding Henry was that getting shot in the head can make you a better person. And all a greedy, insensitive doctor needed to do was contract cancer to be a nicer guy. If anything, 1991 will be remembered as the year muscle bound women gained popularity and the year Arnold Schwarzenegger played an underdog.

With the notable exception of Terminator 2, big budgets did not necessarily mean big box office earnings. Bruce Willis may have killed his career with Hudson Hawk, although critic-proof Kevin Costner drove Robin Hood past the $100 million mark despite a bland performance.

Tough women emerged as a viable draw in the mixed bag of Linda Hamilton in T2, Thelma and Louise, La Femme Nikita, and VI Warshawski. In reversal, Billy Crystal proved that nice guys can finish first (box office-wise) in the overrated surprise hit, City Slickers.

But now to the big ten. In my opinion, the best films of the year, in alphabetical order (despite two viable weeks left in the December), here goes:

Beauty and the Beast: (A-) Disney has continued the brilliance of The Little Mermaid in crafting this wonderfully old fashioned animated film. The songs aren't as memorable as in Mermaid, but Beauty and the Beast contains all the warmth, quality, and sheer entertainment of Disney's past greats that initiate a new classic.

Boyz N the Hood: (B+) Solid performances by rapper Ice Cube, Cuba Goding Jr., Morris Chestnut, and Larry Fishburne ignite this excellent study of brothers, fathers and sons, and the impact and devistation of drugs. A somewhat predictable script doesn't hamper the performers' impact. A promising directorial debut by John Singleton.

Cape Fear: (A) A phenomenal moral thriller by master director Martin Scorsese that contains untouchable performances by Robert DeNiro, Nick Nolte, and newcomer Juliette Lewis. A remake of the 1962 classic, it lifts the best elements of the first and adds a moral complexity to the nail biting suspense. The violence, unlike the implied horror of the original, is right in the viewer's face. Cape Fear is an unrelenting masterpiece.

The Box Office

Dead Again: (A-) Romance, mystery, murder, and reincarnation figure into this clever thriller by British director and actor Kenneth Branagh. Good acting in parallel plots, more than a few genuine jolts, and an unforgettable cameo by Robin Williams help support the ever-twisting plot. Even if the last ten minutes are almost entirely in slow motion (way to much), Dead Again is an intelligent shocker/love story that (gasp!) requires the viewer to pay very close attention and think.

The Fisher King: (A-) A wonderful, weird, and captivating film filled with credible performances by the brilliant Robin Williams, as well as Jeff Bridges, Mercedes Ruhel, and Amanda Plummer. A story of madness, love, and (surprise!) redemption. The last half hour, however, crashes down into convention, a flaw that does not diminish its entertaining style.

My Own Private Idaho: (A) A complex and unnerving drama of two male prostitutes played with bitter honesty by River Phoenix and Keanu Reeves. A thinly veiled Shakespearean tragedy that's not easy to understand and not for everyone. The movie isn't mainly about prostitution or being gay, but the search for love and a sense of belonging. Director Gus Van Sant (Drugstore Cowboy) has crafted a gritty drama that's a reminder of the potential power of film.

Silence of the Lambs: (A-) A haunting and stylish shocker that contains some of the best performances of the year. Jodie Foster and Anthony Hopkins create memorable characters as well as an uneasy couple. Smoothly directed by Jonathan Demme, grosely graphic, and full of heart pounding tension, Silence of the Lambs is probably the most talked about thriller since Fatal Attraction.

Terminator 2: Judgement Day: (B+) An $88 million action packed extravaganza that combines monumental special effects which elicit more that a few "wow"'s and Arnold at his stoicbest. A great villain, a sensational Linda Hamilton, and thrilling stunts make for a great ride. While it doesn't approach the tense narrative of the first, T2 is a fabulously entertaining action film.

Thelma and Louise: (A-) A funny, furious, and interesting study of two buddies played by Susan Sarandon and Geena Davis on a road trip that turns criminal. A refreshingly unpredictable film where all (except the cop played by Harvey Keitel) the men are louses and the line of responsibility is gray and often crossed. Some called it male bashing, others feminism in its glory. Don't listen to anyone else and make up your own mind. Excellent performances not only by Sarandon and Davis, but by Keitel, Brad Pitt, and Christopher MacDonald highlight this Ridley Scott comedy/drama.

Truth or Dare: (B+) A thoroughly entertaining documentary focusing on the backstage life of Madonna's 1990 Blonde Ambition World Tour. The film eyes Madonna, her relationships with her family, her back-up dancers, her love life, and her friends. Unforgettable for her classic 'dissing' of Kevin Costner, Warren Beatty's biting remarks on the film, plus her (in)famous Evian bottle escapade. One never knows if they're getting the true story, but there are some wild revelations, even for Madonna. All of these are punctuated by energetic numbers from her tour. Whether you think she's a no-talent-slut or a master manipulator, Truth or Dare will either confirm your worst accusations, or enable you to see her in a different light.

Runners up (or movies I just liked a lot) include the over-the-top farce Soapdish, The Rocketeer, Ramblin Rose, and Class Action. The most disappointing movie of the year had to be Woody Allen and Bette Midler in the plainly unfunny Scenes From A Mall. For the worst, look no further that John Hughes, the creator of Home Alone, who is responsible for the heinously bad quintet of films released this year: Career Opportunities, Dutch, Only the Lonely, and Curly Sue.

So much for 1991.

Two local heroes: Addis and One Eyed Jake

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

It is becoming increasingly more popular for area bands to put out their albums on the CD format, versus the cassette format which became a necessity with the demise of vinyl. Whereas pressing an album on compact disc was once cost prohibitive for those on a budget, the CD format has now become about the same cost to produce as cassettes. It also seems to be more logical, as consumer tastes lean towards the compact disc and almost every radio station around has also made the switch.

One Eyed Jake, a popular UMass rock n' roll band, made the right move when they decided to release their studio demo on CD, because the digital format not only does justice to this band but also captures the awesome production work that went into this product.

"City Ride", the new CD from One Eyed Jake, is a three song EP that is bound to draw some industry attention and bolster the reputation of a band that has until this time been mostly known for performing covers.

The three original tunes on this EP are well-written, tightly arranged, and perfectly executed kick-ass rock and roll. The CD opens with the title cut "City Ride" which builds on a basic funk riff with some tasty metal guitar licks to boot. "Monday Morning Blues" is a textured blues number that features some fine harmonica work and drum fills. The final cut, titled "East Side Boys", opens with some soft acoustic 12 string guitar and dreamy saxaphone but finishes as a rockin' rave-up.

Jabberwocky

One can easily detect the blues influences throughout the music of One Eyed Jake. The vocals and musicianship are top-notch and the entire production and engineering of this EP are most excellent. Buy it. Play it. This deserves some radio airplay.

If you haven't seen New Horizons, the best reggae band in the Valley, then you don't know what you're missing. If you are even remotely familiar with New Horizons then you would most certainly recognize Addis, longtime vocalist and keyboadist, who is now focusing his attention on his burgeoning solo career. Addis originally hails from St John's in the Caribbean and his music and lyrics are a reflection of his culture.

As Addis passionately states, "I am a roots man. I am a Rasta man. I am a Rastafarian."

As an artist his interest is focused in capturing a wider audience by intertwining the hymn-like qualities of roots reggae with popular dance beats. "My music is a type of reggae characterized by popular and common rhythms. These rhythms attract a young American listening audience. I wish to capture a younger audience because young minds create tommorrow."

Through the generosity of private donors and with the help of Bassie, songwriter and musical arranger, Addis has just finished a solo album titled "For My Lover". The album was recorded at Platinum Sounds in Boston and will be released on cassette.

Local reggae fans (and there are many) will have an opportunity to hear Addis play live, buy his new tape, and of course dance the night away when he apears at the Hatch in the Student Union tonight. The Addis tape release party is in keeping with the unusually fine local shows that the Hatch has featured all semester.

Software Design Engineers and Program Managers

Where else?

The towering, snow-covered peaks of the Cascade Mountains never fail to impress you on your daily commute to the world's leading software company.

And, this weekend, it's good to know you can take your pick of cosmopolitan nightlife, deep sea fishing, or maybe kayaking through white water rapids.

Where else could you be but in Seattle? And where else would you be working but at Microsoft?

Here, good housing is plentiful, the people are genuinely friendly, and the standard of living is exceptionally high.

Fine arts, exquisite dining, professional sports, spectacular outdoor recreation...the choices are virtually endless.

Best of all is the work. Nobody in the software industry can match Microsoft's unique professional environment, industry accomplishments, or plans for the future.

See. Life in the real world isn't so bad after all...now that you're at Microsoft, that is.

If you are pursuing a Bachelor's, Master's or PhD degree in Computer and Information Science, Electrical or Computer Engineering, Math, Physics or a related discipline, and have an interest in the software industry, we'd like to talk with you at our On-campus Interviews.

We are an equal opportunity employer and are working toward a more culturally diverse workplace.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Current challenges may involve childcare or joint-custody arrangements. Keep your cool. A period of quiet reflection will help restore your vitality. Good music chases away the blues.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Beware of snags in communication or transportation today. You have a winning way with influential people and need to make only certain facts clear. Nurture romantic relationship. Call a tall thin friend up for dinner if you live on a hill.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A wonderful time to work on partnership matters and firm up arrangements regarding joint funds. Your midas touch continues day and night. Avoid appearing selfish if you want someone else's attention.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Workplace communications go smoothly today. Now is the time to ally yourself with influential associates. You are dynamic and articulate — and would make a great spokesperson.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Reclusive tendencies bar the door to progress. How can people get together with you if you will not meet them halfway. Shake hands on agreement today. Romance takes a happy turn.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Try not to over act to an employer's questions or a supervisor's suggestions. You have a tendency to take things too personally. Lighten up! Spend a fun evening with your loved ones.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You can move mountains today, thanks to your strong organizational skills. Be tactful if you must correct someone's mistakes. Those in authority express appreciation for your efficiency.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A friendship or romance could fall short of your expectations. It is better not to kick up a fuss. Your keen eye for value remains sharp. You are able to make a shrewd investment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Career obstacles may temporarily deprive you of the praise and freedom you are due. Lie low; an influential friend will come through for you. Shop for high-quality items.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A long-term legal agreement or major purchase indicates a secure future. An uncertain domestic situation will soon improve. Avoid acting recklessly in a personal relationship.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A social event or romantic interlude will make this a special day. Let your works of support flow freely; you will touch on emotional chord. Loved ones rally to your side this evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Going to the top is usually preferable to wasting time with subordinates. You may be dealing with people of wealth and influence over the next day or two. Dress and act conservatively.

McCoy to return against Holy Cross

Star guard returns to practice

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts guard Jim McCoy practiced yesterday and is expected to play tonight, when the Minutemen travel to Worcester for a game with Holy Cross (7:30 p.m.)

McCoy, UMass' all-time leading scorer, missed Tuesday's battle of attrition with the University of New Hampshire, an 84-63 UMass win, with a sprained ankle.

He sustained the injury Monday in practice during an intersquad scrimmage, when he landed awkwardly on his left ankle. After a few moments on the court, he was helped to the lockeroom.

After Tuesday night's game, McCoy said the swelling had gone down, but he was still limping. Yesterday, he showed no signs of favoring the ankle.

Assistant coach Bill Bayno said McCoy was "all set" to play tonight. He is expected to start.

Despite McCoy's absence Tuesday, the Minutemen toughed out their seventh win of the season. A game in which the Minutemen showed impatience on offense, launching the first open shot available, and shooting a meager 30 of 52 from the free throw line.

"I don't know what to say [about the foul shooting]," said UMass forward Tony Barbee, a career 74 percent foul shooter, who was 11-20 from the free throw line. "It's all psychological. I'm just going to go to the gym and work hard to correct my mistakes."

UMass guard Anton Brown continued his hot shooting, connecting on 7 of 14 shots, tallying 21 points. In the past two games, Brown is averaging 22 points, effectively lifting his play to a higher level.

Brown said Tuesday, "With Jim [McCoy] out, we don't have a guy out there who we can say, `go score.'"

UMass coach John Calipari said after Tuesday's win that it was tough to get his guys up for the game. He said he was hoping to get them to play hard for the final two games, before they head home for the holiday.

The Minutemen open the Atlantic 10 season at George Washington Saturday and host the Abdow's Hall of Fame Classic at the Springfield Civic Center Dec. 27 and 28.

Holy Cross enters tonight's affair with a 1-3 record. Their only win came against Harvard 100-75 in the second game of the season.

The Crusaders have yet to win on the road, dropping games to Providence (80-73), Brown (79-76) and Western Michigan (78-65).

Game notes: The game can be heard on WMUA (91.1 FM) with Dave Oldred and Tom Johnson and on WHMP (99.3 FM) with George Miller and Howie Davis. WMUA will continue to broadcast the games over intersession.

Seats for tonight's game are still available at the Holy Cross ticket office.

Massachusetts' Jerome Malloy (left) and Lou Roe apply pressure to New Hampshire's Shaft Lewis (34) as he brings the ball up court. The Minutemen (7-1) play Holy Cross in Worcester tonight.

THE MATCHUPS

Harper Williams vs. Scott Martzloff — Martzloff, a 7-1 center is averaging 11.5 points and 12.7 rebounds per game. If McCoy does not play, the Minutemen will need Williams to score as well as stop Martzloff.

William Herndon vs. Rick Mashburn — Mashburn is the Crusaders' leading scorer at 15 points per game. Herndon, who scored just 1 point against UNH is due for a big game.

Anton Brown vs. Roger Breslin — Brown has been red hot in the past two games, averaging 22 points in the past two games. Breslin's 7.5 assists and 8 points paces the Crusaders' offense.

Atlantic 10 Conference on shaky ground

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Despite losing one member a year ago and facing the prospect of losing another, the Atlantic 10 Conference last month blocked a vote of expansion, by a vote of 6-3, according to sources close to the conference. Reports centered on the possibility of LaSalle University replacing the departed Penn State.

Last week Duquesne University issued an ultimatum to the Atlantic 10 that says, according to reports published in the Pitt Press, if the A-10 refuses to allow LaSalle to enter the conference by Dec. 31, 1991, Duquesne will join LaSalle and enter the Midwestern Collegiate Conference.

Temple, St. Joseph's and Rutgers cast the deciding votes against expansion at last month's Media Day in Philadelphia, PA, according to sources. The conference needed seven votes to allow expansion after the loss of Penn State to the Big 10.

Sources said the Atlantic 10 had been courting LaSalle, saying A-10 Commissioner Ron Bertovich met with LaSalle officials, "a couple of times, unofficially."

The three schools that voted against LaSalle are all in the same Philadelphia area, which doesn't seem to make sense, according to LaSalle Athletic Director Bob Mullen.

"Our suggestion last spring was that if we entered the conference, there would be a number of benefits," he said. "First of all, travel costs would be nil, and secondly, it would guarantee Temple and St. Joe's one more sell-out.

"I even took it one step further, I was in favor of pursuing other teams like Xavier. That would allow for divisional play," he said.

UMass basketball coach John Calipari, for one, said he didn't think LaSalle was the answer.

"I'm not sure LaSalle is the answer if we expand," Calipari said. "I'm more in favor of pursuing Xavier and Dayton. This is a basketball conference, first and foremost, we make money on basketball and spend it on everything else."

UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney disagreed with Calipari, saying that he would be pleased if LaSalle entered the conference.

"We support bringing in LaSalle," McInerney said. "I think it would add prestige and numbers to our program. They're a good school, and they have a good athletic program."

McInerney added that, to his knowledge, Rutgers, St. Joseph's and Temple voted against expansion plans.

St. Joseph's has also reportedly been courted by MCC officials, as Athletic Director Don Dijulia was seen attending the MCC meetings in Indianapolis last summer.

St. Joe's, however, denies the report they voted against expansion. Dijulia called these reports, "absolutely wrong".

"The vote was unanimous in favor of pursuing expansion," Dijulia said. "We favor seriously, aggressively pursuing expansion, and we consistently have. LaSalle is a very good viable institution."

About the prospect of Duquesne leaving, A-10 Director of communications, Ray Cella said, "We talk to Duquesne daily. Our goal is to keep Duquesne in the Atlantic 10 Conference."

A-10 Commissioner Ron Bertovich could not be reached for comment.

The secrecy of the alleged "expansion vote" is very unusual. The Atlantic 10 office would not divulge whether a vote actually took place, and conflict arose to what this vote was. The possibility of expanding is now as good as ever, due to the release of Duquesne's ultimatum.

LaSalle seems to be the logical choice, at any rate. LaSalle has said it would like to become the 10th member of the A-10, and the school seems to be a natural fit for the conference.

What seems even more puzzling is that schools from the Mid-Atlantic states reportedly opposed the idea. It seems that back-door politics exist in the A-10, but these politics soon may be thrown into the limelight.

Minutemen swimmers remain undefeated, 4-0

By BRIAN GORMLEY
Collegian Correspondent

Record breaking performances from Scott Reed, Bill Chouinard, Joe Morris, and Jay Peluso propelled the men's swim team to back- to-back victories last weekend. The wins over Southern Connecticut and Delaware improved the team's record to a perfect 4-0.

The win was also coach Russ Yarworth's 100th career victory.

The Minutemen opened Saturday's 172-73 dismantling of Southern Connecticut by taking the first three places in the 400-yard Medley Relay. The team of Sean Clark, Chouinard, Jim Gregg, and Tim Milbert combinined to set a Southern Connecticut pool record with a time of 3 minutes, 33.48 seconds. In the next event, the 1000-Freestyle, junior Scott Reed set the UMass varsity record with a time of 9:30.65, eclipsing the previous record of 9:35.91 set by Craig Fuller in 1985.

"Scott Reed's time of 9:30.65 in the 1000 was a major league swim," lauded head coach Russ Yarworth, "I think that swim helped him restore his self confidence."

From there, the Minutemen continued to dominate Southern Connecticut, winning four of six places in the 200 Freestyle, 200 Breaststroke, and the 400 Freestyle Relay, and four of seven places in the 50 Freestyle, 200 Intermediate, 200 Butterfly, 100 Freestyle, and 500 Freestyle.

Swimmers who won a first and a second place in their respective events were Joe Morris (200, 500 Freestyle) and Jay Peluso (200 Intermediate, 100 Freestyle). Senior Bill Chouinard left his mark in Connecticut by setting the pool record in the 200 Breaststroke with a time of 2:08.97.

Sunday's home meet against Delaware proved to be not much more of a challenge, as UMass won handily, 148-93, taking the first three places in the 1000 Freestyle, 200 Intermediate, 200 Butterfly and the 500 Freestyle. Especially good performances were turned in by Chris Barrett, (first in 200 and 500 Freestyle), Peluso, (First in 200 Intermediate and second in 200 Breastroke), and Morris, who set the UMASS pool record in the 1000 Freestyle with time of 9:45.47.

Yarworth said he could not be more pleased with his team's performance thus far.

"I'm really happy, we've done more than I could have hoped for, 25 of 28 swimmers had their best times [this weekend] and you can't ask any more than that. The freshmen have done a super job and their performances have motivated the upperclassmen."

In light of the team's recent success, Yarworth said his team must be on gaurd against a letdown.

"We're going to start working hard again, because we can't afford to get lackadaisical," Yarworth said. "We have to maintain our training through finals and Christmas. We want to be a better team on Jan. 10 and an even better team by Feb. 15.

Yeltsin wins approval for commonwealth

WATCHING HIS CREATION DISINTEGRATE — A statue of Lenin still towers over government buildings in downtown Minsk.

By BRIAN FRIEDMAN
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin won landslide approval Thursday in the Russian legislature for his new commonwealth, while Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev edged closer to resigning, saying "The main work of my life is done."

Acceptance continued to build for Yeltsin's plan to restructure the shattered Soviet Union into a commonwealth, which the Russian president forged last weekend with the leaders of the other Slavic republics of Ukraine and Byelorussia.

With much of the bitter winter still ahead, there are shortages of food, heating fuel and basic consumer goods.

The fuel shortage forced more than half of all Soviet airports to close Thursday and led to the cancellation of most domestic flights of the state Aeroflot airline, Tass reported.

U.S. officials on Thursday announced a new aid effort. The White House said President Bush would hold an international conference early next month to coordinate humanitarian assistance for the Soviet Union.

Yeltsin said he had the support of the Soviet military leadership, and he was working to garner the backing of more republics.

Moldavian President Mircha Snegur said after meeting with the Russian president that his republic had a "positive attitude" toward the new formation. The leaders of Kazakhstan and the predominantly Muslim republics of Kirgizia, Tadzhikistan, Uzbekistan and Turkmenistan met in Ashkhabad, the Turkmen capital, to discuss the commonwealth, and they were to announce their decision on joining it.

In an address to the Russian legislature before it gave its approval, Yeltsin sought to portray his Commonwealth of Independent States as not just a Slavic organization but open to all Soviet republics. "We have equal respect for people of different nationalities," he said.

Yeltsin said the commonwealth represented perhaps "the last chance" for preserving order and cooperation.

"Obstructing it now . . . will inevitably doom people to new suffering, not only plunging our state into chaos but creating a real threat for mankind," he warned.

Yeltsin said the need for a commonwealth had became apparent since the failed August coup. Eight of the Soviet republics refused to join Gorbachev's proposed loose confed-

UM career specialist offers tips

Says competition will increase when recession ends

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

Don't wait out the recession to get your career in gear, according to a University of Massachusetts career specialist and author of several books on career strategies.

Neil Yeager, author of The Career Doctor: Preventing, Diagnosing, and Curing 50 Ailments That Can Threaten Your Career, warns "once the recession ends, the competition will be fierce. Everyone has been in the same boat you've been in. You want to put yourself ahead of the pack."

Yeager, whose career seminars are offered through the University's Division of Continuing Education, says that preparation includes acquiring more marketable skills and honing the skills you already have.

"Marketable skills vary from person to person," he says. "You need more than just a title with which to label yourself — you have to know what your specific skills are before you even approach an employer."

Yeager also stresses the importance of keeping contacts and building a network.

"In the highly competitive environment of the job world, a network is crucial for hearing about and taking advantage of better opportunities," he says.

He says it is possible to begin building a network before actually being out in the job world.

"People need to realize there is a whole informal network out there which begins in internships, volunteering and part-time work," he says. "Get to know your employers."

Yeager listed some important things for graduating students to keep in mind while preparing for their job search:

• A tight resume — "Many applicants are going to have

Prison inmate teaches peers

By WILLIAM S. DZUGAN
Special to the Collegian

Editor's note: The articles in this two-part series were written by inmates of the North Central Correctional Institute at Gardner and the Massachusetts Correctional Institute at Shirley. It was written last summer as part of a journalism class offered through the Prison Education Project, which is run by the University of Massachusetts Division of Continuing Education.

The authors are all matriculated UMass students working toward a bachelor's degree. In some cases the names of the people they interviewed have been changed.

When Al Therrien's students leave his school he hopes never to see them again. He and his students have something in common: they are prison inmates.

Therrien, who has been serving a life sentence since 1967, has seen many men leave and come back to the North Central Correctional Institution in Gardner. He hopes the reading and writing skills he teaches will help his students break the cycle of crime and incarceration ex-convicts typically follow.

Like any good educator, he is concerned with building self esteem. In his work, this often involves helping fellow prisoners go from third grade word skills to a fifth grade proficiency level in just 20 weeks. "One student went up

Trustees seek University pres.

Five state campuses to be governed as one

Trustees of the University of Massachusetts initiated yesterday a national search for a permanent president of the new University system.

Appointed by Trustee Chairman Gordon N. Oakes, Jr., the search committee will receive feedback on the possible candidate from students, faculty and alumnae.

"We are setting the standards for our search and the new president very high," said Trustee Daniel A. Taylor of Boston, the head of the search committee.

"The University is a system now serving over 53,000 students who are the lifeblood of our state's future. We must find a dynamic and innovative leader who will build on our strengths to assure that future," Taylor said.

The Massachusetts Legislature recently united five state campuses in Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth, Lowell and Worcester into one single system.

Governed by a single Board of Trustees and President, each member of this integrated system will have increased independence and fiscal autonomy.

Taylor said the search committee will report to the Trustees on its progress in Feb. 1992 and periodically thereafter.

Since July 1991, the University has been headed by President E.K. Fretwell, who was appointed on an interim basis after former President Joseph Duffey left to become President of American University in Washington, D.C.

LAUGHING MATTER — President Bush shares a laugh with comedian Jay Leno during a visit to the Oval Office of the White House yesterday.

Bush declines debate with Buchanan, others

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush will not debate conservative commentator Patrick Buchanan "nor any other primary candidate," presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said today.

Buchanan announced his challenge to Bush earlier this week and indicated he would make a major effort in the first-in-the-nation Feb. 18 New Hampshire primary.

Fitzwater said today that the president planned to have an active campaign in New Hampshire, an effort being overseen by New Hampshire Gov. Judd Gregg.

"We're carrying out the plan that's been in the works for some time" in New Hampshire, Fitzwater said.

But asked if the president would be willing to debate Buchanan, Fitzwater said: "We do not plan to debate Pat Buchanan nor any other primary candidate."

"President Bush is the incumbent president and we believe that he will be re-elected overwhelmingly," Fitzwater said.

Former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke is also seeking the GOP nomination.

Escapee gets nabbed for $1.15

NEW YORK (AP) — A Tennessee prison escapee who eluded authorities for 11 years was caught trying to beat a $1.15 subway fare, an official said.

Billy Forrest, who escaped from Tennessee State Prison in July 1980, was arrested Monday after he hopped a fare turnstile, said Al O'Leary, a spokesman for the New York Transit Authority.

Forrest was serving a 45-year sentence for armed robbery when he escaped.

He awaits extradition to Tennessee, where he could face an additional five years for escaping, O'Leary said.

New York police run a background check on every apprehended fare-beater. Statistics show that one of eight has an outstanding arrest warrant.

UM prof. says library in "crisis"

Tells FacSen money, rebuilding needed in future

By AMY PRENDERGAST
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Tower Library is currently facing a financial crisis, according to a University English professor speaking before the Faculty Senate.

David Paroissien, who is Chair of the ad hoc Future of Library Committee, said due to lack of funds, many books that were needed were not ordered this semester.

"The crisis the library is facing is pathetic and obvious. In Massachusetts, less money is spent on state school libraries per student than in any other state in the country," Paroissien said.

Paroissien said compared to the over 100 other academic libraries in the country, the University's library has dropped from ranking 49th in 1987 to 72nd in 1990. Paroissien estimated the 1991 ranking to be 80th, or even worse.

The ad hoc Future of Library Committee has been asked to investigate the library's financial crisis. Paroissien said the Committee hopes for the rebuilding of the library in the future, to "achieve parity with our peers in the Northeast."

In other Faculty Senate matters, Chancellor Richard O'Brien said he had "good reason to believe" higher education will be spared from substantial budget cuts next year.

O'Brien also said he was "dismayed" the Higher Education Coordinating Council reduced teaching assistant stipends from $1,000 to zero, after it reviewed the University's budget for next year.

O'Brien said he hoped the amount would be restored. "Graduate work is a special characteristic of this campus. The stipends are extremely crucial to us," he said.

The Council is voting on the stipend issue Tuesday. O'Brien said he will attend the meeting, along with members of the Graduate Employee Organization, to support the restoration of the stipend.

O'Brien said the Higher Education Council has also developed a series of regulations regarding the allocation of tuition waivers. He said the University has a series of special purpose waivers that have "been built into our system."

These include waivers for athletes, international students, out-of-state students and students in the arts departments. O'Brien said these waivers may be eliminated if the HEC passes the regulations, which would cause $2.3 million to "disappear."

Two members of the Faculty Senate called on the administration to investigate the game scheduling of both the soccer and basketball teams, which they claimed left no time for the players to study. Provost Glen Gordon said he would contact the Dean of Physical Education to discuss the matter.

Parking tickets build revenue for financial aid

By CHRISTOPHER WELCH
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Parking Ticket Office collected nearly $600,000 in parking ticket fines last year, according to the office's manager.

"The parking regulations at UMass were not designed to make a lot of money — they just happen to do so," said Lynn Braddock, manager of the Parking Ticket Office. "However if this monetary figure were to decrease, some administrators in the Office of Finance would interpret that as bad."

According to Braddock, all of the funds collected by the Parking Ticket Office are contributed to a scholarship fund via the Financial Aid Office, except a small amount which goes toward administrative expenses. However, Braddock did not comment on the exact amount of these expenses.

This scholarship fund is known as the Ticket Fund Scholarship and it is awarded to students based on an assessment of need according to the Financial Aid Office.

This year ticket revenues only went down slightly, according to Braddock.

"This is partly due to the fact that students are not paying their tickets on time," said Braddock, "Therefore, even though there has been a decline in the number of students who attend UMass, our revenues have stayed steady due to late fines."

Although students frequently complain about the fairness of the University's regulations, especially in light of how they have to walk, Braddock says her job is to carry out the rules established by the administration.

"I have no personal opinion [about student complaints], only a professional one. Part of what I do is enforce the regulations set up by the administration as a writ and attempt to correct those that are unfair," Braddock said.

"The Parking Ticket Office only tries to encourage compliance with the rules and to lower the number of tickets and money collected," Braddock said. "Believe it or not, the public safety officers would rather not write you a ticket."

The campus of the University of Massachusetts was designed with the bulk of its parking areas on the perimeter to make the center of the campus a pedestrian area and to avoid the expense of multi-level parking garages which are less cost-effective, according to Braddock.

Braddock said she doesn't feel the University's parking lots pose any great safety risk to students.

"I don't think these lots are any less safe than the ones found in residential areas. Students should be responsible when they walk at night on campus," Braddock said. "They should make use of the bus or the escort service provided by the University."

Students who have a disability or have been injured may appeal the office for a special permit that allows them to park closer to their dorm.

However, before this permit is awarded, they must go to a special board of administrators who decide whether or not there is a genuine need based on doctors' recommendations, according to Braddock. There is also an extra $35 charge for this privilege.

Campus Center Travel Agency broken into

Compiled by DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

A bank deposit bag containing $4,000 in cash and checks was stolen Wednesday morning from the Travel Agency in the Campus Center, police said.

Travel Agency staff who arrived at work on Wednesday found the office in disarray with desks and files opened and materials scattered all over the floor.

Police said the matter is under investigation.

Greenough Residence Hall was evacuated at around 5:30 a.m. yesterday morning because of a small kitchen fire. No injuries were reported. A student smothered the flames with a blanket.

Two men were arrested yesterday in the Fine Arts Center and charged with breaking and entering with intent to commit a felony.

Archie J. Patenaude, 22, of Sunderland, and Michael P. Hunsicker, 22, of Greenfield, were arrested, police said.

CIA head offers views

WASHINGTON (AP) — CIA Director Robert M. Gates says he is not interested in getting in the spy-for-pay business.

In a luncheon interview Wednesday with reporters and editors of The Washington Post, Gates said it is true that foreign intelligence organizations have planted "moles" in U.S. companies.

But he said that would be a "potentially bottomless well for the intelligence community" if it tried to help individual U.S. businesses.

The CIA chief said the only areas in which U.S. intelligence can make "a unique contribution" are in uncovering foreign economic espionage and gathering information.

On other matters, Gates said he is ordering an increase in intelligence collection about nuclear, biological and chemical weapons proliferation.

He said the decline of communism will mean the virtual elimination of U.S. paramilitary operations and acknowledged that the breakup of the Soviet empire has pointed to a shortcoming in the "very much Moscow-centered U.S. intelligence community.

Now faced with 15 separate Soviet republics, the CIA finds it has a shortage of people who speak the numerous local languages, he said.

eration that would preserve some central authority.

The Russian lawmakers approved the commonwealth by a vote of 188-6, with seven abstentions, meaning that the legislatures of all three Slavic republics have now ratified the treaty.

To thunderous applause, Yeltsin strode to the lectern and said, "I congratulate you on this historic decision and thank you!"

In the Kremlin, Gorbachev met for two hours with Soviet journalists and gave an assessment of his political career that sounded almost like a farewell statement.

"If others were in my place, they would have already gone. But I have managed to push through the main ideas of perestroika," the 60-year-old president was quoted as telling Soviet media.

perfect resumes, and it's wrong to assume the paperwork is not important," he says. "It is the first place they weed out people."

• Sharpen your interviewing skills — "Do research about what the company is looking for, then confront those issues to make your case more persuasive," he recommends.

• Tap into every possible area — "Don't limit yourself to just large corporations," he adds. "Medium to small companies are harder to find, but can be very rewarding for experience."

He also listed some tips about key points employers in almost every field look for when interviewing a recent college graduate:

• Aggressiveness and enthusiasm, good communications skills, maturity;

• Critical thinking skills, good planning and organizational skills, capable of handling responsibility;

•How well they handle pressure and stress;

•And finally, a record of success at something during college (academics, sports, writing for a publication, etc.).

He adds that the most important thing for graduating students to do is be constantly active in their search, and not to get discouraged.

"You have to push the unemployment statistics out of your mind and focus on the available positions that are constantly opening up," he says. "After all, there are thousands of jobs out there and you only need one."

Yeager has written several other books on career development, including CareerMap: Deciding What You Want, Getting It and Keeping It, and Power Interviews: Job-Winning Tactics from Fortune 500 Recruiters. four grade levels," said Therrien.

"Men who have never been able to write are taught for the first time to write to their families," he said. Some go on to earn high school diplomas so they can take advantage of college courses offered in prison.

"Self esteem leads to a very enthusiastic person, which creates a desire to continue learning," Therrien said. He should know — when he came to prison, he had a 10th grade education. He has since earned a bachelor's degree in education through programs offered "behind the walls."

Three years ago, Therrien was trained to do basic reading and writing instruction with a new computer program called the Principles of Alphabet Literacy System (PALS).

This course involves 100 hours of instruction for each student. The IBM software takes students through a step-by-step learning process. "Each student works at his own pace," said Therrien.

There are reading, writing, drawing and game programs. "The students like the games more than they like the lessons. But in the process of playing the games, they are learning how to read," Therrien said. "Typing skills are gained through the constant use of the computers."

To be eligible for the course, one must have less than sixth grade reading and writing abilities. "The average student has third grade word skills," Therrien said.

One student, who asked not to be identified, spoke highly of Therrien's pedagogy.

"Al's technique of teaching is very helpful to the students who want to learn, for they feel more comfortable learning because of Al's special way of teaching," the student said.

This student, who is serving a six-to-ten year sentence, said that if he had been exposed to this sort of instruction earlier, he would never have ended up in prison.

"If I had a good education or a good trade when I was out there in the 'real' world, I wouldn't have gotten into all of this trouble," he said.

Of the 40 men who have completed the PALS program, approximately half have gone on to earn high school equivalency diplomas and some are now enrolled in college courses. "I feel some level of education should be made mandatory prior to any release from prison," said Therrien.

Recidivism among Massachusetts prisoners has been shown to be more than 50 percent, meaning that half of all inmates released are likely to return to prison, according to sources.

One way of insuring ex-convicts don't become repeat offenders is through providing inmates with basic education, according to Peter J. Chalapatas, director of treatment at the Correctional Institution at Gardner.

"It's obvious that people who do some sort of education are less likely to come back to prison," Chalapatas said.

Good luck on those finals

On behalf of the Graphics, Business and News departments of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, we would like to extend our best wishes for a successful week of final exams, a relaxing winter break and a happy 1992.

It's easy to get caught up in the rush of stress-filled finals, an economy still caught in a recession and a sense of uncertainty about the future of our world. These things have been with us in Amherst since Mass Aggie first opened its doors way back in 1863; then, it was uncertainty over the future of the nation, the grim reality of Civil War and still, final exams.

Although the circumstances might not change, the respite of a winter break and the cheer of the holiday season have always been there, too. They're something for us to hold on to in a world full of doubt, danger and uncertainty.

The winter break has done great things for the Collegian, as well. Namely, it gives us a month off from the hectic existence of a daily newspaper, from deadlines and AP style and spelling.

Until next time, good luck on those finals.

Criticism needs to be backed up

I am writing in response to an article by Hussein Ibish called "To the sleepwalkers in a nightmare world [Collegian, December 9]."

I find your political views very disturbing, Hussein. I consider some of your views so ludicrous, I don't know whether to laugh or cry. No, Mr. Ibish, the United States is not planning to attack Cuba, and the West is not "raping" Palestine — your own dictators are doing that. Europe is on the brink of a disastrous war? What war?! Haven't you heard anything about European Community, about the Common Market? This is 1991, and the whole civilized world is coming together while you talk of some imaginary war. Get the facts straight, Hussein.

I am most indignant, however, with your comments concerning the new Slavic commonwealth and its leaders. Your comments demonstrate a total lack of knowledge of the political and social processes that have been going on in the Soviet Union during the last six years. How dare you call Boris Yeltsin a fascist reactionary!

He is our first democratically-elected president in over 70 years who stands for everything progressive: human rights, national autonomy, market economy, democracy. But to you these terms don't mean very much. Yeltsin stood up and faced the coup, while your hero Nazarbayev cowardly hid in his office and didn't let out a squeak of protest. The 70-year Communist regime has come to an end, and the three Slavic republics are uniting because of our common historical, cultural and linguistic ties, and chauvinism has nothing to do with it.

As for the Asian republics, they can go their own way now: nobody is forcing them anymore. They were colonized for decades by the Soviet Union and now they are free to leave, thanks primarily to the reforms of Gorbachev and Yeltsin. So before you make such critical and derogatory statements and accusations, Hussein, be prepared to back them up.

Random thoughts from brink of hell

The empire is collapsing upon itself, plunging toward an uncertain future. The mind is numbed with useless fillers, decoys which mask the real problems. The media descends upon these events like buzzards, picking the decomposing flesh off of the bones of society.

And now we have the Kennedy Smith rape trial. Total CNN coverage. Words like "erection," "penis," and "vagina." Dan Rather could barely contain the smile on his face when he warned viewers that the following segment contained graphic language. Scandal, sex, wealth, power, raw human emotion and lies. A media dream. Now they descend on West Palm Beach with a slew of bonehead legal analysts explaining the implications of this and that to the hungry public, all in a carnival-like atmosphere. All marking the end of a bootlegger's dream.

Watching the Clarence Thomas inquisition turned my stomach. Tales of late night porno sessions and comparisons to "Long Dong Silver" reeked of a tabloid writer's pipe dream. A consortium of fat swine overseeing the madness, all more than happy at the prospect of national television coverage — that is all except Kennedy, who probably would have preferred to remain anonymous. And then there was the confirmation vote, computer graphics and all. We sat in our house, beers in hand, and cheered as the race began. And when it was all over, a legacy came to pass. A legacy that will be with us for quite a while.

December 6 marked the 23rd anniversary of the destruction that was the Rolling Stones' free concert at the Altamont Speedway in peaceful San Francisco. No event so marked the end of the hippy era than this exercise in bad planning . . . the Rolling Stones' thank you for their hugely successful 1969 American Tour. As black-clad demons beat a man to death, the band played on with a fury. So much for peace and love. Welcome to the darker side of human nature.

Sometimes "safe" isn't enough

Anyone who is having sex, read this!

Like some of you, I was sexually active in high school. I was by no means promiscuous. I had slept with only two women by the time I graduated. I was careful. Even though I lived in a small town, I wasn't risking anything.

I didn't really think much about getting diseases. I could trace both partners quickly and easily to the beginnings of their sexual history. Even so, I know now that sometimes "safe" isn't safe enough.

For those of you who have turned the page because you don't feel like reading another article about "safe sex," I guess I can't blame you. Three weeks ago, I would have done the same thing. I have changed!

I'd like to make more of a statement about "smart sex" than "safe sex." I'm just begging you all to think first. Make sure you are taking all the precautions you can. Force yourselves not to get caught up in the heat of passion. Just be smart!

I thank the Lord my mistake wasn't fatal. I luckily did not contract any of the diseases out there which are so dangerous. I did make a mistake, however.

I am 18 years old. I'm a freshman and I was having the time of my life. I love being a kid. In January, I am going to be a father! Believe me — I'm not ready to stop being a kid.

Abortion is not birth control

People who know my political views ask me if there is a contradiction between advocating the death penalty, and being totally against abortion.

There is no contradiction in my mind, although both are the taking of a human life.

When individuals cannot live within the parameters of society, and do not follow the laws that we pass, they must be punished. The most violent criminals of our society unfortunately must be put to sleep like the mad dogs they are.

Michael Morrissey

Contrast the horrible image of Charles Manson with that of a newborn baby, pure and unadulterated. The tiny baby has not even been given a chance to live, and yet some would allow for its murder. Criminals, on the other hand, have been given a chance in our society and have proven that they cannot cope with the simplest of our laws.

Abortion is not birth control, it is child eradication. Every other form of birth control is used before the fact. Abortion is used after the fact. People have a chance to use other forms of birth control, yet they instead they are ignorant and do not.

Please do not try to use the poor defense on me. I am unmoved. Most forms of birth control are extremely cheap, and some are given away free. Abortions are almost impossible to obtain with current U.S. policy, so the easy choice is birth control.

If a fetus is allowed to come to full term a living human being is formed. When the process is stopped that being does not live. Someone else makes a decision on whether another human should live or not live. Sounds like murder to me.

Every day as medical science progresses, it is able to develop fetuses outside of the mother at earlier and earlier stages of the pregnancy. Doctors have even been able to develop the human embryo in test tubes without a mother at all. Simply, life begins at conception. When that life is stopped it is murder.

It is a murder of a defenseless and innocent living being. It is murder by a painful poison. The pain in which the fetus goes through during an abortion is well-documented. It is called the "silent scream." A silent scream of death from one of God's innocent creatures. It is a horrifying shame.

Abortion is a murder which comes from parent's inability to face up to the responsibility of their actions. Thousands of loving parents wait anxiously for the opportunity to adopt a child. At the same time millions of humans are slaughtered.

It is murder. However, humans have always had the opportunity to end another's life. Murder is commonplace in our world today. If you don't like another person or don't feel like dealing with them, then kill them. Hopefully you won't get caught.

Abortion is the same way. It comes down to the parents not being to selfish to carry the child to term. Nine months is a long time. It is a hassle. You might even have to explain why you are pregnant. Fine, just off the kid. No one cares anyway.

Why should I be responsible for my creation. I don't have time to deal with this. It all comes down to how selfish you are. Are nine months of my life so important and precious that I have the right to end another human's life?

For millions of Americans it seems that way.

Residents take issue with RAs

We, the undersigned, as residents of [building withheld], would like to relay a message to the RAs of our respective buildings. First and foremost, we feel it is necessary to identify the individuals for whom this message is intended. To these three RAs we say, contrary to public belief, YOU ARE NOT GODS! You come prancing through our building, galloping on your high horses, reprimanding those individuals you feel to be out of line or undermining Housing policy.

Indeed, it is important to have some authority figure present in a dorm situation so as to insure all residents are treated fairly and with respect. But when the RAs themselves are setting a bad example, it is most difficult to restrain the individual resident from possibly doing the same.

Approximately two weeks ago, a wheelchair race was held outside by some of our fellow handicapped students. After the race was done and residents were re-entering the building, a few students observed two of the previously stated RAs combing the hallways. At least five of the returning students heard one say to her cohort, "I'm damned pissed tonight and nobody had better [expletive] with me!" and "I'm in the mood to write up a few of these assholes!" I, being one of the students who witnessed this "display of authority," was totally appalled by what I heard.

Ironically, at least nine students were written up that night and many more were intimidated by the RAs for such heinous behavior as bouncing a ball of a wall and having music "just a bit too loud."

Another prime example stems from an incident when one of our fellow residents was attempting to sign out a key for another who had been locked out of a room while returning from a shower, cloaked only in a towel. The resident, after being bluntly rejected the key, was told to "[expletive] off" by the "stressed" RA. "Stress" is in quotes because that was the reasoning used to defend her repulsive behavior.

In the end, I hope that people will not take this as a bashing of RAs, because as stated, they are important, and for the most part, are sincere and understanding individuals. But, as history exemplifies, it is always the cancerous few who rot the whole.

Final 'Trek chapter an entertaining end

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

If Star Trek VI: The Undiscovered Country is to be the crew's final voyage (let's wait for the box-office receipts to come in) then let it be said it was a satisfying climax to twenty-five years of "Star Trek". Although it doesn't reach the level of The Wrath of Khan, the humor of The Voyage Home or the banality of The Final Frontier, The Undiscovered Country has an intriguing mystery and the "Trek" crew are in top form.

Three months away from retirement, the crew, volunteered by Spock, must escort a Klingon vessel containing the High Chancellor to a peace initiative on Earth. Kirk and the crew are obviously wary of any contact with the Klingons. After an uneasy dinner, the Klingons return to their ship. Suddenly, something or someone fires at the Klingon, apparently the Enterprise. The Klingons cry betrayal on the eve of peace, and the crew find themselves nearing a full scale war.

The Box Office

The film has enough easy humor and clever in-jokes to satisfy any "Trek" fan. The plot mirrors both the crumbling Soviet empire and Middle East peace negotiations. But The Undiscovered Country doesn't have the scope of a big screen adventure, rather it resembles a fairly good episode of the television show.

The cast has all returned and Part VI clearly shows William Shatner's limitations as an actor . . . but who cares? The other crew members have their moments, emerging as more than reminders. Kim Catrall (Mannequin) comes aboard as a Vulcan officer, Mark Lenard returns as Sarek, and Christopher Plummer portrays an underhanded Klingon chief of staff eager to tangle with Kirk.

The good thing here is that William Shatner is not directing. Nicholas Meyer, who helmed Parts II and IV, takes over and pushes his restricted budget to the limit. However, the small budget really shows in the special effects, which are sparse and unimpressive.

Star Trek VI is an entertaining final entry in the series. It also helps that the actors don't take themselves seriously. It's a winner for "Trek" fans and for non-fans alike.

Soothing reggae for stress relief from the Equalites

By LOU COVE
Collegian Staff

Ah, yes, it's the weekend before finals and you're bumming. Look out across this big pitiful campus and you'll see the bitter pall of despair on the rapidly aging faces of your fellow students. Even the professors are dragging their sorry, saggin' butts around like they just realized Yeats is dead or something. What've you got? Microbiology? Espanol? You think you're going to keep your nose in a book all weekend? Forget it — The Equalites are playing The Book Mill.

Yes, that's right, The Equalites, those local reggae mainstays, will be breezing into Montague for a Saturday night of solid roots-rock, and you are invited to go and dance your own sorry butt off. The floor will be cleared and the band should be jamming — all eight of them — for a good long time.

If you're a reggae fan you may have caught them opening up for Andrew Tosh, The Wailers or The Mighty Diamonds in the past, but Saturday night they headline. If you aren't and haven't, then you may have heard the title track off their Choice of Worlds CD which has been getting some decent airplay of late.

But you don't have to know them to get down with them, because The Equalites play no-nonsense, straight-ahead reggae with few deviations from the heavy roots sound. They are melodic, infectious and tight — guaranteed to satisfy even the most die-hard reggae aficionado.

Together since 1988 and led by singer/guitarist and primary songwriter David Boatwright (who played with Loose Caboose for ten years) the band set out to record their debut album last year and came up with the likeable Choice of Worlds, which lays out a firm reggae ground and then peppers it with crunching guitar here and a slight pop inflection sound there.

The Equalites beefed up the production of the album by bringing Michael Gregory aboard to produce and arrange keyboards, and they seem to have done a fine job of coordinating their large group, who are: Boatwright, William "Boo" DeForest Pearson playing percussion, Kim Zombik on vocals, David Patrick Noonan on drums, Adam Bauer on bass, Edward Redonnet on rhythm guitar and a dual keyboard attack squad manned by Doug Rogers and Joe Llamas. They'll all be there to rock your world on Saturday.

So, do you really need any prodding from me? No, of course you don't. I'm just a lowly Collegian staffer with nothing better to do than try to convince you to blow off your work. But you know what you want. Go do that reggae thing, leave your exam hell behind. Cast off your burden — the bitter shackles of academic burden — and let the Equalites soothe your soul with some righteous rhythms. Rise up from under the heel of UMass oppression. Free yourselves!

Or, maybe you'd rather do calculus?

The Equalites will perform at The Montague Book Mill on Saturday, Dec. 14. For more info, like, "how the heck do I get to the Montague Book Mill anyway?" and showtime etc., call 367-9206.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (April 20-May 20): Do not fan the flames of discord by losing your temper. A sense of humor is essential now. Encourage your loved ones to develop better spending habits. Romance dominates your evenings.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Diplomacy is your strongest ally at work. Avoid stress by approaching your associates in a positive manner. An old friend is cheering you on. A Christmas card brings a special message.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A great time to present a pet project to higher-ups. An assertive attitude works in your favor. Learn to delegate more responsibility to young people. Relax with a good book or video tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An interview or audition should go well. Stick to what you know when conducting business. A new alliance could bring greater wealth and personal satisfaction.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): It is not too late to make affordable gifts for your friends and family. Check cookbooks and magazines for ideas. Host a small dinner or trim-a-tree party this coming week.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Beneficial transitions await. A financial windfall will open new doors. Get busy and spruce up your house for the holidays.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Brilliant mental work is needed today. Keep an eye out for innovative new methods and products. Spending more time with small fry will avert disciplinary problems. Be gentle but firm.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your charisma and vitality are at a peak today. Career obstacles are in your past. Avoid trying to force issues. Wheeling and dealing behind the scenes would be a mistake.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): With emotions running at high tide, an important relationship could capsize. To stay afloat, take some of the wind out of your sails. Stop brooding over old wounds and look to the future.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stress good public relations. Changes are indicated in a business set-up. Play your cards close to your chest. Social plans grab the limelight tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You mate offers some excellent monetary advice; following it will increase your financial security. Protect your hard-earned funds. Postpone a major business trip.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make good use of your ability to instill self-confidence in others. Encourage young people to develop their talents. A missing file will be found. Return phone calls promptly.

Karate Club getting their kicks at UMass

By DAVID SCOTT
Collegian Staff

While Ralph Macchio may have popularized the sport of karate with his "wax on, wax off" technique, members of the University of Massachusetts Karate Club paint a somewhat different picture of what is necessary to compete in the grueling sport.

"The workouts are very, very hard," said club vice president, sophomore Ali Tehrani. "The Karate Kid wouldn't have gotten that good, that fast."

The club originally began as a gym class 11 years ago and now has evolved into a dedicated group of almost 30 students who represent UMass in various competitions throughout the year.

For the members of the club, karate goes far beyond just being a sport and in some ways becomes a way of life.

"Once you get started, it's very hard to stop," said Tehrani, who is from Iran, but discovered karate in Greece. "You have to go on."

"Many people think karate is just fighting," said club president, senior Kevin McKinney of New Haven, Ct. "It's much more than that. It involves fitness and discipline."

Much of the discipline of which McKinney discussed must begin with a respect and appreciation of the club's sensei, literally translated as teacher or master. Kazumi Tabata, a sensei based in Boston, is the UMass club's mentor.

Tabata is a third-generation sensei in the Shotokan style of karate, meaning he is a direct descendant of the founder of this style of combat and is very highly ranked.

"Inside [class] everyone respects everyone else according to belt," McKinney said. "You have to listen without saying anything."

While Tabata makes appearances only once or twice a semester, the club's instructor, Mike Brown is a first degree black belt. Belt rankings begin with white and proceed upward through numerous stages until black belt, the highest level which has various degrees.

"In order to change belt rankings you should practice for at least three months," Tehrani said.

The club charges a $60 membership fee which includes tournament and promotion (belt test) fees.

While many of the club members are men, senior Linda Kantorski from Southbridge said that the sport doesn't necessarily have to be divided between the sexes.

"I don't think it matters who you fight," Kantorski said. "As long as their on your level."

Tehrani said that there is a common misconception that the sport is for men only, but said Kantorski is the perfect example to prove otherwise.

"I wish more women would get involved," Kantorski said.

Most of the work in karate focuses on learning the kata, a prearranged set of movements which include basic blocks. These movements are essential for mastering the sport, according to McKinney.

"Anyone can get the physical part," McKinney said. "It's the mental part that is difficult. You have to focus your mind on the kata, 90 percent of it is mental."

In addition to mastering the fundamental movements, McKinney discussed the physical requirements necessary for the sport.

"You need to have good flexibility and good breathing technique," McKinney said. "Breathing is very important — if you don't believe your tired you won't be. It's a mental thing."

While karate has been given a somewhat violent reputation through action movies, McKinney said that violence is far from the goal of the UMass club.

"Many people think that karate is just fighting, but it's much more than that," McKinney said. "Our goal isn't to promote fighting. The first priority [when met with a confrontation] is to run."

Tips for UNLV:
1. You got to know when to hold 'em know when to fold 'em know when to walk away know when to run
you never count your money, when your sittin at the table they'll be time enough to count 'am when the dealing's done
2. Don't play pool
3. Call me a lot

Minutemen outclass Crusaders, 85-73

By TAMIR LIPTON

WORCESTER, Mass. — The University of Massachusetts basketball team got 21 acrobatic, roof-raising points from Will Herndon and defeated Holy Cross 85-73 in front of a split crowd at the Hart Center.

Herndon, who scored just 1 point against New Hampshire scored inside and outside, early and late, connecting on 10 of 11 shots, including some typically loud Herndon dunks.

"Will did things that they couldn't stop," said UMass coach John Calipari. "It was a good road win for us."

Leading 69-58, Herndon followed up a missed shot with a tip in which not only put the Minutemen ahead 71-58, but broke a Holy Cross four point run.

The Crusaders pulled within 10 late in the game, but Jim McCoy (19 points) made three of four foul shots to end any illusions of a miraculous comeback.

Every time Holy Cross was ready to cut into UMass' double digit lead. the Minutemen had the answer. If it wasn't Herndon scoring down low, it was McCoy hitting a jumper, Mike Williams penetrating for a layup, or the Minutemen making foul shots.

Against New Hampshire, UMass made just 30 of 52 free throws, but last night, they managed to hit 20 of 27, 74 percent.

Early on, UMass came out like a team on a mission to make the Top 25. They scored the first six points of the game on an Anton Brown pull-up jumper, a Herndon alley-oop on a half court pass from Brown and a Tony Barbee layup off a steal.

The Crusaders came right back and tied the score at 8-8, on two jumpers by Roger Breslin (nine points).

From there, the Minutemen went on a 9-0 run, keyed by three McCoy patented off balance, in coverage jumpers to go up 17-8.

University of Massachusetts' forward Harper Williams drives to the hoop over University of New Hampshire's James Ben. Williams and the Minutemen squared off against Holy Cross last night.

With 6:19 left in the half, UMass ran off 11 straight points, to open up a 39-25 lead, which Holy Cross never recovered from.

The Minutemen should have been ahead by more at the half, but Holy Cross managed to sink four trifectas and Bill Walker (14 points) hit three jumpers in the final 3:45 to cut the 14 point lead to 9, 43-34.

Crusader forward Rick Mashburn did his best to keep Holy Cross close in the second half, scoring 16 of his game-high 24 points in the second half. However, this game was a case of the Minutemen outclassing their opponent.

The Crusaders (1-4) did not have the talent to stay with UMass' inside players. Harper Williams (14 points, 12 rebounds) scored nine of UMass' first 11 points to start the second half. When he got in foul trouble, Herndon (13 second half points) and Kennard Robinson (four points two rebounds) picked up the slack.

For the game, the Minutemen shot 54 percent and held the Crusaders to 38 percent.

If it seemed like there were a lot of UMass fans in attendance, there were. Half the fans at the Hart Center were UMass supporters.

Women's hoop plays at Harvard tomorrow

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY

While most students will be concentrating on finals this weekend, the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team will be hoping for an early Christmas present: a .500 record.

UMass (3-4) plays at Harvard (Saturday 6 p.m.) against a tough Crimson team. UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said she thinks Harvard will pose a tough challenge.

"They've got two kids who are great outside shooters that are shooting over 40 percent from the perimeter, and they have a 6-3 center that's real agile," O'Brien said.

The behemoth center that O'Brien spoke of is Debbie Flandermeyer, a junior from Orinda, CA. Flandermeyer is averaging 16.7 points a game for the Crimson, which is only good for second on the team.

The top scorer for Harvard (2-5) is Erin Mahar, a 5-8 junior from Davenport, IA who is averaging 18.8 ppg. Mahar is shooting 21-43 from 3-point range and is a perfect 16-16 from the line this year.

The other top outside shooter for the Crimson is Maura Healey, a 5'6" senior from Hampton Falls, NH. Healey is shooting .520 from 3-point land and is one of Harvard's co-captains.

The Minutewomen have some scorers themselves, but they probably should avoid provoking a high-scoring affair. Junior forward Jenny Moran leads UMass in scoring (12.3 ppg) and is second in rebounding (7.4), thanks to monster back-to-back games against Hartford and Brooklyn. Moran is slowly emerging as the team's best all-around player.

Junior center Kim Kristofik is second in scoring with an average of 10.9 points per game, and leads the team with 8.6 boards per game.

As always, though, a key factor in the game will be whether Trish Riley can run the team. Riley banged her head on the hard floor Tuesday and is questionable.

"She suffered a slight concussion, but the problem is more with her back than her head," O'Brien said. "She's day-by-day, so we'll see."

The Minutewomen want to end the year on a high note, and O'Brien said her team will have an extra incentive.

"I think that the kids are excited about the possibility of being 4-4 going into break," she said. "The break will be good for them to relax, and it will give us time to go over new things."

Herndon comes up big, soars to 21 point night

By BRETT MORRIS

Worcester, Mass. — Will Herndon controlled the opening tipoff and slammed home the University of Massachusetts basketball team's final points last night.

And in between, he did everything else.

The 6-foot-3 forward poured in a team-high 21 points on 10 of 11 shooting and pulled down eight rebounds in the Minutemen's 85-73 win at Holy Cross.

"The difference in this game was Will," said UMass coach John Calipari. "Will made the athletic plays and they couldn't contend with him."

Herndon, who came into the game averaging eight points, outmuscled and outhustled the larger opponent as eight of his points were a result of him grabbing offensive rebounds and putting it back up.

"My job is not to score," said Herndon, who also had a team-high four assists. "I just concentrate on playing hard minutes to help us win."

UMass forward Jim McCoy said, "We need Will to grab the loose ball, tip the balls and exert himself on the boards, both offensive and defensive. And he did it all tonight."

The senior from Pittsburgh, PA, who leads the Minutemen in shooting at 64 percent from the field, entered the game following a dismal outing against New Hampshire on Tuesday in which he scored a season low 1 point, zero assists and two rebounds in limited action.

"He knew he had to come and play tonight," Calipari said.

Herndon, who won an appeal from the National Letter of Intent Committee for a final year of eligibility this season, also played one of his best games on defense as he registered two blocked shots and held 6-foot-5 Crusader forward Leon Dickerson, who was averaging 9.2 points per game, to five points.

He also displayed his high-flying game UMass fans are accustomed to watching as he ignited a partisan UMass crowd and his team with four explosive slams, including an alley-oop from Anton Brown just one minute into the contest.

"We call him our big play guy," McCoy said.

Herndon said, "My job is to make the big plays and to get us back into the flow."

UMass center Harper Williams, who led the team with 12 rebounds and totaled 14 points against 7-foot-1 Scott Martzloff, credited his performance to Herndon.

"It makes it easier for me down low when we both can block out and score," he said.

Herndon also had luck on his side as he threw up the prayer shot of the night, a 15-foot jumper which slammed off the glass and fell in.

Athletic directors deny Atlantic 10 rumors

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

A number of athletic directors in the Atlantic 10 Athletic Conference denied there was ever a "secret vote" concerning the admission of LaSalle University to the A-10, as reported in the Collegian yesterday.

Most of the athletic directors interviewed also denied the rumor that Duquesne gave the A-10 an ultimatum that if the league refuses LaSalle's entry to the league by Dec. 31, Duquesne would enter the Midwestern Collegiate Conference. LaSalle reportedly will leave the Metro-Atlantic Conference and also join the MCC.

Charles Cheokas, athletic director of Temple University and acting president of the A-10, said no vote was taken regarding LaSalle's entry this fall. Cheokas also downplayed LaSalle's proposal to enter the A-10 last spring, calling it preliminary.

"There is no truth to the rumor that we voted against expansion," he said. "The conference has always been in a mode to expand, and we have active committees concerning expansion."

"There was a vote taken that was unanimously passed, that the conference, prior to July 1, 1992, would actively pursue expansion," Cheokas added.

McKinley Boston, athletic director for the University of Rhode Island, would not comment on whether a "secret vote" took place, and said he did not know if Duquesne issued an ultimatum.

"I am not in a position to comment," Boston said. "I know there is a tremendous amount of support for Duquesne."

Larry Wiese, athletic director for Saint Bonaventure, said "I don't know if there's any truth to the [Duquesne] story. I know that LaSalle is among the top candidates to enter our league."

Cheokas added that LaSalle's entry to the league may create problems. "When you expand, your first priority is to expand to new markets. LaSalle is in the same market as St. Joe's and Temple. My guess is that the conference would not act on any new school by the end of the year."

Weld budget plan holds no UM cuts

Requested 11 percent increase denied

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

Gov. Weld proposed last week that schools in the Commonwealth's public higher education system receive the same amount of funding as last year as well as keep all their tuition revenue.

Weld's proposed level funding plan for fiscal year 1993 is almost exactly the same as last year's $484.4 million earmarked for the state's 29 public colleges and universities.

Although this will be the first time in four years that higher education has not been cut, the new University of Massachusetts five college system was denied a requested 11 percent increase in funding for fiscal year 1993. The Amherst campus was merged with the University of Lowell, Southeastern Massachusetts University, UMass at Boston and Worcester to create a five college system last year.

In a report written by representatives from the five college system, the financially-troubled University of Massachusetts at Amherst recommended that the state increase its allocation by 9 percent to about $256 million.

The report said all five colleges in the University system need more funds or else they suffer even further damage to the schools' reputations.

"It would appear that the first critical goal, level funding, has been achieved," said Paul Marks, chancellor of the state Higher Education Coordinating Council, which oversees the five college system.

"We're grateful for what we've got," Marks said, adding that even without the 11 percent funding increase, the five college system has "reasonable financial stability."

Weld's proposal that schools keep all the tuition revenue they raise rather than currently returning about 70 percent to the state raised questions from University officials.

Chancellor Richard O'Brien said Weld's tuition retention plan would make UMass less sensitive to budget cuts, although he admitted this plan would encourage campuses to raise tuition to earn more money.

UMass is already one of the most expensive state schools in the country. Still, Marks said, "The notion of 100 percent tuition retention is an excellent idea."

"We're hurting," said Paul Page, vice chancellor of administration and finance, on the financial situation at UMass. He expressed concern at Weld's plan — which would emphasize student tuition as a major new source of revenue for the campuses in the system.

"We're very sensitive to the impact [tu-

Increases needed to repair damages, budget report says

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts five college system asked for a budget increase for fiscal year 1993 to strengthen the financially-troubled system and reverse the damage done to the University's teaching, research and service programs by five years of consecutive budget cuts.

If the request is not accepted, the University five college system's budget report says, students and faculty can expect a "downward spiral of change" to occur, including deterioration of the University's quality and reputation.

The budget request, developed by representatives from the UMass campuses at Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth, Lowell and

Reid quits coaching job

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

After finding out he would not be able to honor promises he made to recruits, Jim Reid, who has never hidden his love or passion for the game of football, quit as head coach of the University of Massachusetts football team last Thursday.

During a meeting with Athletic Director Frank McInerney, in which Reid was informed the University could not offer incoming freshmen full athletic scholarships, less than two weeks before the National Letter of Intent signing deadline, Reid, who had already received five verbal commitments, stood up and said, "I quit."

"What a lot of people don't understand is you go into their [a recruits'] home and you talk with them. . . so it came down to a question of what I said to them, which comes down to a question of integrity," Reid said. "The administration backed me into a corner."

While Reid's resignation may come as a shock, it should not. Throughout the season, he was upset about the lack of money being given to the football program. He did everything in his power to keep the bills low. When he went on recruiting visits, he slept on the floors of hotels — his team always ate packed lunches — in short, the football program spent conservatively,

'86 riot victim denied appeal on technicality

A Black former University of Massachusetts student who was beaten in the 1986 World Series riots in Southwest Residential Area was denied an appeal in a suit brought against the Amherst campus Jan. 17.

Yancy H. Robinson's suit was denied appeal by the Massachusetts Appeals Court on the grounds Robinson informed University officials instead of the state attorney general that he was plannning to file an appeal.

Robinson's suit claimed University officals violated his civil rights by failing to protect him during the riots, saying the University had failed to suffiently train and supervise campus police.

The riots, which pitted mostly Black New York Mets fans and mostly White Boston Red Sox fans against each other, have become a sore spot with administrators and students alike.

Afterwards, students charged administrators with covering up the racial aspect of the riots and the effect it had on the campus.

However, the Appeals Court upheld the dismissal ruling from a Hampshire District Court judge, saying that Robinson, in addition to not notifying the attorney general, was not in the state's custody; hence, it was not the state's duty to protect him.

The court used a 1989 Supreme Court ruling in favor of a Wisconsin social worker who was sued for not taking action to protect a child.

This ruling stipulates that the state is not re-

State rep. race coming up fast

4 dems debate campaign financing, tuition retention

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

Students returning from intersession are arriving just in time to watch the primary fight to fill Stanley Rosenberg's State Representative seat from the Third Hampshire District heat up.

see related story page 10

Democrats Jon Hite, Ellen Story and Terry Franklin, all of Amherst, Norman Page of Pelham, Republican Mark Enoch of Amherst and Independent Larry Kelley, an Amherst businessman, are vying for the right to compete in the general election for the seat, which consists of Amherst and Pelham. Kevin Smith of Amherst failed to collect enough signatures to get on the ballot for the Republican primary, but he plans to compete in the general election as a write-in.

The primary date is set for Feb. 18, with the general election to be held on March 17.

Much of the early debate among candidates has centered around issues of campaign financing and reaction to Gov. Weld's tuition retention plan.

According to Weld's plan, state appropriations to the University of Massachusetts would be reduced by the amount of tuition which each of the University system's five campuses would retain. Campuses currently retain an estimated 30 percent of the tuition they raise, with the rest going into the state's general fund.

Hite has called Weld's plan a "poisoned apple — sweet in the short run, deadly in the long run."

"If Massachusetts were the kind of state that had the tradition of financing and philosophically supporting UMass like other states, then tuition retention would be an avenue to maintain a margin of excellence," Hite said.

"Unfortunately, in Massachusetts, tuition retention is rapidly becoming an excuse for the legislature and governor to decimate the budget at student's expense."

Hite issued a letter this week to 550 students who are registered voters in the district urging them to discuss the impact of rising tuition and fees on their parents and families, and to contact their state representative to express their opposition to tuition retention.

Story said while full tuition retention is not "inherently bad," and does work well in systems such as California and Texas, Weld's plan is not appropriate to the current political and economic climate in Massachusetts.

"The real fight can't be to roll back tuition retention, because that would have devastating consequences and

Arena ahead of schedule

Construction on Mullins going better than expected

MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The Mullins Memorial Center is now 48 percent completed and ahead of the University schedule, said Larry Melnick, program director for the Mullins Arena project.

A definite date for the opening is not yet known, but is expected to be sometime in 1993, said Melnick. The arena is scheduled to be handed over by the Suffolk Construction Company to UMass sometime next fall. Once it is handed over to UMass, they will need time to furnish the arena with the necessities to operate the facility in its day to day operations.

Multi-purpose is the best way to describe the arena, which was designed to serve numerous functions.

"The primary purpose of Mullins is to provide a first rate facility for UMass athletics, but it was also built to accommodate conventions, trade shows, theatre productions and concerts," said Ashoke Ganguli, director of Auxilary Services.

"Mullins is an asset to the student body and the community," said Ganguli. But he was quick to point out that "the arena is an extension of student life and it's main purpose is to serve the student body."

In addition to the main rink at Mullins, a practice rink that seats 500 and racquetball courts will also be included in the project. It has been proposed that the public will be able to rent skates as well as private ice time at the practice rink, said Melnick.

One interesting aspect of the Mullins design is the stage ceiling which is able to hold 70,000 pounds of flyweight.

Melnick said, "this could be the difference for a show to decide to perform at Mullins, because they will be able to hang their lighting and scenery without having to transport and construct their own staging."

Also, Melnick went on to say, acoustical insulation is being installed in the roof. "This insulation will provide top rate acoustics for the facility."

Ganguli credited the hockey alumni with pushing for the construction of the facility. The funds to construct Mullins were appropriated in 1986. The state legislator contributed $25 million towards the project and the UMass building Authority raised the remaining amount by selling tax free bonds.

Melnick said, "many UMass buildings were built on this concept, including the buildings in Southwest, and the Campus Center. At this point the construction costs have reached $40 million."

MassPIRG battles to stay on tuition bill

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Leaner times could await MassPIRG chapters at colleges and universities across the state next year after Gov. Weld sign last minute legislation New Year's Eve that makes it illegal for advocacy groups to use the "negative check-off" fee.

In the past, MassPIRG collected donations from students through a negative check-off fee system where students paid a $4 fee on their semester bills unless they checked a box saying they did not want the extra charge.

Now however, eliminating the negative check-off fee as an option for advocacy groups, MassPIRG and the State Students' Association of Massachusetts may have to look for other ways to raise money.

While fees that don't go to organizations that engage in advocacy or lobbying, such as the $1 child care fee are to be uneffected by the law, MassPIRG may have some difficultly holding on to its fee.

Kira Sanbonmatsu of the UMass MassPIRG chapter said that while MassPIRG is working to get the new law repealed, her chapter is going to try to keep its fee by restraining itself from using the money they collect to pay lobbyists. She said they'd instead use the money for on-campus activities to educate students and keep they aware of environmental issues.

"We'll try to keep students involved with environmental issues and work with on-campus action and leave the lobbying to the citizen half of the organization," Sanbonmatsu said.

Before, 15 percent of the money collected through the fees statewide was put toward lobbying while

Student research facility returns after four years

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

An advocacy arm of the Student Government Association which had disappeared because of political infighting within the student senate has been jumpstarted back into existence, according to the speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

Robert Monahan said the Student Center for Educational Research was formed in 1973, but that four years ago the center closed down because of discontent with its agenda.

"The agenda was political," Monahan said, "but the issues were not of concern to students. Some of the senators fought to get rid of SCERA, and eventually, it was killed."

However, Monahan, who said he was in favor of getting rid of SCERA at that time, said he wants to see SCERA back now.

"It wasn't a mistake to get rid of it when it happened," he said. "But now the students need it back."

Monahan said students need to organize in order to build a lobbying base within the State Legislature, a base that isn't there now.

"We have to have a lobbying base," he said. "Chancellor [Richard] O'Brien is trying to rebuild one which [former Chancellor] Duffey got rid of."

Monahan said the center will have a budget of $28,000 for the spring semester, and for the 1992-93 academic year, the budget will be $60,000.

He said the money will be used to hire a professional director, three teaching assistants and eventually the center will expand and offer internships to students.

Monahan said he submitted a job description for the director position to Acting Director of Student Activites Edward Korza, who will review it. Monahan said he is optimistic about starting a search committee by early February.

"We need to get SCERA going if we want to effect the state [Massachusetts] budget for this year," he said.

Monahan said the senate wants to make SCERA a "grass-roots lobby," organizing students by their home districts on a statewide level.

"Eventually, we would like to see this lobbying effort spread all over the state, to other campuses," he said.

Monahan said the role of the director is to help the students with research and information about student-related issues.

"We need the help of a support staff, but still, students need to organize on their own," he said.

"This could be a way of empowering students and letting them do some good for other students and the University also," he said. Monahan said he has not seen any opposition to the reformation of SCERA, as it was passed through the Senate in December unanimously. Also, he said staff and administrators have seemed receptive to the idea.

"It's all a matter of going through the bureaucracy now," he said. "It would be a grave mistake to try and slow the restoration of SCERA down."

"The restoration of SCERA is one of the most beneficial things for the senate — it proves that we're working for the students as well as our school," he said.

General Physical Ed. moves to Totman Gym

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

To add or drop a gym class this semester students will have to go to the main offices in Totman gymnasium, the General Physical Education Program's new home.

The program moved because the Athletic Fundraising Office needed more space. Prior to the move, the Athletic Fundraising Office was situated in a space that was to small to fully suit its needs.

Also, after the Professional Preparation in Physical Education Department sustained heavy budget cuts, three office suites opened up in Totman Gynasium.

According to Russell E. Kidd, director of physical education, the biggest drawback of moving out of Boyden will be his inability to be able to supervise the Physical Education Program as closely as he has in the past.

The bulk of the Physical Education Program is concentrated in the Curry Hicks Cage and Boyden Building, both of which are located on the other side of campus from Totman.

"I'm going to do my best to travel between Totman and Boyden as much as possible, but if a problem occurs I am not always going to be around," he said. "This means that our instructors are going to have to be more organized and professional."

One positive note is that there is more available gymnasium space at Totman which the General Physical Education Program will be able to utilize, said Kidd. The first move in regards to classes may occur this spring when the outdoor gym classes such as soccer, tennis and golf may move inside until the weather gets warmer.

Kidd went on to say that if this were

Furlough pay to return

Weld enacts legislation for repayment

By CHRIS SHADOIAN
Collegian Staff

Gov. Weld implemented legislation recently under which University employees who either worked without pay during last spring's furlough plan, or who have not yet used their extra vacation days, can apply for repayment.

Under the highly unpopular plan, furloughed University employees could either work without pay and receive compensation later, take additional vacation days, or not work at all.

Employee repayments are expected to reach about $2.9 million. Settlement forms are due by noon on Monday, Jan. 27, and administration officials expect the repayments to be issued by Jan. 31.

The University Staff Association received a favorable decision from Arbitrator Robert Stutz earlier this month, who found there had been a breach of contract when 580 USA members were furloughed without pay last spring, according to USA president, Sheila M. Griffith.

Griffith called the decision "very favorable," and said the case would now proceed to Suffolk Superior Court.

She said that the decision reaffirms what USA had been saying ever since the furlough plan was introduced: "Implementation of this furlough is a violation of our contract."

Griffith said the governor's new legislation is not enough.

She said only 53 of the 580 USA members who were furloughed worked without pay, and that nearly all of those who took extra vacation days have already used them.

"The vast majority of our employees will not be reimbursed," she said.

"We intend to continue the case until everyone is made whole."

The USA includes 1200 of the clerical and technical staff at the university.

Griffith said the arbitration decision was only the first step.

"It is still a very live issue and we will continue pursuing it."

■ furlough repayment

Weld enacted the furlough plan last spring in an effort to cut the state budget deficit. Those furloughed included all state employees earning $20,000 or more, and the number of days they were furloughed for (two to 15 between April 16 and June 22) depended on their salaries.

Originally, many of the affected UMass professors planned to take their furloughs at the same time — protesting, in effect — by shutting down classes. But Weld declared them "critical or essential" employees of the university, and said they and all the professors at the 29 state colleges and universities had to work without pay.

The then UMass President-Chancellor Joseph P. Duffey, said Weld's furlough policy was "unwise," and that the administration would make no move to punish those employees who refused to work.

In a recent letter to all UMass employees, current Chancellor Richard O'Brien called the furlough "an unfair way to solve the state's problems."

ition] has on students," Page said.

In Massachusetts, the tuition at the state colleges and universities increased by an average of six percent this year, according to a report by the New England Board of Higher Education.

Page said declining enrollment levels at the University would effect tuition revenue.

"It's the first shot in a long battle," said Page.

Weld's budget will be referred to the House Ways and Means Committee and then will go to the House and Senate in the spring. The new fiscal year begins in July.

Also, as operating costs at UMass rise yearly, Page called the campus repair schedule "deplorable." The Amherst campus needs an estimated $275 million in repairs.

The two new buildings currently under construction at UMass — the Mullins Arena and the polymer research center — could face fiscal problems once they are ready for use.

"The question is where are we going to get the money to operate" the facilities, said Karin Sherbin, University spokesperson.

Richard Talbot, director of the Tower Library, said Weld's proposal could worsen staff shortages in a library system which already has a low ranking among college libraries.

"Level funding is going to produce some problems," Talbot said.

■ University budget request

Worcester, was approved by the Board of Trustees in early October and sent to the Legislature.

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst has requested a $255 million budget request for fiscal year 1993, a 9 percent increase in last year's appropriation.

UMass Chancellor Richard O'Brien characterized the request as "whistling in the dark." He expects this fiscal year to be worse than last year. "It doesn't seem very hopeful," O'Brien said.

The report calls for the replacement of outdated laboratory equipment, improved maintenance of deteriorating campus structures such as leaking roofs and defective alarm systems, increased graduate stipends and financial aid and improving the University's low-ranked libraries.

The request establishes faculty and staff increases as a top priority. The current recession will make this a difficult venture considering state funding of the higher education system was slashed from $741 million in 1989 to its current level, $476 million.

"In very real ways, investment in the University of Massachusetts is an investment in the current and future health of the state," the report states.

University scholarship funds have been cut and tuition and fees have skyrocketed as the University struggles to maintain its competitiveness.

Acting President E.K. Fretwell said the budget request aims to increase financial aid capabilities and encourage cooperation in academic and research ventures among the five campuses.

Last summer, Gov. Weld endorsed a reorganization plan to combine the five separate schools of UMass-Amherst, Lowell, Dartmouth, Worcester and Boston into a single unified "world-class" system.

One example of a positive joint venture between the campuses is the cooperation between Amherst's leading polymer science program and Lowell's top-notch plastics processing program.

Such programs can far exceed the benefits of traditional single-campus research projects, the report said. In addition, Amherst and Lowell have vowed to improve their proposed doctoral nursing programs through such cooperation.

In order to expand University efficiency, link academic departments and increase collaboration of ideas, the report requests funding for a computer networking system to give students experience with the "latest in research technology."

Deficient library holdings, the report states, are causing research problems in the five-college system. In fact, the UMass-Amherst library's combined holdings, staffing and expenditures ranked 51st among the 107 libraries in the Association of Research Libraries.

Northeast resident explains why to stay on-campus

Consider this an open letter to all of you big kids from your bratty, abrasive little brother. I TOLD YOU SO! HA HA! And now, for as long as you're alive, you are no longer allowed to whine to me again about your off-campus trials and tribulations because I warned you already.

Tony Westcott

I have a friend named Bob who, like 100 million percent of the students who have ever been on the meal plan, didn't like the food. Wah, wah. Well, Bobby became a big boy last semester and decided never again to subject himself to the DCs anymore. We both lived in Crabtree, with both of our rooms maybe only two hundred steps away from the brown arches of Basics, most of them stairs.

Well hell hell hell — it wasn't too long before Bobby was griping to me about having to take the bus over to Stop & Shop every week and cut coupons and moan about the prices and get rejected by the high school student cashiers asking them out and not buy too much stuff because he could only carry two bags to and from the bus stops. Then he got to bitching about having to cook his chicken a la mode shishkebabs every day and then washing the dishes. Dinner was no longer a carefree twenty minute all-you-can-eat cheddar & whatever feast at Basics with your friends, where the only effort in was carrying your tray to a conveyor belt, when you'd finished. Now dinner was a chore.

And then he started complaining that he was spending too much $ on McMSGs and Bacon Double Cheeseburgers at Burger Shank. Hey, Bob, I told you so!!

And as if this wasn't enough, Bob moved off campus. Now he lives way the hell out in Deerfield which, as you may know, is basically closer to Canada than it is to the UMass campus. I can't wait to take a day trip to go see him someday this spring and find him mowing the lawn or scrubbing the bathroom floor. Not to mention, he already despises his landlady more than he disliked the idea of having an R.A.

Looks like Bob's new found mature self-dependence has made him better equipped in dealing with the real world. But, Bob, you're still a UMass student and your only responsibility now is to study for your classes and not to spend all your time on buses and grocery shopping and shoveling the driveway and washing dishes.

Here's a simply ridiculous analogy: Bob's being too cool to bother with baby things like meal plans and residence halls is akin to a guy being too cool to use a condom and just accept having to raise a child while being a full-time student.

So there you have it, Bobby and all my off-campus friends. Next time you find yourself miserably putting up with your daily grind or suffering motion sickness while trying to read John Locke's "Rape of the Pope" for English 201 on the Sunderland bus, remember to never condescend to us kids who choose to live in residential playpens and eat at Basics.

New editorial editor points out the beauty in controversy

What to change... what to leave alone... will anyone try to kill me... will my GPA fall gracelessly... these were some of the questions that I was grappling with after being named the new editor of this page at the close of last semester. I won big, raking in almost 100 percent of the votes. The fact is that no one ran against me, but there I was, on the brink of graduation and facing a hefty new responsibility for my final semester. I guess I didn't do much other than to get in touch with some of the columnists of yesterday to see if they wanted to keep writing, and recruited a few of my own. The latter was not easy: while I have some friends and acquaintances who write very well, nearly all of them turned down my offer flatly, saying, "The Collegian sucks!", which is the cool thing to think, I suppose. Really cool people think everything sucks. Anyway, a few years ago I might have agreed with them, bonded with them against the establishment, but I could no longer do this. I was part of the establishment now, part of the Collegian crew.

"What'daya mean? You have to write for me. It's a good paper," I argued uselessly. Their beef? The same old story, basically. That the Collegian seldom has quality writing, but more importantly, that this particular page always features the exact same issues, same points of view, same old arguments, regurgitated and spit out over and over again. That could have been yours truly not too long ago, but you should have heard me now. I flew to the newspapers defense like a protective hen, but you must trust me when I say that I have not been brainwashed because of my potent new post. I really was right. My argument to my reluctant new columnists went something like this: (horns, please)

Ari Vais

Man, there's nothing more boring than some tormented college genius reading this rag every day (because, face it, everybody reads The Collegian) and complaining about how lousy the writing is, or how trite or knuckleheaded the columns and letters are. Nearly everybody has the energy to do this and to feel instantly superior as writers and thinkers. I'll bet (I love bets) that some of you are thinking this right now, right this second, as you read. But will I see your smug mug as you stand before my desk this afternoon, handing me something Superior, even something Genius, for tomorrow's issue? NOT.

Allow me to digress just for a moment and offer my own stinkin' opinion about "cool." Ask anyone, and they'll tell you that to be a cynic is and always has been cool: "That's crap, this sucks, you suck, I suck," has always been the outlook of the hip. But lately I've been getting a feeling, nothing concrete, that now "cool" is to like most things, if only in a detached, amiable way. Instead of letting the weak qualities of something get to you, it is now "cool" to concentrate on the things you enjoyed about it, and to have a positive attitude. In short, sulking, pouting, disliking and such is now dated and "uncool," while being happy is "cool." For example, if you see this column as a load of bollocks, but there was one or two sentences that were at least kind of funny, it is "cool" to like my ramblings simply on account of the latter. See?

Anyway, so I told my friends, like I'm telling you now, that if they think there's something wrong with the Collegian and they think they're superior writers, there is absolutely nothing stopping them from making it "better" with their own work. This is no private party — we've got an open door policy here, always looking for writers. It's a lot of work but it's rewarding.

One more thing: now and again in the past editors have chosen to avoid controversy all together on this page, simply due to the clear and present danger that one is faced with when being controversial in such a reactionary community. It's an understandable stance, wanting to play it safe is, no doubt, the smart thing. However, I know I like to read something risque and it's crazy how tempers flare around here and, basically, it's your hide and not mine that's on the line (note the crafty disclaimer at the top of the page), so if I get something that might make people do a double take and huff and puff, and something that I know won't, and I can only run one of them... you can guess the rest. That's one change that I'll make. Have a swell semester.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Wintersession, just long enough to really bore you and just short enough so you can't accomplish anything.

Well, I'm back and I'd love to say it's great to be here.

I was reading some the ingredients listed on my instant hot chocolate mix can and it started off "This may contain some of the following ingredients..." May contain? What, the stuff that mysteriously disappeared from the cocoa factory? "Well we couldn't find Joe's watch so list it in the 'may contain' section of the ingredients. Oh, and have they determined what happened to that guy who used to work with the vats?" I think I got one of the "memorial" cans.

"That boy is just one moose short of a full herd."

My uncle, Mort, once told me that the mission of the Peace Corp is really just to travel the world and tell everyone to boil their water before they drink it. "Yep," said Uncle Mort, "some of them fellers know how to say 'boil the water before you drink it' in over 50 languages." Uncle Mort isn't one of the smarter family members.

This campus has no sense of humor.

At the end of the six O'clock news the other day they said something to the effect of "Tonight's weather was sponsored in part by McDonald's." Personally, I think that if God really needs help funding the weather (which I doubt), he'd ask for a government grant before hitting the private sector. Otherwise, he could end up selling ad space on sunsets.

"Gimme another one 'o them bee-ahs."

Marc Elliott

Here we have it! It's "Marc Elliott's Definitive Guide to Grunting: For vague non-committal people and the people that love them." We all know that the secret of being vague is grunting. Don't want to admit something or make a statement that could be used against you later, just grunt. You'll never be quoted with a grunt 'cause, hell, who can spell those damn things anyway?

Uh-huh — Depending on how you pronounce it, this popular grunt can mean any number of things. If you put the emphasis on first part of the sound (like UH-huh), it could mean OK, fine, whatever, get out of my face you slime ball or it could mean nothing at all. If you put a little emphasis on the latter half of the sound (as in uh-huh), it could mean yes, right, absolutely or it could mean nothing at all. With a lot of emphasis on the the latter half of the sound (uh-HUH), meaning could be jerk, shmuck, or it could mean I understand, let's see or it could mean nothing at all.

Uh-hahhhh or Ah-hahhhh — A derivative of Uh-huh, Uh-hahhhh and Ah-hahhhh could mean I've got it!, I've got an idea, a sudden realization has just hit my noggin or it could mean you're stepping on my foot, please call off your dog (only if it's loud and the entire sound is emphasized as in AH-HAHHHHHH!!) or it could mean nothing at all.

There are a lot more grunts, but we don't have the time for them today.

You've got be pretty confident with your social life to have a 900-number for your home. I just can't imagine people willing to pay to talk to me, 1-900-6-NO-LIFE. Just remember it doesn't cost a cent to sent me a joke or two through campus mail to "Marc Elliott (goofball), 113 Campus Center. Chow.

Amherst Chief of Police held in high regard

MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The Amherst police department moved into a modern, state of the art police facility in 1990, but all the technology in the world is no substitute for 32 years of street experience.

Donald Maia has worked for the town of Amherst since 1959, and has heen the chief of police since 1973. Being chief of police in a town like Amherst can be a strange job indeed considering it houses two colleges and one major university. Also, the Amherst area is known worldwide for its counter-culture, which seems to thrive on activism.

He is held in high regard by many in town, including Vice Chair of the Amherst Select Board Carolyn Holstein.

"He is constantly on duty 24-hours-a-day, and certainly understands the unique aspect this town, which is comprised not only of permanent residents but college students as well," she said.

Born in Malden, a suburb of Boston, the eldest son of two Portuguese immigrants, he learned from his father at an early age that it's possible to start at the bottom and work your way to the top. His father had done this by working first as a dishwasher and eventually becoming a chef.

Maia would follow the same path as he began his law enforcement career as a part time officer and eventually became the Chief of Police.

After graduating from Amherst High School he attended Hebron Academy for one year and then he began the first of two short stints at UMass, before entering the Air Force for four years.

In 1957, Maia was discharged from the Air Force and he returned to Amherst again enrolling at UMass. After a full year at college he realized that it was not the path he wanted to follow at the time.

Coincidently at this time a friend of his told him that his father, the legendary police chief Francis Hart, was looking for a part-time police officer.

Chief Maia remembered the first day on the job, "I remember walking into Chief Hart's office the first day. Hart looked up at me from his desk and asked 'What do you want?' 'I want a job if you got one,' I responded. He asked me if I wanted to go to court and I accepted."

"At court we met up with Attorney Ed O'Brien, and Hart introduced me as the new Amherst Cop. Two hours later I was learning how to direct traffic uptown."

In March, Maia was hired as a full time police officer on the Amherst Police Department. Later in the same year he was appointed to be the safety officer for Amherst, a position he held until 1967.

In 1962 Maia became the first recipient of the Amherst Jaycees' Outstanding Young Man Award for the work he did teaching young people the aspects of safety in everyday life.

After making sergeant three years earlier, Maia was promoted in 1970 to the position of Deputy Chief.

Prior to this time the town had applied for a grant to conduct a management study of the police department. The study was to find out cost effective ways to run the police department. He was immediately put in charge of police administration and began the process of sorting out the books.

According to Maia, Arthur D. Little, the first consulting firm hired, told the town that there was no need for change because the Deputy Chief was doing a good job running the finances of the department. He eventually worked with another consultant, John Herder, and the two of them together were able to come up with a 10 point plan to improve the police department.

One of the points in the plan was the construction of a new police facility.

Police Chief Frank Hart turned 65 in 1973 and was forced into mandatory retirement. A nationwide search was conducted for a new chief, and the search committee decided to settle on one of its own, Deputy Chief Donald Maia.

Maia has been actively involved in the Jimmy Fund since 1967. He has also held positions in the Massachusetts and the Western Massachusetts Police Associations. Also he became the first recipient of the Hector J. Pelletier Award, an award given by the Massachusetts Chief Association for outstanding service to the Jimmy Fund.

He understands the plight and situation of students in the town.

Maia said he realizes that parties have always been a tradition in this town because of the two colleges and UMass. Alcohol and parties have always been a problem when it's connected with college age students said Maia, but he said he knows that it is also part of growing up.

His advice to kids who are at parties is "When you hear the cops are coming you better start running, because when the police show up you better act like a marshmallow."

In the wake of the recent disclosures of police brutality cases in other police departments across the nation Maia said, "There is no place in this occupation for brutality. There is no need for any officer going beyond the lawful legal procedures. Any way, I do not pay my officers enough money to do something of this nature."

Barry Del Castilho, the town manager of Amherst, summed up Chief Maia's job as police chief over the last 19 years, "The town of Amherst's police department has an excellent reputation in the state, which is a reflection upon Chief Maia's leadership and dedication to the department and the community."

State rep. candidates debate at forum

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

The six candidates for state representative from the Third Hampshire District met at a forum last week sponsored by a recently-formed group of local taxpayers and property owners to share their views on taxes, bureaucracy and the general condition of government in the Commonwealth.

Democrats Jon Hite, Norman Page, Terry Franklin and Ellen Story, Republican Mark Enoch and Independent Larry Kelley all participated in the forum sponsored by the Amherst Citizen's for Responsible Government at the Amherst Veterans of Foreign Wars building in Amherst.

Each candidate agreed that state government has become bloated, although they differed in how to curb the growth of the state's bureaucracy.

Kelley, who owns Karate Health Fitness in Amherst, said he would bring the same frugality that has allowed his business to survive two serious recessions to state government.

"I spend money pretty well — like it's my own, because it is," Kelley said.

Kelley said his very first act if elected would be to file a bill in the state legislature allowing the Town of Amherst to sell the Cherry Hill Golf Course.

Franklin pointed out that he had to fill out close to 50 pages of documents with various state agencies in order to run for office as an example of what he believes is too much excess in government.

Hite, Page and Story all agreed that a more progressive tax structure was a key to improving the state's flagging economy.

"What the Governor is doing is saying is that he's lowering state taxes, while at the same time towns are overriding [Proposition 2 1/2] and property taxes are rising," said Page, who supports a graduated income tax. "I think we can reduce in some areas, but there are certain services, such as health care, that everyone wants."

"We need to get rid of bureaucracy and regulation," Page said.

Hite said a "restructuring of our tax system," is the only way to provide the "structural relief to municipalities," necessary to improve the state's economy.

Story said a more progressive tax structure will have a "disparate effect" on Amherst and Pelham because of the University and public schools in the district.

"Schools here serve as a giant funnel for bringing money into the community," Story said. "I am a progressive who will look out for the economic interests of this community."

Kelley said he does believe in "taxing the rich," but asked "How do you get at them?"

"[The rich] are not any smarter than you or I," Kelley said. "But they hire lawyers and CPAs who are smarter than you or I."

Enoch quoted former Speaker of the US House of Representatives Sam Rayburn's statement of "Don't tax you, don't tax me, tax the fellow behind the tree," in response to a question of his views on taxes.

Enoch said his experience as an educator in a federally-funded entitlement program convinced him that there is "overlap among competing programs."

"I know there is waste in government — we pay too much," Enoch said.

Franklin restated his campaign promise of representing the entire community and not just one segment.

"I want to represent the taxpayers," Franklin said. "I don't believe government exists to do everything for people."

Pro-Democracy group making waves

Kelly leads charge on civil issues, election reform

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

Dennis Kelly worked for environmental groups for three years and became disturbed by the lack of progress. Now, with the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign, he is working toward public medical care, civil rights, elimination of the national debt and energy conservation — and with more visible results.

After fighting pollution door to door with MassPIRG, Greenpeace and Clean Water Action, Kelly said he "felt like I was beating my head against a wall."

> "Fundamental reform comes about only when people demand it and work to bring it about."
> —Dennis Kelly, leader of the Pro-Democracy Campaign

"Even though most people were supporting those things, it wasn't happening," Kelly said. "It was only getting worse."

So Kelly took time off to re-think the direction of his efforts. A year later, the Pro-Democracy group was a reality.

"It all comes down to money," he said. "When a majority of the American people go against a monied interest, the majority of the American people lose. I've been learning ever since about how to organize, how to work with people as a group, to be more effective, that we wouldn't just be loud voices."

Since the group's formation on Earth Day 1990, they have been making themselves visible around the Amherst area. At first they were involved in speak-outs and rallies, but found their first big issue with the 1990 elections. The Pro-Democracy Campaign, clad in triangular hats, persuaded dissatisfied voters to vote "none of the above" instead of choosing from a pool of unqualified candidates.

Kelly said the none of the above campaign received national attention. Among the media giving coverage were the New York Times, National Public Radio and many other publications which printed an article from the Associated Press.

Now the Pro-Democracy Campaign is raising the issue of campaign finance in the Democratic primary race for the vacated Amherst/Pelham state representative seat.

"We've raised the issue of money and politics to be the foremost topic of this election," said Kelly. "The message of the pro-democracy movement is resonating and the time is ripe."

Though they are attempting to reduce spending among candidates, the Pro-Democracy Campaign would prefer citizen-financed elections, which Kelly said would require about $5 per year from each taxpayer. Kelly calls this "the crown jewel of our platform."

"We're calling for a fundamental reform," said Kelly, "This is not the first time there has been fundamental reform in this country."

"The history of the United States can be seen as one long pro-democracy movement," said Kelly. He said this movement began with the War for Independence and continued through the elimination of property restrictions on voting, referendum rights, abolition of slavery, women suffrage and the Black civil rights movement.

Kelly stressed an importance in grass-roots politics, that fundemental change cannot come about without it. He used as an example the Emancipation Proclamation, which resulted in Abraham Lincoln receiving credit for freeing slaves.

"Lincoln did no such thing," Kelly said. "Lincoln would have let slavery continue if the South came back into the Union. Fundamental reform comes about only when people demand it and work to bring it about."

Elected leaders do not create reform, Kelly said, blaming private campaign funding.

"We have to separate wealth from the state," he said. Without public campaign funding, creating national health care "would be like skating up a 90 degree incline. It's so hard."

Kelly also saw a problem with public acceptance of private campaign finance.

"It's crazy, yet it's been happening all along, so people say, 'Well, I guess that's the way it goes,'" he said.

Kelly further explained this with a quote from Thomas Payne:

"A long history of not thinking a thing wrong gives it a superficial appearance of being right."

it would fail," Story said. "The real fight has to be to restore state appropriations so we can hold the line on tuition increases."

Story said she believes it will be politically impossible to return to the point where the University will have no tuition retention because of the current consensus on Beacon Hill in favor of retention and because a rollback of tuition receipts will force the University to undergo layoffs of faculty, staff and teaching assistants. For the first time this year, the University used tuition receipts to pay the salaries of University employees.

Page said he favors retention if tuition is 10-15 percent of the total cost of education. Page noted that since UMass doesn't have the endowment of many private colleges and universities, full tuition retention will not be able to fully make up the loss of state appropriations unless tuition is raised.

"To some degree, retention allows the University to be responsive to the needs of different groups," Page said. "However, the Governor will push [retention] as far as it can go — he doesn't care about the University."

Franklin said while he basically opposes tuition retention, he believes Weld will find other ways to cut the University's budget.

"If [Weld] doesn't get it this way, he'll get it some other way," Franklin said. "My job [as legislator] will be to get as much money as possible for the University — if it comes down to a fight between groups, I don't want to get involved."

The four Democrats in the race met in December to discuss a list of four proposals put forward by the Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign for campaign finance reform.

The first proposal, limiting individual contributions to $100, was agreed to by Hite, Franklin and Norman Page of Amherst. Story limited herself to accepting $500 contributions. The state's legal limit is $1,000 for contributions from individuals.

The second proposal involved setting a spending limit of $10,000 by each candidate. Franklin, who is accepting no contributions, and Page agreed to the proposal. Story set a limit of $30,000 for herself, which she said was based on inflation-adjusted figures from Rosenberg's 1986 campaign and the state's office of Campaign Finance.

Hite said he would have agreed to the overall cap if all the other candidates did, but that he couldn't "put himself at a competitive disadvantage." He said he expects to spend between $12-14,000 overall.

Finally, all candidates agreed to proposals to raise over half their campaign money from within the district and to spend no more than 20 percent of what they raise from their campaigns from their own personal money. Page said because he doesn't plan on a large fundraising effort, he may exceed the 20 percent, but only plans on spending $5-7,000 overall.

While Story has been criticized for not agreeing to the spending limits set by the Pro-Democracy campaign, she pointed out that she has an all-volunteer campaign staff. She also said the majority of her spending was to build a centrally located campaign headquarters on the Amherst Town Common.

"The point of spending money on a headquarters was to bring people who are not normally involved into the political process," Story said. "It allows people in the community to build connections, develop relationships and shape an organization for the future."

SUMMER 1992
RESEARCH EXPERIENCE FOR UNDERGRADUATES
MIT HAYSTACK OBSERVATORY

Undergraduate science, mathematics, and engineering students are invited to apply for summer research positions at the MIT Haystack Observatory in Westford, MA.

Research projects include studies of radio emissions from stars, investigations of the structure of the earth's upper atmosphere, and hardware and software development for data acquisition, processing, and recording systems.

The positions are nominally three months in duration (June-August) and carry a stipend of $1300-1500/month depending on academic level and experience. Women, minorities and students with disabilities are encouraged to apply.

For further information and application form write to: Office of the Director, Haystack Observatory, Route 40, Westford, MA 01886, or call (508) 692-4764.

Application deadline is 28 February 1992.

Aquarium in Boston. Suffolk Construction Company is building the facility and at any given time a number of subcontractors are working at the site.

At the current time the work force has diminshed due to the inclimate weather, but will increase 100 percent as the weather gets better. Approximately a crew of 100 people are working on electrical, structural work and other jobs that can be performed during the winter months.

The design and purpose of the facility has been a group effort, said Melnick. "An enormous amount of preparation went into planning this facility. We studied other arenas around the country and learned from their mistakes."

Quality control is a priority on the construction site, Melnick said.

"The drawings are reviewed at 30 percent, 60 percent, 90 percent, and 100 percent by officials from the electrical, civil engineering and sanitary departments to meet their specifications," he said. "Also, the Athletic, Theatrical and Fine Arts departments also see the drawings and have input."

Melnick does not foresee a problem with the parking arrangements.

"Most events will take place at night, and by that time the parking garage, staff lots, lot 25 and E Lot will all be nearly emptied," Melnick explained. "If there is a need for additional parking we will be able to shuttle people from the Stadium lot to the arena."

"Mullins is one of the last links that UMass needed to be competitive with other higher learning institutions in the United States. One of the other links is the restoration of the money that has been cut from the university," said Ganguli.

New phone Add/Drop system trial run deemed successful

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

Add/Drop day has always been a recurring nightmare for most University of Massachusetts students. This semester some undergraduates have put the nightmare behind them as they sleep in for registration day, thanks to the University's new phone Add/Drop system.

According to Registar Nancy Fitzpatrick, the system is running on a trial basis for the Spring 1992 semester before all University students use the system next fall.

Fitzpatrick said all seniors, undergraduates with less than 12 credits, and all non-matriculated graduate students were invited to participate. Of the 7,000 students invited, over 2,891 had used the system, she said.

The traditional Add/Drop system is currently taking place but this will be the last semester it will exist.

"In the Fall of 1992 the entire student body will be invited to participate in the system," Fitzpatrick said. "The old bubble sheets and the long lines will no longer be needed."

This semester, according to Fitzpatrick, students qualifying for the new system were mailed instructions with their schedules in late December. A few days later the students received a revised schedule and the system opened up on Jan. 13.

"We prioritized seniors first and then opened the system up on a staggered basis according to year," Fitzpatrick said. "The graduate students went last. This gave preference to those with the most seniority."

The same seniority policy is to be instituted next fall.

"So far the system seems to be a success," Fitzpatrick said. "The students seem to be happy with it. The system was developed before the current fiscal problems in response to student and faculty complaints about the old Add/Drop system."

Junior history major Mark DelCore found the phone Add/Drop system a welcome change from the long lines of the past.

"It was definitely better than the old way," DelCore said. "It was much easier, I didn't even have to get out of bed. It's great for lazy people."

The Office of the Registrar will also benefit from the new system, Fitzpatrick said.

"There will be much less clerical labor for the office, but we will have to provide more technical support for the system," Fitzpatrick said. "It saves us some time so we will be able to provide better service for the students."

For next semester all students will receive instructions along with their schedules in August and the system will be opened up in the middle of the month and run two weeks into the semester, according to Fitzpatrick.

"Overall this is just a much better system," Fitzpatrick said. "Everyone wins, it is much easier and fairer than the old way."

the rest was used to hire organizers to help students arrange campus activities to increase student awareness on campus, she said.

But Sanbonmatsu hasn't taken her plan to the University administration yet and Paul Page, vice-chancellor of administration and finance, said he is assuming the fee will either disappear completely or, more likely, MassPIRG will push a student referendum mandating an optional fee.

An optional fee, which is allowed by the new law, would look different on the bill in that "students will have to indicate they want to pay it," according to Paul Page, vice chancellor of administration and finance.

As a negative check-off fee, 40 percent of students refused to pay the extra charge last year and Sanbonmatsu said other chapters that tried to operate off of a voluntary fee in the past have simply "died out."

Sanbonmatsu said while the optional fee hasn't been discussed as an option should their effort to keep the negative check-off fee fail, she said it could be "a possibility."

The legislature's move to eliminate the negative check-off fee was seen by many to the legislators' revenge for MassPIRG's lobbying efforts.

Sanbonmatsu said the bill was a "retalitaory move by the legislature" aimed at preventing students from effective lobbying.

Joe Langis, executive director of the State Students Association of Massachusetts agrees that the bill was a political attack on MassPIRG for its efforts to push a recycling bill through the state legislature.

"When I spoke to legislators in House there was overwhelming hostility toward MassPIRG," he said.

Nominating comm. formed

To search for two new vice chancellors

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

Search committees have been formed to nominate vice chancellors for both the Office of University Relations and Development and the Office of Student Affairs, according to the Chancellor's Office.

David Bischoff, dean of the School of Physical Education, was named by Chancellor Richard O'Brien to head the search for the vice chancellor of student affairs, presently held as an interim position by Jo-Anne T. Vanin.

Also named to the committee as undergraduates are Trustee Kevin Newnan, Student Government Association President David Gagne and Jennifer Sites. The graduate representative is Marc Kenen, president of the Graduate Student Senate.

Faculty appointees to the search committee include Anthony Gawienowski from the biochemistry department, Albey Reiner from microbiology, Brenda Millette from nursing, Maurianne Adams from the school of education and Federico Abel Ponce de Leon from Veternary and Animal Sciences.

Other staffers appointed to the committee include Sarah Boy from Student Affairs, Ashoke Ganguli from Auxiliary Services, John Findley from Housing, David Kraft from Health Services,and Reynolds Winslow from the Minority Engineering Program.

For the Vice Chancellor of University Relations and Development, now held by Daniel Melley, the permanent search committee will be chaired by Robert Helgsen, dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources.

David Anderson will be the sole undergraduate representative on the search committee. Graduate student Diane McIntyre will also serve on the committee.

Faculty appointees include Robert Rothstein from Slavic Languages, Charles Schewe from marketing, Morton Stemheim from physics and Arthur Kinney from the English department.

Other staffers include Judith Toyama from the Minority Graduate Recruitment Program, Phyllis Lane from the Minority Management Program, Sharon Kennaugh from State relations. Also, alumnus Donald Southwick was appointed to the search committee.

Moneta leaves post, clashes with Trustee

By MICHAEL LEVY
Collegian Staff

Associate Housing Director Larry Moneta will be leaving the University this February to take a position with the University of Pennsylvania.

His new position, associate vice provost for university life, will entail a wider scope than his current job, Moneta said. He will be responsible for a number of student services including counseling, fraternities and sororities, judicial affairs, student activities and health services.

"I hope that I can be effective in helping those services retain strength and improve," said Moneta, and "make a contribution to the quality of student life at UPenn."

Moneta said he has mixed emotions about leaving UMass.

"I feel very sad. This is my alma mater," said Moneta, who graduated from UMass in 1972.

"I'm sad about the devastation that the Commonwealth has allowed to take place," Moneta said, but "I will always be in touch. One never leaves UMass."

Student Trustee Kevin Newnan said he was "very happy" to hear that Moneta is leaving and accused him of being responsible for "an era of the oppression of student life in the residence halls."

"I shed no tears over his departure," he said. "It's a good thing for all involved."

"He had no chance for advancement here, and that's why he's gone," Newnan said.

Moneta disagreed.

"Advancement wasn't an issue. There's always room for advancement at UMass," Monetta said.

Moneta questioned Newnan's character as a student leader.

"His style of lack of leadership is really ineffective," Moneta said.

"He's not interested in talking. He has never once communicated to me his concerns," Moneta said, "It's just a general attitude he carries around toward administration. It's unfortunate."

Moneta came to the university as an administrator in January of 1983, taking the position of assistant director of housing for residential education east. In 1987 he was promoted to associate director for residential education, the position he will vacate on Feb. 14 before joining UPenn midway through the spring semester.

Moneta will be replaced by Anne Miller, previously coordinator of Residential Education.

Hiring freeze, attrition rap doctoral programs

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts history department has suspended the offering of two doctoral programs due to a hiring freeze and attrition, according to chairman of the history department Robert Jones.

The department will no longer accept graduate students into two programs, 20th-century American politics and early modern European history.

"We can no longer sustain these programs due to a lack of professors," said Bruce Laurie, director of the history department's graduate program. "We've lost a number of professors and due to the hiring freeze we can't hire anyone new."

There are currently 35 professors in the history department, according to Jones. The number has steadily decreased due to resignation, retirement and death.

"With a hiring freeze on, the attrition can occur in a haphazard way," Jones said. "This can leave us with some gaps and that is what happened with 20th-century and early European."

The gaps have also affected the undergraduate programs, Jones said.

"We've lost several undergraduate courses we'd like to be offering," Jones said. "Also these programs often bring us graduate students who become TAs [teaching assistants] and help us staff our undergraduate courses."

Laurie added, "The department has teaching obligations in graduate and general education which makes it difficult to offer upper level undergraduates," Laurie said.

Jones stressed the undergraduate programs receive "the bulk of the departments efforts and resources."

Until the current fiscal problems facing the University end the situation should remain the same, Laurie said.

"We thought the hiring freeze would end this year but that was too optimistic," Laurie said. "Until the freeze ends the programs won't be staffed."

UM student gets medal

ROTC cadet awarded Bronze Cross

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

The nation's senior veterans organization will be awarding one of it's most distinguished achievement medals to a University of Massachusetts senior and army cadet on Jan. 29.

Christopher E. Albus, an animal science major in the College of Food and Natural Resources, will be receiving the Bronze Cross from the Legion of Valor for academic and military achievements.

The Legion of Valor gives this award to stimulate leadership qualities in ROTC candidates.

Less than 50 cadets and midshipmen receive this award annually, and this year only three will be given to East Coast residents.

Albus served three years active duty as an infantry soldier at Schofield Barracks in Hawaii and entered the University in 1989.

At the Univeristy, Albus maintains a grade point average of 3.97, ranked second in the College of Food and Natural resources out of 598 students. He is a member of Golden Key Honor Society.

Albus has received many military awards as well as finishing three challenging military schools. Among his accomplishments are Ranger, Airborne and Pathfinder Schools, the Superior Cadet Award, Northern Warfare School, Army Physical Fitness Award, the Iron MIke Award and the Dean's List Award. Albus is the first cadet on the Order of Merit award list.

Albus has been an active participant in the Battalion Ranger Challenge for two years, and was an infantry squad leader in the National Guard.

Albus received his ROTC scholarship in September 1990. He graduated from Brattleboro Union High School in Brattleboro, Vt. in 1984.

no extras.

However, Reid was expected to compete for the Yankee Conference title with 15 less scholarships than other schools and with fewer coaches. The latest scholarship cutbacks were just too much for the man whose most valuable asset is his word.

Reid said he holds no grudges against the administration, which he has worked for the past 19 years, the last six as a head coach. However, when asked if he was ever given any type of warning from the administration about the reduction of full scholarships, he said angrily, "No. Not a thing. Yesterday [Thursday] at 12 p.m. was the first I ever heard about it.

"The thing is if we knew about the scholarships in November, when we were out recruiting, well, we can live with that. A week and a half before the signing date is not the time to make this decision."

McInerney said that a committee working on the budget concluded, "'If we can't eliminate anyone, the only place to cut was football.' Basketball has not and will not be touched. It is providing an incredible service for the school. It is our main hope of bringing in money."

McInerney also said there would be a national search for a new coach.

Reid recently interviewed for the head coaching job at the University of Pennsylvania, where he was a finalist — until he withdrew his name for consideration. At Penn, Reid would have earned around $80,000 plus "perks" such as a car, a country club membership and life insurance. However, when it came down to it, Reid decided he liked UMass too much to leave.

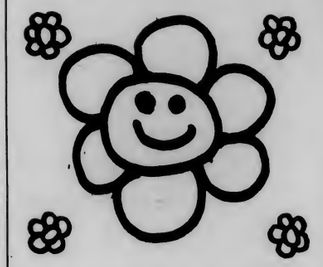
"I woke up this morning, I had a sickness in my stomach and my head hurt," Reid said. "I think about three-quarters of that was because of the decision I made to withdraw from the Penn job."

As people shuffled in and out of the football office last Friday, no one had anything bad to say about the departed coach, only good things.

Former UMass quarterback, Gary Wilkos said, "I've got nobody to help me with my problems anymore. You can always replace a coach. It's the guy that goes out on the limb for you that's hard to replace."

"There have been many dark, grim, sad days in the athletic department," McInerney said. "However, there was never a day as grim as yesterday."

"It is just a terrible, terrible day," Reid said.



No, this is something special. A special place, looking for special people. Talented people who can provide quality entertainment in a variety of shows throughout the year. Building repairs studied

Worsening condition may not be righted

By JOSH REYNOLDS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts trustees have commissioned a study to determine what repairs and renovations are needed by buildings on the UMass system's five campuses. Gordon Oakes, chairman of the board of trustees said the study would help the university "update prior studies, and get our hands around the situation."

However, the commissioning of the study does not assure that these long neglected repairs will be completed any time soon. The Daily Hampshire Gazette reported last week that Heriberto Flores, head of the committee overseeing the study, admitted the university does not have the money needed for the repairs. The current study follows one completed in 1986 which found that the Amherst campus alone needed $250 million dollars worth of repairs.

Due to the state's budget crisis and the budget cuts passed on to the university system, most of these repairs have been deferred. Flores hopes to use the study to persuade the statehouse to fund the repairs.

"I could go through almost every building and show you something with every one," said Pat Daily, director of operations at the physical plant. Through their operating budget, the physical plant is able to fix some of the worst cases, but since the budget cuts began in 1989 they have not been able to keep up. Marshal Hall is is an example of an almost total failure, said Daily, "almost every thing in that building needs work." But, Marshal hall is not alone in its need of a new roof, heating system, and entrances. The Fine Arts Center, the Tower Library and Hasbrouck Hall are among the other buildings in need of expensive repairs.

The study will also look into other items in need of work throughout the UMass infrastructure. Daily said that the 26 miles of steamlines connecting the campus are in serious need of repair. With their current operating budget, the physical plant is able to service about 1,000 feet per year.

While the existing buildings have continued to deteriorate, the University has managed to secure funding for the construction of new buildings such as Mullins stadium, and the Knowles engineering building.

Gordon Oakes, chairman of the board of trustees said that money for more mundane projects is tougher to come by.

"Two entirely different pots of money," he said.

New projects are much more glamorous and visible, and are easier to obtain money for, whether from the legislature or from private citizens.

"When you go to individuals and ask them to donate money, they don't want to donate money to fix rooves."

Hasn't been much snow this year, so far. . .

BOSTON (AP) — By now, we are often up to our elbows in snow. So far, only four to eight inches of skier's gold have come down. Either we have a lot of making up to do or this season's total is again short of the 40-plus inches normally expected. Last season's sparse offerings melted away before 20.

However, nature has a way of slapping us with the harsh reality that February and March have tremendous comeback potential. A sudden gain in momentum rapidly changes the game from brownout to whiteout. February's Blizzard of 1978, March monsters and even half-foot flower busters of April and May keep New Englanders in the snow bound until the very end.

Weather patterns in the West are responsible for this season's lack of snow. Some blame abnormally warm Pacific Ocean waters, the El Nino, for this.

Storms have been plowing into California, Oregon and Washington. From there, they've dipped to the Southwest before heading across the Carolinas and out to sea. Both tracks trace the patch of upper level winds which have split into two jet streams.

More often than not, New England has wound up smack in the middle. Storms passing to out northwest bring milder air and rain. Those racing out to sea to out south throw high, thin clouds our way and snow at the Mid-Atlantic region.

Even Georgia, Mississippi and Alabama have seen the spin-off. Atlantan's have trudged through more snow than Bostonians. And wouldn't our ski areas love to claim even half the 10-foot depths of the snow covering the Rockies.

It won't happen until weather patterns in the northern hemisphere break down and regroup farther east. Nobody can guarantee this will happen, but within the next month, it is likely.

If so a large dip in one or two jet streams will develop along the eastern seaboard. High speed winds between 20,000 and 40,000 feet will whip cold air from the Dakotas to Georgia and then back north to New England. Within and beneath this upper air pattern, storms will feed moisture lifted from the warm waters of the Gulf Stream and blow into the oncoming rush or colder air.

You can get a lot more out of life when you set your sights a little higher. Which is what applying for the American Express* Card is all about. When you get the Card, it's easier to do the things you want to do. And with the student savings that come along with it, you can do even more.

Fly roundtrip on Continental for less than $100 each way.

Student Cardmembers receive four travel certificates. They can be used to fly anywhere Continental Airlines flies in the 48 contiguous United States. Two for the school year, and two for the summer.*

Depending on where you fly, each school year travel certificate is good for $129 or $189 roundtrip—and each summer travel certificate is good for $149 or $199 roundtrip.

Savings that upgrade your lifestyle.

As a student Cardmember you get more than great travel savings. You also save money on everything from clothing to long distance phone calls. All for a $55 annual fee.

Obviously, savings like these say a lot about the value of the Card. And having the Card will say a lot about you. For one thing it says you have a handle on what you spend, so you don't have to carry over a balance. It also says you're smart enough not to pay interest charges that can really add up.

Airfare examples based on destination.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

CANCER (June 21- July 22): Give family members the approval they have sought for so long. Do not take a loved one' scooperation for granted. A teen-ager asks some startling questions. Answer as honestly as you can.
LEO (July 23- Aug. 22): Forget about an abandoned project and get into the swing of things at work. Temporary family problems should be handled in private. A sibling could suggest a practical solution.
VIRGO (Aug. 23- Sept. 22): A busy day lies ahead. You hold center stage at a business or social event. If you suspect someone of trying to deceive you, ask probing questions. Stand up for your rights!
LIBRA (Sept. 23- Oct. 22): Do not worry if something is less than perfect under existing circumstances. Look to your family and friends for support and advice. Exercise care if traveling. Check travel or hotel reservations.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23- Nov. 21): This is no time for wishful thinking! At the first sign that the odds are being stacked against you, seek advice from professionals. Evening brings good news from friends at a distance.
SAGITARIUS (Nov. 22- Dec. 21): Rely on tried-and-true methods today. Behind-the-scenes activities will take up most of your time. Your buoyant enthusiasm carries you effortlessly through the day.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22- Jan. 19): Two people in love should be able to come up with a special way to celebrate their relationship. Hosting a small party need not involve a lot of work. A dream could prove prophetic.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20- Feb. 18) Concentrate on ventures that will let you build a firmer foundation for family life. Teamwork is favored. Welcome constructive suggestions from your loved ones. Even the small fry can help.
PISCES (Feb. 19- March 20): The likelihood of discord is sharply reduced when a fair monetary policy is enforced. Seek the cooperation of family members in keeping expenses down. Romance offers some interesting possibilities.
ARIES (March 21- April 19): You are unusually gullible now. Avoid making new investments. Expressing your true opinions may be difficult. Diplomacy and compromise will help you get your point across.
TAURUS (April 20- May 20): Your intuition serves you well. You have many splendid creative ideas that could boost your reputation and income. Deal with family members in a positive way. Avoid criticizing.
GEMINI (May 21- June 20): Taking the easy way is not the best answer. Rewards of past efforts are near at hand. An out-of-town visitor gives you excellent advice. Follow it to the letter.

4th-graders make omlettes at Campus Center

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

The fourth-grade students at the Leverett Elementary School certainly don't carry all of their eggs in one basket.

The 26 careful students were each given an interesting assignment while learning physics from their teacher, Nancy Gibavic: protect a raw egg from a 10-story drop.

This is one way to drop an egg ten stories without breaking it. . .

"It took three or four days to finish wrapping my egg," said Christopher Nopper, who was anxiously waiting Friday morning on the south side of the Campus Center, where University staffers helped the pupils by dropping the "eggventions" from the tenth floor of the building.

The students used many different materials to keep their fragile passengers intact. Most containers carried parachutes, made of paper, fabric or plastic.

"I wrapped it in a sandwich bag, put it into a sandwich carrier and stuffed it with styrofoam pops. Then I put it in a huge bag also filled with the styrofoam pops," Nopper said, smiling and holding the white egg up from the rest of the class to see.

Gibavic began the egg drop exercise from the roof of the Leverett school six years ago, but this was the first year the drop occured on the UMass campus. Previously, she had the students create packages for eggs which would survive a 15-foot height.

Gibavic also 'tossed' an egg, stuffing hers inside a blue-and-red stuffed toy bird. Unfortunately, the results were shattering.

"Look at my egg," she said, holding up a crushed shell and yolk inside of a sandwich bag. The egg had been nestled inside of the cotton stuffing of the toy.

. . .but Tara Biagi, who turns 10 to today, has her own ideas. . .

Liam Cone, owner of the first egg over the balcony, said he needed little over a day to wrap his egg effectively, wrapping it house insulation and bubble wrap, then placing the wrapped egg inside of a cardboard box.

Cone's box, which had a parachute attached, missed the 'landing zone' located on the Campus Center flagstones due to high winds, but still remained intact.

Before the eggs were dropped, the students were also guests of UMass physics professor John Brehm, who before the egg drop explained to the students why the eggs, unlike a tennis ball, could not withstand the fall onto the floor.

"Watching something happen is exciting, but understanding what's happening is just as exciting," Brehm said. "I hope by the end of today, you agree with me."

Donald Robinson, director of the UMass Environemtnal Health and Safety Program, coordinated the event with Brehm and Gibavic.

"Making the container for my egg was fun, but watching them come down is more exciting," said Cone.

. . .and what do you know, it works! From all of us at the Collegian, Happy Birthday Tara!

ARTS Spring 1992

FAC set for a variety packed semester

By CHRIS SHADOIAN
Collegian Staff

If you're looking for the perfect place to bring that hot date, UMass' Fine Art Center has enough events, and plenty of variety to keep your calendar full all semester long.

From violins to Voicestra, this spring's Performing Arts Series has a little bit of everything: Broadway musicals, dance productions, classical music and even rock.

It all begins this Friday — get a date, quick! — with the world renown Tokyo String Quartet. Since its origin in 1969, the quartet has received critical acclaim world over for its performances of such classical pieces as Mozart's Quartet no. 17 in B-flat Major and Beethoven's Rasumovsky, both of which will be included in Friday's program.

Unfortunately for the typical student budget ("Do you think we have enough for a movie?"), tickets are $11 ($22 for non-students). But if you feel you can do without dinner for one evening, I recommend going to this show.

On Feb. 13, the Fine Arts Center (FAC) recital hall will be graced by none other than rock/pop star, Bobby McFerrin and his ten member a cappella group, Voicestra.

McFerrin hasn't done anything that has really hit the charts since his 1988 smash, Don't Worry, Be Happy, but that, of course, is no sign of how skilled he is as an artist.

In fact, McFerrin's entirely vocally produced music belongs in a category by itself, and is one of the most original sounds in music stores. If you like anything from classical to rap, McFerrin's your man.

On the 25th, pianist Andrew Rangell will perform in Bowker Auditorium.

"[He is] one of the most striking and original musical minds of our generation," says Musical America of Rangell. Besides, his show is one of the least expensive ones this semester, with tickets for students as low as $8; less expensive, presumably, because he is less famous. But don't let that deter you — "famous" and "good" do not always belong in the same sentence.

Kodo (Feb. 28). Defined: a troupe of Japanese percussionists performing on a traditional Japanese drum, the taiko. If you want to see one great show this semester, my bets are on this one.

Of all the FAC productions I've seen, the percussion shows they've booked have been, by far, the best. They have always been alternately funny and exciting, dramatic and unbelievable. The price for students, at $12.50 a ticket, is a little higher for this show than most of the others, but if I'm guessing correctly, it will be well worth it. Do not miss this one! Repeat: Do not miss it!

Tokyo String Quartet should look like this when they make their big trip to UMass. The foursome will be performing at the Bowker Auditorium on Friday, Jan. 31.

But if your heart lies in Scotland, wait for The Gathering of the Clans, appearing March 3 in the FAC.

A sort of potpourri of performance, this Scottish historical play/dance combines singing, dancing, bag-piping and fiddling.

The Ballet Chicago follows on March 6, also in the FAC. Performances will include Ruth Page's adaptation of Der Fledermaus and Gordon Peirce Schmidt's hit, By Django.

"Meet Me in St. Louis" (March 26), a recent Broadway adaptation of the 1943 Judy Garland, Margaret O'Brien film of the same name, is a "boy-meets-girl" story set during the turn of the century.

The film was great, and it remains to be seen whether or not this production can match it, but the story and setting are the same, so the show sounds like it ought to be a good one if you can afford the $12.50 ticket.

On April 3, the dancing, singing, ISO & the Bobs will appear in the FAC, followed, on April 13, by the Shifrin, Neubauer, Vallencio Trio of classical musicians, dancer Margie Gillis (April 16), Los Folkloristas, a Latin American folk rhythms group (April 22), and violinist Joshua Bell (April 29).

So if you're looking for something to do on (or off) a date, go see the Fine Arts Center's performances. They'll definitely be better than what's on TV Friday night.

Savatage's new album a creative alternative

By CHRISTIAN ALEXANDER FOSTER
Collegian Correspondent

Are you tired of bands putting out album after album of the same straight forward style of rock? If the answer is "yes," then you'll be pleased to hear the latest album from the veteran rock group Savatage entitled, Streets: A Rock Opera.

Savatage is a group that were themselves in their early days another hard rocking band that would often touch the thrash borderline. However, their 1989 release Gutter Ballet experimented with areas of creativity very rarely seen within such a distinctive rock group. The album was successful enough to help push the band towards the mainstream of hard rock music, and put the group in a position to expand on their obvious thirsts for originality and creativity that we received a taste of in Gutter Ballet.

Streets: A Rock Opera is appropriately entitled. This latest effort from vocalist/pianist Jon Oliva, guitarist Chris Oliva, drummer Steve "Doc" Wacholz and bassist Johnny Lee Middleton is a theme album that tells the story of a character named D. T. Jesus, a reformed drug addict who had a brush with stardom in the music scene.

Within this 16 song compiliation you can hear both the distinctive thrashy rock roots of Savatage as well as their newer style of more mellow and melodic music.

The album is consequently an incredible and unique mix of newer Metallica, Queensryche's multi-dimensional style of music, and Pink Floyd — in their most mellow moments.

The success of progressive efforts such as Queensryche's Operation: Mindcrime, which also happens to be a theme album, has created a door for groups who wish for a more unique and creative style of writing; however, like Operation: Mindcrime, chances are you won't hear this album on the radio. Savatage is not a radio band by any means. They are attempting to accomplish the dream of every group, and make their breakthrough and leave a mark on the industry by doing their own thing. This difficult task has only been accomplished by a few significant groups, such as the aforementioned Queensryche, Metallica and the newer group Nirvana.

It's clear that Savatage is relying on their ability to produce talented and creative music, not radio hits, to put their name in headlines within the music scene. Like Queensryche's Operation: Mindcrime and Pink Floyd's The Wall, this album will come to be known and appericiated for its overall solid musical creativity and not its top 40 singles.

This is one of those rare albums you can listen to without having to approach your fast forward or CD skip buttons. From start to finish it is a work of incredible and enjoyable music that reflects its performers talent.

Thus every dimension of Streets: A Rock Opera from the rock- core songs of "Strange Reality" and "Jesus Saves" to the piano led, mellow songs of "A Little Too Far" and "Believe" is definitely worth checking out, and is a good investment for anyone who appreciates creative and original musical ideas.

However, if you're looking for a top 40 song or "party tune" producing album you better walk back to the Bon Jovi and Warrant sections of the record store. While Streets: A Rock Opera, produced by Paul O'Neill, will unfortunately most likely be an under-exposed album from this under rated group, as it is unattractable to the radio waves, it promises to be a top album of the new year in a new way.

Sports writer names best bars in Amherst

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

During my time in Amherst, I've realized the town offers it's residents a few things in extraordinary proportion to its population. For example there are hippies, bookstores, people who get offended by anything and everything, bands, war protesters, high rise buildings and most importantly, bars.

I had a history professor who told the class on the first day of classes that every great town needs good bookstores and good bars, and Amherst has both.

Well, I've only been to one book store so I can't say much about that, and the jury is still out on how great Amherst is, but I'll go along with the good bars.

THE BAR FLY

The Amherst bars offer cheap pitchers, familiar faces, pool tables and good specials. Nearly all the bars are good but through an informal poll, I've narrowed the field down to five favorites. This poll has a plus or minus margin of error of 100 points, but who cares.

No. 1 — Mike's Westview Cafe — Are you looking for a place where everyone knows your name, where everyone acts like themselves and the bartenders have a personality? You can find it in North Amherst at Mike's.

Long famous for it's two dollar all-you-can-eat Friday afternoon buffet, Mike's draws a crowd all week. But not too big of a crowd. Unlike certain uptown spots you can order a beer here without using any of the latest World Wrestling Federation tactics on your fellow patrons.

The crowd itself can't be stereotyped at Mike's. Both townies and students are present and there is a good racial mix. Basically, everyone feels comfortable. There is a refreshing lack of phoniness, the patrons here come to be themselves.

A good kitchen, two billiards tables, pinball games, a big screen TV and the best jukebox around help to keep you entertained. The staff led by Tommy, Alpo and Rich is top notch.

Despite being off the bus route Mike's is a very popular place. The bar is reflective of it's customers, it doesn't try to be anything it isn't. It is simply Mike's and it is No. 1.

No. 2 — Twisters Tavern — The top spot uptown. Twisters is another place which is difficult to stereotype. It offers live bands of all kinds and dancing on many nights, but it still remains much of a sports bar.

Not only does it carry all the University of Massachusetts Basketball games on television but Coach John Calipari and his assistants are there after most home games.

It is rare, to say the least, to have a Division 1 basketball coach go out to a local bar after a game. I just can't see Dean Smith or Bobby Knight going out after a big game so they can hang out with the fans. Of course there may not be a place like Twisters in Chapel Hill, N.C. or Bloomington, Ind.

Twisters does attract some older adults but most of the customers are students. Unfortunately, a few too many students call Amherst College home.

In the Spring the patio gets opened up and patrons are allowed to drink under the moonlight. Twisters is a quality bar with a little something for everyone.

No. 3 — Michael's Billiard's and Sports Bar — A great place to hang out. The atmosphere is laid back and quiet. You can actually talk to your friends without screaming.

Michael's offers free billiards, a half dozen or so televisions, good pinball and the Hunan Garden next store in case you need a quick dose of Chinese food.

If you want to watch sports, this is the best place. When I say watching, I mean paying attention, not just having the game on in the background. As expected sports talk abounds at Michael's.

Michael's is a big Bruins hang out but basketball or football can usually claim a TV or two.

Everyone can feel comfortable here. There isn't a stereotypical patron, like Mike's Westview, all types come here. Micheal's is a little bit off the beaten path but it is well worth the trip.

No. 4 — Delanos — The quintessential college bar. Nearly everyone is a student, there are good prices, a good mix of music and the place has a friendly atmosphere to it.

Delanos' is very popular amongst the fraternity and sorority crowd. Although all types of students can feel comfortable there. This bar attracts a crowd nearly every night of the week and Sunday nights is very popular due the presence of a very good acoustical group.

The bar itself is small so an acoustical group may be the only type of live entertainment possible at Delanos.

If you can get a table at Delanos your evening will be a better one, especially if a big crowd rolls in later. If the crowd comes in, Delanos can get awful hot but few seem to care. It is generally a very fun place to hang out and meet people.

Delanos has its regulars and rightfully so. It is one of the better uptown bars.

No. 5 — The Pub — Everyone's favorite place to take their family for dinner when their parents are picking up the bill. The Pub on a weekend night is kind of like a big off campus party. A little too crowded, a little too much hairspray, a little too much disco music but still you end up having a good time.

The Pub is a great place to meet people and there is plenty to do from dancing to billiards to just hanging out in a booth.

New label, Red Baron begins with Ellington

Release 1960 set, Hot Summer Dance

By SEMAJ SELOM
Collegian correspondent

Those familiar with the jazz scene will immediately recognize the name Bob Thiele, the man behind the great albums of John Coltrane and Archie Shepp and other for the Impulse! label during the 1960s. Well, Thiele is back in business, producing a new label, Red Baron, a division of Sony Music. Red Baron's first release is comprised of four CDs, three with contemporary personnel, and one a previously unreleased set of music from Duke Ellington's orchestra.

Starting with the Ellington, Hot Summer Dance is a recording made of Ellington and his band during the summer of 1960. Johnny Hodges, Russel Procope, Sam Woodyard, Paul Gonsalves and the Ellington song book — "Take the 'A' Train," "Diminuendo and Crescendo in Blue," "Satin Doll," and more.

Ellington and his men were famous for the vitality and freshness that they brought each night to these "standards" which they played countless times. This date is no exception. Ellington's opening introduction on "Take the 'A' Train" is indicative of the myriad of ways that he and his side players would interpret their music.

Also of special note is Gonsalves' solo on "Diminuendo," the tune which Gonsalves made famous with his "Wailing Interval" at the Newport Jazz Festival, which he adds to here with another wonderfully swinging jazz performance.

In addition to the Ellington, the other three albums are equally enticing, particularly the two which feature tenor saxophonist David Murray. Murray's career has been itching to take off, and these two dates may just give Murray his due. On 44th Street Suite, Murray joins forces with McCoy Tyner, Arthur Blythe, Ron Carter and Aaron Scott. Their rendition of Coltrane's "Bessie's Blues" is quite remarkable. Its free-wheeling nature yet serious undertone is unprecedented, accentuated by the clear, bright tones of Murray's tenor and Blythe's alto saxophone. On Sunrise, Sunset, John Hicks, Cecil McBee and Andrew Cyrille form the rhythm section for Murray while performing well known tunes "Round Midnight," "Old Folks," "You Don't Know What Love Is," and more. They give each a subtle and considerate treatment proving that there really is no such thing as a "standard."

Rounding out the release is Memories of Louis, featuring the vocals of Teresa Brewer and the trumpets of Dizzy Gillespie, Wynton Marsalis, Clark Terry, Terence Blanchard, Freddie Hubbard and others at various points on the album. Tribute albums can sometimes tend to be a bit stale, as an artists' work is performed without much life, but not here. The arrangements are tasteful, the singing entertaining, and with rhythm players such as John Hicks, Kenny Barron, Grady Tate, and Milt Hinton, the album has an air of experienced vitality which helps to compliment the entire group of albums.

The Red Baron label has started strong, Thiele certainly hasn't lost his ear for good music, and we look anxiously for more.

New cookbook serves up food that kills you

The Bad For You Cookbook
Chris Maynard and Bill Scheller
Villard Books

This is just what we need to start a new semester off right. If thoughts of heavy, tasteless dinners in the DCs are racing through your nightmares, the only cure for you is this new book released Jan. 27, The Bad For You Cookbook. As the book says, "It shows you how to cook like Mom did — before we found out her cooking could kill."

With the frighteningly cold days we've been having this winter who couldn't use, "enough butter, cream, or oil in every recipe to add precious fat to your bones for the long cold winters."

Not only does this book have great, heavy recipes sure to anchor you to your chair worse than any Thanksgiving extravaganza, it also has a cute centerfold section entitled, "stupid food tricks."

This book is definitely worth the investment, even if you hate to cook, it delivers a chuckle a page. It's a tad corny, of course, but it's a refreshing change to read something encouraging you to throw out your vitamins and sit in front of the TV with a nice warm mug of "killer nog."

"KILLER NOG": 10 eggs, 1/3 cup sugar (powdered or super fine), 1 quart heavy cream, 1 750- milliliter bottle of cognac, 1 1/2 cups rum, 2 cups milk, and freshly ground nutmeg.

Beat eggs until foamy. Beat yolks in a separate bowl until they drip from the beater in a thick, bright yellow ribbon (this recipe is suitable for military homecomings). Pour egg white mixture into the yolks and beat with electric mixer about 3 mins. Beat the cream until it holds soft peaks. With mixer at medium speed, slowly add the beaten egg mixture, then cognac, rum, and milk. Garnish with nutmeg and chill four hours.

Katina's is dead: long live the Vertex

By DAVID DEMERJIAN
Collegian Staff

Folks driving down route 9 in Hadley may have noticed some recent changes in one of the area's most popular nightclubs, Katina's. For starters, Katina's has changed it's name. Katina's is now "The Vertex Nightclub," and with the new name came other interesting changes as well.

A new parking lot, which can comfortably accomodate over two hundred cars, has just been opened next to Acme Barbeque and Campus Pizza. This new lot costs nothing to park in, and promises to end many of the parking headaches for which the old Katina's was famous. Although the lot is only two minutes away from the club, The Vertex will be providing free shuttle busses to take passengers between the club and the parking area. Security personnel will monitor the new lot at all times. In addition to these changes, The Vertex has also undergone an interior remodelling. It not only features a new decor but has also been enlarged.

While there have been many changes made to the club over intersession, some things will remain the same. For one, the entertainment format will not change. The Vertex, like Katina's before it, will feature Selectrocution Dance nights and live music of Fridays and Sundays.

"The club will still cater to a variety of music tastes," said Gina Lee, manager at The Vertex. In the past semester, the club featured such bands as Prong, Overkill, and the Galactic Cowboys.

As in the past, The Vertex will also strictly enforce it's admission and alcohol policy of 18 to enter and 21 to drink. No one will be allowed into the club without a valid ID.

The changes have been made to keep old patrons coming back to the club and to attract new ones. While the recession has affected many nightspots in the area, Vertex management claims that this was not a major factor in the new image.

"We really just wanted to give the place a facelift, we felt it was time for a change. The economy didn't have that much to do with it," said Lee.

Mr. Lupo reviews the big, big movies

Robin Williams, here seen with Julie Kavner in Awakenings, currently stars as Peter Pan in the movie Hook along with Dustin Hoffman (Captain Hook) and Julia Roberts (Tinkerbell).

By JON LUPO
Collegian Staff

Sometime after finals and through the January doldrums, Hollywood released its trump cards: Oscar hopefuls, a big budget star-studded Speilberg adventure, easy comedies, one hell of a controversy, and other assorted nonsense. The verdicts are in:

The Box Office

Bugsy: Director Barry Levinson (Rainman) has crafted a superior, multi-layered film that's both sad, funny, and entertaining.

Bugsy finally proves that Warren Beatty can act, and, as Benjamin "Bugsy" Seigel, proves he can carry a film as well. A witty and telling script that defines the later life of star-dazed gangster Seigel, who travels to Hollywood for a four night stay and dreams up the neon lights of Las Vegas, the Flamingo Hotel.

Seigel is paired with a tough starlet Virginia Hill (Annette Bening). Beatty and Bening ignite with chemistry, and no wonder, since Bening recently gave birth to the couple's first child.

Don't miss this great film, a smooth and sophisticated comedy-drama that's sure to be a healthy Oscar contender. Grade: A

Father of the Bride: An easygoing, happily predictable family farce starring Steve Martin as a harried father preparing for his only daughter's wedding. He's worried about the cost ("It's going to cost the four of us $1,000 to attend this wedding in our own house!") and about losing his daughter.

Father of the Bride isn't hilarious, but it's generally likable and amusing. Martin coolly anchors the film, and newcomer Kimberly Williams is fine as the blushing bride; however, Diane Keaton just walks around yelling at Martin to calm down. Not exactly a supporting performance. Annoying as well is Martin Short, who plays an obnoxious wedding coordinator, whose idea of comedic improvisation is an unintelligible accent and some poofy hair.

It's all nice and sitcom-ish with a sweet ending. Since when have we seen a nice, happily adjusted family in the movies? Grade: B-

Grand Canyon: An ambitious and somewhat pretentious drama starring Kevin Kline, Steve Martin, Danny Glover, and Mary McDonnell. Their friendships, families and connections are explored through long monologues, deep conversations, dream sequences and recurring images.

The scope of this film is so awesome, that it never does any part justice. The "messages" so often miss the mark, that for every true scene, there're a bunch of duds. Grand Canyon tries to say so many things that it ends up saying nothing much at all. One is left with the feeling that something happened.

Director Lawrence Kasdan (The Big Chill) steers a stellar cast filled with rich performances. But why did I get the feeling even the actors had no clue what they were saying much of the time?

Grand Canyon should be given credit for squeezing in double-digit plots and its stirring images, but the jarring style makes it look as though it was made up as it went along. Grade: B-

The Hand that Rocks the Cradle: A convoluted, tepid, but guilty pleasure of a movie that's effectively creepy, if not altogether scary.

Rebecca De Mornay plays a vengeful nanny who slowly rips apart the family of a woman (Annabella Sciorra) she believes is responsible for her husband's suicide and her miscarriage.

This film is being touted as comparable to Fatal Attraction, an unfair judgment since The Hand that Rocks the Cradle is right out of Thriller 101. Things are so obviously set up in the beginning to be useful later, like Sciorra's asthma or the greenhouse, that one knows what's coming. It's the type of movie where the villain's true identity can be deduced by the heroine going to the library and looking at old newspapers on the microfiche machine. It's all creepy fun, however, watching De Mornay infiltrate the family, all with a eerie, plastic grin on her face.

You may not be scared, but you won't fall asleep, either. Grade: C

Hook: Some critics have been having a dandy time denouncing this film as a washout, but the fact is, while its not Indiana Jones, Hook is an enjoyable, fun fantasy. It's filled with energetic performances by Robin Williams as a grown-up Peter Pan and Dustin Hoffman as a brilliantly unrecognizable Captain Hook. Even Julia Roberts is okay as Tinkerbell, even with her squeaky voice. Gloriously fake sets and special effects combine with the cornball sentiments for a great ride. Many critics cite "Hook's" lack of a soul. With a movie this fun, who cares about soul? Grade: B+

The Last Boy Scout: Sorry, Bruce Willis, three strikes and you're out. Too bad he dragged down Damon Wayans ("In Living Color") with him. This movie is so bad it gives bad buddy cop movies respect. A mix of too stupid-its-funny dialogue, cliched villains, and unbelievable action scenes. At one point, both Willis and Wayans tell each other their tragedies, it comes off as embarrassingly comic. Movies this bad can sometimes be fun, take "Ricochet" for example, but "The Last Boy Scout" is too bad to anything but bad. Grade: D-

Steve Martin, seen here in L.A. Story, plays a very nervous father of the bride in the cleverly named comedy Father of the Bride. Although he says Martin is good, Mr. Lupo gives the movie only a B-.

Roxxi re-emerges on the music scene

Touring with new record material

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

A timid fan approaches the bar and asks, "Are you that same band Roxxi with the album Drive It to Ya Hard?" It's Jan. 19 at The Vertex, and Blind Tyger and Roxxi are opening for Britny Fox.

"Yeah," says drummer and background vocalist for Roxxi, Tony Giustino, with one of his customary, mischievous smirks. As Tony runs a hand through his shaggy, dark hair his kooky Kung Fu watch from Radio Shack catches the light.

"Cool. I have this poster. . ." the fan returns a couple minutes later with a poster for Tony and the other band members to autograph.

"What's a Blind Tyger? Is that like a Def Leppard?" the band members joke about the opening band from Springfield, whose best sounds came when the lead vocalist's microphone shut off or when the drummer sang.

This is Roxxi's second time at The Vertex. They are not commercial as so many reviewers try to pigeon hole them; they are professional. They even managed to elicit screams and actual movement from the fans, which of course is no small feat for an opening band.

From Tony's perpetual grin while he plays the drums to Fred's smile to Rich's energy to Bob's mellow stance this band exudes charisma and a polished, heavy sound.

When asked how it feels to finally be signing autographs for fans Tony replies, "It' like 'phew' every time. We don't want people to forget us." Not too long after Roxxi's first album began getting some serious attention, creative differences forced Tony and lead vocalist Fred Grasseschi left to keep Roxxi's name afloat.

Rumor has it that there are a couple of big record labels interested in their next album, Primal Instincts. Their performance on the 19th was being videotaped so that the vice president of one label could be sure that this up and coming Boston band sound as good live as they do on tape.

Roxxi's video aired on MTV's Headbanger's Ball, and it was nominated in the Boston Music Awards. They have been retired as Champs on WAAF's Rock Wars Hall of Fame. Roxxi is on Z-Rock and the Syndicated Metalshop. They've been written up in Powerline, Metal Explosion, Tough Tracks, FMQB, The Angle, Circus, Billboard, and more.

A dramatic change in their style and sound occurred with their member change. For Tony, "It's more thinking music. I'm also doing back-up vocals now. The stuff is so much better now. You'll see tonight. We've been together for six months. It's all really brand new — it's not like we will be playing the old stuff and we rehashed it."

"The new material is a lot heavier and a lot more groove oriented. It's a different animal now: funky groove rock but it's still got hooks," says Rich Chamberland, the new lead guitarist.

The band is very excited about their new three song demo tape which was engineered by Bob St. John, the same man who engineered Extreme's last album.

The highlights of Roxxi's performance were "Rumors," "Sin City," "Inch by Inch," and a powerful, driving remake of the Beatles/Aerosmith "Come Together." Roxxi turned out a wild version of "Communication Breakdown" which was heavy enough to make the audience squint with excitement.

The band also played a bluesy 70s type of tune, "Poor Man's Tale" which holds a lot of meaning for Roxxi.

Members of the band Roxxi, Fred Grasseschi and Rich Chamberland perform for an all ages show at The Vertex.

New lead singer for Britny Fox, Tommy Paris, entertained at The Vertex on Jan. 19.

"It's like us. The guy in the song is searching for something all of his life — something he wants — and he'll die doing it. That is everyone's attitude in the band. We love playing and we'll die doing it," says Tony.

This same commitment is a palpable bond that ties the group together, along with a lot of support from their family and friends.

"My mother comes to 99.9 percent of the shows," says Tony.

"We all get along. We're really close. It's weird because a lot of bands don't hang out together and we do," Rich, a graduate of the Guitar Institute of Technology (G.I.T.) in Los Angeles. He has been taught by such pros as Jennifer Batten (who went on to play for Michael Jackson on his tour), Bruce Boulet and Steve Trevado.

Rich and Fred grew up together and when Fred found out that Rich was back on the East Coast, he called him up right away to replace one of the old members.

Bob Armstrong, the new bassist, has been playing for six years. Happy with the new arrangement, Bob has said, "Everyone in this band is a great musician. This is a really tight band. Everyone has their priorities straight and we know what direction we want to go in."

Fred laughs when noting the contributions that Bob has made to the band, "Yeah, now we have a blonde bimbo in the band - playing bass." The band's sense of fun and general sense of humor is catchy.

Rich calls Roxxi's new sound, which he and Bob helped to create, as "primal groove with a swing twist."

The new mixture was potent enough to elicit a "Hey, keep that up. Don't change a thing," from the band members of Britny Fox.

"What we have here is a combo that really works. When we play live we could drive nails through boards. It's loud, it's in your face, it's raw and it's real," says Rich.

When I tried to get the band to talk more about where they are going from here, Rich superstitiously confided, "We have a lot of irons in the fire. When you talk about it you jinx it." So I guess we'll have to let it go at that.

Roxxi will continue playing the club circuit, and hopefully land a record deal soon. Until then, they will continue cracking jokes and playing more "primal groove" with a swing twist better than any of the up and coming bands I know.

A roundup of the local music scene

Jabberwocky speaks

By BRIAN HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

Welcome back readers. Though this columnist took a well deserved vacation during intersession, the music scene in this area remained particularly active and there are a few developments worth mentioning.

For many years local music people talked about the idea of releasing a compilation album of area bands in order to promote the number of successful working bands in this area and reflect the diversity of the music they encompass.

Jabberwocky

Last year this project came to fruitation when the newly created JAMA Disc recording label in Northampton perceived that there was a local market for such a product. This was based upon the success many local bands had in marketing their own self-produced cassettes. JAMA Disc co-founders David Beaupre and John Livermore spent many months garnering the bands, getting the contracts signed, selecting the cuts, mastering the compilation tape and pressing it into CD format.

The project was held up for some time when Beaupre and Livermore dissolved their partnership, and there were also delays due to technical problems in the pressing of the CD's, but the long awaited local band compilation has finally been released and is available in local record stores.

Titled Big Fish in a Little Sea the JAMA Disc compilation showcases many of the area's top acts, including Sebadoh (featuring ex Dino Jr. member Lou Barlow), Who's Kiddin' Who, Free Press, Pajama Slave Dancers, Gobblehoof, Farmhouse, Ray Manson, and Rockin' Dave and the Rent Party to name just a few.

If you want to get a good grasp of what is happening on the music scene in this area then Big Fish in a Little Sea is definitely worth adding to your CD collection. Look for a more in-depth review of Big Fish in a Little Sea in a future Jabberwocky column.

On the subject of JAMA Disc, they have also released long awaited albums by the Big Bad Bollocks and Oat Pearl. The Big Bad Bollocks CD has been selling quite well, and they are now planning to record their second album for JAMA Disc. The word is that a major indie label in N.Y.C. is considering picking up the Big Bad Bollocks album for European distribution.

If you like the Pogues and the Waterboys and the rest of that genre then I strongly urge you to go out and buy the Bollock's CD, and don't forget to bring home some Guiness with it. According to singer/songwriter John Allen, the band is also planning an extensive U.K. tour for sometime in July.

I received a postcard this past month from those darlings in Flower-Thief who have been quite busy over their college break on a self-promoted tour through the South. Some of the cities they hit include Memphis, TN; Athens, GA; Austin, TX; Little Rock, AR; and Washington, D.C. They finished up at The Speakeasy in N.Y.C. on Jan. 22. Quite impressive.

The Big Bad Bollocks' "Hanged at Gibet Rock" on JAMA Disc records is the top selling local release in the happy Valley. JAMA Disc has also recently released a new album by Oat Pearl and a compilation titled "Big Fish in a Little Sea," featuring, among others, Sebadoh, Who's Kiddin' Who, Free Press, Pajama Slave Dancers, Gobblehoof, Farmhouse, Ray Manson and Rockin' Dave and the Rent Party.

They have T-shirts and a cassette EP which will be available for sale when they get back to this area.

If you really want to go out to a happening place, try attending the Blue Mondays over at Sheehan's Cafe in Northampton. There is no cover and you'll find Ed Vadas and the Fabulous Heavyweights holding an all-star blues session to the delight of patrons.

You may have noticed while driving on Route 9 that there is a new sign where the Katina's sign used to be. In keeping with the fashion of Boston clubs, Katina's owner Tony Paitaris and manager Mike Perkins have changed the name of the club to Vertex.

The music format will remain the same, so those of you who are fans of the Sunday metal-fests can relax. What Vertex has added is a new shuttlebus to bring club goers to and from additional parking located down the street at the Campus Pizza complex. This is to insure safety for club customers in the aftermath of a tragic fatal accident this past July in which a patron was struck and killed by a hit-and-run driver while crossing Route 9 from Katina's to the Mt. Farms Mall parking lot across the street.

As can be expected, selectmen in Hadley have delayed approval of the name change for technical reasons surrounding the establishment's license. Here's to hoping that everything goes smoothly.

Another welcome change in clubland is the opening of Hot Shots in Northampton. Open just a few weeks the club is already doing a brisk business on weekends. Hot Shots is located on Pleasant Street (Rte. 5) down near the I-91 exit and they are across the street from the Northampton Bowl. One student I spoke with described the place in one word, "Incredible!".

Hot Shots features a real basketball court where patrons can play hoop, almost a dozen pool tables, air hockey, and other sports games. The dance floor is in the form of a boxing ring and I am told that there are plans to have occasional live music. Hot Shots features a full dinner and luncheon menu and I am also informed that the people who work there are friendly, the food is good, and the prices are reasonable. This looks like a new hangout.

Be on the lookout for a new blues publication called Lucille's Blues Letter which will be out on the streets and distributed free in area stores sometime in February.

The newsletter is a labor of love by WMUA blues jockey Lisa Danforth and it will feature articles, reviews, concert updates, interviews, etc. about the blues. The publication is targeted towards the thriving local blues scene and the many people in this area who share a mutual respect and appreciation of this truly great American music form.

Getting a booth can be the key to an evening at the Pub and since most are filled by 9:30 you better get there early. With a booth comes nacho chips (very good) and a waitress, who enables you to get a drink without getting crushed going to the bar.

The Pub can get so crowded sometimes you think you're at a European soccer match in Liverpool, England.

The Pub has only one TV, which is a drawback, but most people are there to dance. The music really isn't for me but it seems to float most patrons collective boat, so who am I to criticize Vanilla Ice?

During the week, the Pub can be pretty dead, but from Thursday to Sunday, it is uptown's most popular place.

Although this bar isn't always for me, it is a nice change of pace, and it can be fun if you're in that type of mood.

Minutemen make headlines over break

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

In John Calipari's three-plus years at the University of Massachusetts, he has never experienced as busy or as successful an intersession as this past one.

Anybody who didn't know about the UMass basketball team, knows about them now, as for one week, the Minutemen were one of the 25 elite teams in the country.

The first semester ended in disappointment, when the Minutemen lost at George Washington for the 14th year in a row, 77-65. However, from there, things got interesting.

Scott Drapeau, predicted by many to be a star at UMass before he graduated, transferred to New Hampshire College, a Div. II school. That may well be — and would definitely have been the low point of the break had the Minutemen not faltered at home against West Virginia, two days after being ranked 25th by the Associated Press.

As for the high point — no doubt it was a rout of then 14th-ranked Oklahoma in front of a national television audience and a sold out Springfield Civic Center.

Since press time, the Minutemen took a 15-3 record into last Saturday night's game against Duquesne.

Here's what else you may have missed...

MASSACHUSETTS 98, HARVARD 63

SPRINGFIELD — Thirteen days after the Minutemen lost their Atlantic 10 opener at George Washington, they returned to action in the Springfield Civic Center for the first round of the Abdow's Hall of Fame Classic against a Harvard team that was not very good.

The Crimson (0-9) jumped out to a quick 6-0 lead before the Minutemen (9-2) shook off the rust and went on a 24-9 run. Harvard scored the next eight points, but the Minutemen tightened their defense and finished the half with 9 unanswered points to go up 33-23 at the break.

In the second half, the Minutemen went to their inside game, where Harper Williams (12 points, 11 rebounds) and Lou Roe (15 points) outmuscled the Crimson big men. Add a game-high 19 points from Jerome Malloy (16 in the second half), 14 from Jim McCoy, 13 from Tony Barbee and 10 from William Herndon, and the Minutemen cruised to an easy 35-point win.

The real story of this game was the UMass defense, forcing eight steals and 26 Crimson turnovers which resulted in 37 UMass points.

UMass freshman guard Mike Williams, who had played so well in the team's first 10 games, was benched for violating undisclosed team rules.

MASSACHUSETTS 73, IOWA STATE 53

SPRINGFIELD — The University of Massachusetts followed up a strong defensive effort with an even stronger one, the next night, as it drubbed Iowa State 73-53 in front of 5,707 Civic Center fans, to capture its second-straight Hall of Fame Classic title.

> "We can't play better defensively than we did tonight."
> — John Calipari, after the Iowa State game.

The Minutemen put on a defensive exhibition, holding high-scoring Iowa State to just 33 percent shooting and a meager 53 points. Jim McCoy unveiled the defensive part of his game we have rarely seen — and it was impressive. McCoy, held Iowa State's leading scorer Justus Thigpen to just 10 points, while scoring 14 himself.

The methodical Minuteman offense connected on 56 percent of its shots and turned a 10-point halftime lead into a 20-point win. Leading by 15, the Minutemen ran off 16 unanswered points, to open up a 67-36 lead.

Harper Williams (8 points, 10 rebounds) was named the Tournament's Most Valuable Player for the second year in a row, while William Herndon (11-for-12 from the floor for the tourney) and Tony Barbee (13 points) were each named to the All-Tournament Team.

MASSACHUSETTS 86, OKLAHOMA 73

SPRINGFIELD — This one was fun. The 14th ranked team in the nation came to town, big, bad Oklahoma from the Big 8. They were supposed to walk all over UMass. John Calipari was quoted as saying before the game, "We're just hoping to get the ball over half court."

> "They simply outplayed us in every phase of the game."
> — Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs, after his team lost its first game of the season.

When it was over, Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs was singing the praises of the Minutemen.

Jim McCoy held Brent Price to just 4 points on 1 of 7 shooting, while Damon Patterson was held 14 points below his 26-point average.

The Minutemen shot 55 percent for the game and got a big dunk from William Herndon in the first half and another from Lou Roe (13 points) in the second, both which brought the capacity (8,469) crowd to its feet.

UMass led by as many as 21 in the second half and would have won by as many as 30 if not for Bryan Sallier's 30-point effort.

WEST VIRGINIA 76, MASSACHUSETTS 75

Just as quickly as the University of Massachusetts had moved into the Top 25, it moved out.

West Virginia came to a revved up Curry Hicks Cage and shocked the Minutemen 76-75. UMass came out flat in the first half and trailed 37-26 at the intermission.

The Minutemen got as close as 2, but never could climb the hump, as the Mountaineers ran back-pick after back-pick for uncontested layups. Pervires Greene led West Virginia with 15 points, while Chris Leonard and Ricky Robinson added 14 apiece.

> "Today it was ugly. Now we are going to work. We are not going to have time to think about rankings or polls."
> — John Calipari after the West Virginia loss.

William Herndon did his best to keep UMass in it, with some routine (for Herndon) dunks, but it was not enough as the clock ran out after Tony Barbee hit a trey to bring UMass within 1.

Jim McCoy became the first player in UMass history to score 2,000 points, but said afterward, he'd rather have won.

MASSACHUSETTS 84, BOSTON UNIVERSITY 82

BOSTON — When Robert Bailey's potential game winning heave caromed off the backboard, onto the rim and off, University of Massachusetts' guards Anton Brown and Mike Williams were walking off the court with their hands in the air.

Each realized they were lucky to win this one and each hit two critical, game-on-the-line free throws to preserve an 84-82 UMass win.

Down 79-66 with 3:31 remaining, BU started throwing up shots that had no right to go in. But a not-so-funny thing happened, the shots were falling and the 13-point lead was diminishing.

BU's Dan Delgardo (27 points) hit three shots from International Waters, all of which nearly hit the ceiling in the final 1:55.

While all of this was going on, UMass was floundering. The Minutemen scored just 5 points in the final 3:31, all on free throws.

Jim McCoy had his best offensive game of the season, racking up 24 points on 11-for-20 shooting.

> "A little Italian on the rim kicked the ball out."
> — John Calipari, on BU's potential game-winning 3-pointer.

MASSACHUSETTS 88, GEORGE WASHINGTON 80

The long awaited rematch between George Washington and the University of Massachusetts was a snoozer. Neither team played all that well, but the Minutemen were good enough to pull out an 88-80 win in front of a capacity crowd at the Cage.

UMass got a career-high 27 points from Harper Williams and 21 from Jim McCoy to post their first conference win of the season.

The Minutemen built a 17-point lead with just over seven minutes to play. And for the second game in a row, they nearly blew it at the end. GW kept fouling and UMass kept missing one out of two. However, in this instance it was good enough.

Dirkk Surles (24 points) paced the Colonials who dropped to 9-4, 2-1 in the A-10.

MASSACHUSETTS 72, RHODE ISLAND 59

KINGSTON, R.I. — Lou Roe did not play. Jim McCoy was listed as questionable. Anton Brown was doubtful, as was William Herndon. The three seniors played and UMass played its best game since Oklahoma, gutting out a 72-59 win, which was not as close as the score indicates.

The Minutemen displayed a running game not seen all year, which enabled them to open up a 35-15 halftime lead. Rhode Island on the other hand could do nothing right. They did not hit a shot from the perimeter until the second half.

Tony Barbee (14 points) played inspired ball, dishing out pretty passes and nailing 4 of 5 3-point shots.

Once again, at the end, the Rams managed to climb back within shouting distance, due to UMass' inability to hit its free throws. For the game, the Minutemen were a paltry 11-for-27 from the stripe, including an 0-for-6 effort from McCoy (10 points).

Jerome Malloy (13 points) played a solid game, and Derek Kellogg gave the Minutemen some much needed minutes in the end after Brown (knee) could not continue with 13 minutes left and Mike Williams getting sick during the middle of the game.

MASSACHUSETTS 91, ST. JOSEPH'S 66

The Minutemen (15-3) blew open a 35-27 halftime lead, by scoring 56 points in the second half, en route to an easy 91-66 victory over St. Joseph's (9-7) in Philadelphia.

Jim McCoy led four UMass scorers in double figures with 24 points, as the Minutemen earned their third conference win of the year.

Drapeau leaves Minuteman basketball team

Scott Drapeau, a former forward for the University of Massachusetts basketball team, finishes off a dunk earlier this season.

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

While most students packed their bags to go home for winter break, the members of the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team readied themselves for the biggest month in the program's history.

Except Scott Drapeau.

He joined the rest and headed for home. For good.

Drapeau, a 6-foot-7, 225-pound freshman, withdrew from the University after his first semester, citing a lack of playing time and homesickness.

"I left because I felt I deserved more playing time," Drapeau, who averaged 9.8 minutes per game in five of the Minutemen's 10 contests, said last week.

Ten days after his departure from the Amherst campus, the Concord, NH resident, who was selected as Mr. Basketball in the state of New Hampshire last year, decided to enroll at New Hampshire College, ranked seventh in the NCAA Div. II Poll at press time.

When asked about the original reports of his leaving because of his desire to be closer to home, Drapeau said, "That's part of it, but mostly because of playing time. At the time, I didn't want to start any conflicts."

UMass coach John Calipari said he tried to convince Drapeau to stay and when he couldn't, approached him about helping Drapeau transfer to another Div. I school.

"I'm disappointed for Scott Drapeau," Calipari said. "He was a big part of this team. I was unable to convince him and his parents that he was making a bad move. So, I even tried to help him out and find another Division I school, even possibly a Big East school."

But Drapeau, who said he didn't have any bad feelings after leaving UMass, had his mind made up that he wanted to return home and play at NHC, only 20 minutes from his home.

"I like it a lot," said Drapeau, who is averaging 5.8 points, 6.3 rebounds and 17 minutes in four games for NHC. "People can come see me play when they want to.

"Leaving [UMass] is not something I regret. I just wish them the best of luck. They'll do fine without me."

By transferring to a Div. II school, Drapeau isn't required to sit out a year of playing time as mandated by the NCAA in Div. I.

NHC head coach Stan Spirou said Drapeau is fitting in with the team, but it's going to take him time to adjust to the team's system.

"It's going to take him awhile," Spirou said of Drapeau, who is playing mostly at the post position. "He's definitely capable, talent-wise, but there's a lot of pressure on him because the expectations are so high."

Drapeau, who was a four-year All-State selection at Merrimack Valley High School where he averaged 21 points and 19 rebounds as a senior, had a season-high 10 points in UMass' season opener against Siena College and had 9 points and 12 rebounds against the University of New Hampshire.

Swimmers fall to 4-8

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Kiri Binning's three school records weren't enough to lift the University of Massachusetts women's swim team to victory over Providence College in a triangular meet at Rhode Island, Jan. 18-19. Providence, which was able to capture first place finishes in 12 of the meet's 16 events, was victorious, 162-136. However, the Minutewomen easily defeated Rhode Island, 208-72.

Binning, a transfer from the University of Queensland, Australia, broke her own school record from last year in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 1 minute, 1.46 seconds. She also broke her previous marks in the 200 individual medley (2:11.46) and the 200 backstroke (2:08.45).

Continuing her dominance of the Northeast in the diving events was Allison White. White was the meet's top performer in the one meter, scoring 353.65 points, and was the runner-up on the three meter (387.55).

UMass' only other top finisher was Kim Morin in the 50 freestyle. She led the field with a time of 25.70.

Other top performers for the Minutewomen were Jen Sheehan in the 200 freestyle, Barbara Banks in the 200 backstroke and Lori Shehan, who swam to a personal best time of 2:05.31 in the 200 freestyle.

The Minutewomen, 4-8 in head-to-head competition at press time, kicked off the new year by swimming to 13 personal best times in a decisive home victory over Northeastern, 156-144, Jan. 9.

However, they dropped a 166-134 decision to Boston College four days later.

Binning once again led UMass as her time of 4:40.98 in the 400 individual medley at Boston College broke the four-year school record of 4:42.15 set by Michelle Leary. Binning was also victorious at BC in the 200 backstroke and was UMass' top finisher in the 1000 freestyle.

White's score of 209.78 points in the one-meter diving competition at BC qualified her for the postseason Eastern Championships.

"Our attitudes are up," said UMass coach Bob Newcomb, who's team is preparing for the postseason New England Championships at Boston College, Feb. 7-9. "We just need to get out of January."

Gymnasts drop opener

Marshall wins all-around at Florida

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Despite Tammy Marshall's win in the all-around competition, the University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics squad fell to the University of Florida, a perennial gymnastics powerhouse, 190.7-183.55 on Jan. 17 at the O'Connell Center in Gainesville.

Marshall, who edged out Florida's Melissa Kutcher by five one-hundredths of a point, was the meet's top performer in the vault with a score of 9.8, and tied Kutcher for first on the floor exercise by matching her 9.8. The junior from Hicksville, NY, who qualified for the World University Games last year, also placed second on the balance beam with a score of 9.75.

Florida took positions two through four in the all-around. In the fifth spot was UMass' Kim Grady, who scored a 36.55, followed by Margaret Furtado in sixth (36.3), who scored a 9.2 in her new floor routine and was fifth in the balance beam.

"Tammy started the season just where she left off last year," said UMass coach Alfie Mitchell, who also explained that Marshall performed the same routine at the Nationals, with the exception of a minor addition to her floor exercise.

"Margaret is very consistent and Kim is very strong," Mitchell said. "As a team, we should do well."

Mitchell, who believes he has the best team in his four years of coaching the Minutewomen, has aspirations of the team cracking the national Top 20.

All members from last year's squad, which finished third in the Atlantic 10 Championships, return.

"We're stronger than last year and we've increased our difficulty," he said. "Our main goal is to win the A-10."

The Minutewomen hit the road for three consecutive meets and then return to Amherst for their season opener against Southern Connecticut at 1 p.m., Feb. 15.

Men's gymnastics surprises Navy Midshipmen

The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team had a tough task ahead of itself as it hosted Navy, a team it hadn't beaten in more than a decade, in its first competition of the new year.

However, the Minutemen surprised the favored Midshipmen and came out ahead, 266.65-256.0.

UMass jumped out to an early lead after the first event, the floor exercise, as it captured the top four positions for a 45.85-41.30 advantage.

"The first event set the tone of the meet," said UMass coach Roy Johnson. "We've never beaten a team as good as Navy by over four points on one event."

Never relinquishing their lead, the Minutemen increased their distance for the remainder of the contest, outscoring Navy in every event except the high bar.

UMass' Calvin Booker was the competition's top finisher in the all-around, scoring 54.50 points, a personal best. Booker led the field in the floor exercise, with a school record of 9.7, the vault (9.5) and was UMass' top finisher in the still rings (9.35).

Booker's all-around performance was the second best in UMass history. For his efforts, the senior from Dorchester, MA was named the Eastern College Athletic Conference Gymnast of the Week.

Joseph Haran, a UMass sophomore, was second in the all-around. His score of 53.95 included a contest-high 9.1 in the parellel bars and 9.45 in the high bar.

UMass' Steven Christensen was the meet's top performer in the pummel horse (9.5).

"I was real happy, real surprised," said Johnson of the Minutemen's showing. "It definitely sets the tone of the season and gets us ready."

The 10-point victory was also the largest margin of victory the Minutemen have registered against Navy in the 27-year history of the rivalry.

"Our goal by the end of the season is to hit 270 points," Johnson said. "We played it a little on the safe side [in our first meet]."

The UMass gymnasts travel to Springfield College tomorrow and then host Cortland and Vermont in a triangular meet on Saturday at 1 p.m.

Men's swim enjoy success

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team proved to be one of the most successful sports over break as it recorded four more wins and increased its overall dual meet record to 9-2 at press time.

The Minutemen, who are seeking their sixth-straight New England Championship, extended their winning streak to six when they began 1992 with a convincing home victory over Northeastern, 180-106. However, their streak was halted when they hosted Brown, Jan. 11, and fell 170.15-127.5.

Nonetheless, the Minutemen returned to their winning ways by defeating crosstown rival Amherst College, 155-88 four days later.

UMass has been led by the team's breaststrokers: Jay Peluso, William Chouinard and Tim Milbert.

Peluso broke the school record in the 100-yard breaststroke against Springfield, Dec. 11, with a time of 58.56 seconds, only to have it broken by Milbert a month later against Brown. Milbert's time was 58.47. Chouinard won the same event against Northeastern in 59.23.

According to UMass coach Russ Yarworth, the Minutemen, "dodged a bullet," in their two-day triangular

The break is unkind to women's hoop

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team had a tough go of it over the semester break, losing six of a scheduled seven games (at press time), dropping to 4-10.

MASSACHUSETTS 49, NORTHEASTERN 40

The team's only win of the break came on Monday, Jan. 20, a 49-40 win over Northeastern at the Curry Hicks Cage. Junior Kim Kristofik had a monster game, pouring in 24 points and hauling down 14 rebounds. Maleeka Valentine chipped in with eight points and six boards.

Carrine Jones led the Huskies with 11 points and eight rebounds.

The game was scheduled for January 4, but the flu struck the Northeastern team, causing the game to be postponed.

The Minutewomen built a 23-18 lead at halftime, due in large part to their 11-of-15 free throw shooting, compared to NU's first half 2-of-4 performance from the charity stripe. Both teams lit it up from the line in the second half as UMass went 8 for 11 and NU hit 9-of-11. The free throws really came in handy as UMass shot 33 percent from the floor for the game, and NU shot only 30 percent.

Kim Kristofik looks for an easy two, but wins have not come easy for the women's basketball team.

DUQUESNE 70, MASSACHUSETTS 59

A tough loss for the Minutewomen as they surrendered a 24-22 halftime lead to the uptempo play of the Duchesses, who put up 67 shots, including 13 3-pointers.

Kristofik was the key for UMass again, scoring 19 points and collecting 15 rebounds. Valentine added 12 points and seven boards. Duquesne's Darcie Vincent led all scorers with 21 points.

HOFSTRA 57, MASSACHUSETTS 54 OT

Another game the Minutewomen led at the half only to watch it slip away in the second half and overtime. UMass, which averages 53 field goal attempts per game, tossed up 68 shots in another barn burner, but hit only 22 of those.

UMass' Jennyfer Moran tallied 15 points and four rebounds, and Kristofik added 14 points and five rebounds. The Flying Dutchwomen's Betay Lange led all scorers with 16 points.

TEMPLE 62, MASSACHUSETTS 38

Down 28-21 at the midway break, the Minutewomen were blown out in the second half by the Lady Owls, who had 11 players in the scoring column, led by Kendra Westmoreland's 12 points.

Valentine's 10 points and six rebounds led UMass. Kristofik was held in check at the offensive end, scoring only four points to go along with 11 rebounds.

RUTGERS 71, MASSACHUSETTS 35

The Lady Knights ended this contest early, running up a 40-12 halftime lead, as the Minutewomen shot only 20 percent in the first half, and 23 percent for the game. Rutgers shot 43 percent for the game, and placed three players in double figures, led by Tanya Hansen's 18 points.

UMass was led by Kristofik's 12 points and seven rebounds, and Valentine's nine points and nine rebounds.

RHODE ISLAND 71, MASSACHUSETTS 54

The Rams had five players in double figures, and went out to a 31-20 halftime lead which they maintained in the second half. URI's Anne Kelsen had 17 points and Rebecca Bright added 16 points and eight rebounds.

Moran led the Minutewomen with 14 points and seven boards. Kristofik had 13 points and seven rebounds.

HARVARD 55, MASSACHUSETTS 51

A nip-and-tuck game that Harvard led at the half 27-25.

The Crimson's Erin Maher shot the lights out, including 6-of-7 from 3-point territory, tallying 24 points and nine rebounds.

For the game, Harvard hit 9-of-18 treys on the way to a 41 percent shooting performance, while UMass went 0 for 3 and shot 30 percent.

Moran and Valentine each scored 14 points. Kristofik added 10 points and 10 rebounds for the Minutewomen.

Since press time, the Minutewomen played at Buffalo and at St. Bonaventure.

meet at Rhode Island as they easily defeated URI, 207-89, yet had to come from behind to edge out Providence, 152-148.

The key event was the 200 individual medley as the Minutemen swept the top three positions, with Milbert taking first, followed by Peluso and Greg Meymaris.

The Minutemen faced their toughest challenge of the season as they hosted the University of Connecticut last Wednesday. They didn't expect to win, but didn't expect to lose the way they did either.

UMass entered the last two events of the meet an almost insurmountable 21 points behind, 114-93. The Minutemen needed to sweep places one through three in the 200-yard breaststroke and take the first and at least third position in the last event, the 400 freestyle relay, to win.

Well, the Minutemen swept the breaststroke and placed first and third in the relay, but did not win.

When UMass' third place relay team touched the wall, a celebration ensued, causing one of the members of the UMass team to fall in the lane of the first place finishers. The member falling into the water violated an NCAA rule because several teams were still in the process of finishing the race.

Consequently, the judge made the discretionary decision to disqualify the Minutemen and their miraculous comeback.

Duquesne departs A-10 for Midwest

By MICHAEL MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 Conference received another hard hit to its foundation when it learned last month that another Pennsylvania school is leaving, citing, "philosophical differences with the conference."

Duquesne University is leaving the A-10 at the end of the spring semester for the Midwestern Collegiate Conference, and taking LaSalle University, formerly with the Metro Atlantic Conference, with it.

A-10 Director of Communications Ray Cella said that Duquesne University had philosophical problems with the Conference, but couldn't comment specifically.

"They thought they were more philosophically aligned with the MCC," Cella said. "They gave us a lot of reasons."

LaSalle Athletic Director Bob Mullen said that his school was linked with Duquesne, implying the MCC wanted the schools as a package deal.

"One couldn't go without the other," Colleary said. "We had to have a travel partner, because they wanted at least two eastern schools."

The Atlantic 10 was in trouble even before Duquesne's departure, but this leaves them in a deeper quagmire. Penn State left the A-10 after last season, and the Temple and Rutgers football teams alligned with the Big East.

The athletic directors and the Conference did not act quick enough when it appeared imminent the Dukes would leave, opting for a wait-and-see position.

Duquesne had a lot to offer the Conference, but its somewhat standoffish "admit LaSalle or we're out" philosophy alienated many ADs.

In addition to being a private school with a large athletic budget, Duquesne's location, Pittsburgh, gave the A-10 some much needed exposure.

Mullen said LaSalle could also offer the A-10 a lot, but the ADs weren't interested until it was too late.

"The A-10 would take over [Philadelphia]," he said. It would cut travel costs, guarantee Temple and St. Joe's another sell-out, and create a greater interest in the Conference in Philadelphia."

"We were raring to go to the A-10 a year ago, but they voted against it," he continued. "They didn't think [Duquesne] would do what they did," Mullen added. "Then they were trying to get us to wait until Spring to decide to leave. But, we couldn't, because the MCC needed a decision right away."

UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney declined to comment on the Duquesne situation, adding that an A-10 "memo" prevented him from commenting further.

Duquesne could not be reached for comment.

Bush proposes cuts in taxes and defense

By TERRANCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President Bush on Tuesday night proposed election-year tax cuts and business incentives to revive America's economy and pledged, "We're going to lift this nation out of hard times." In his State of the Union speech, Bush also outlined dramatic cuts in the U.S. nuclear arsenal.

The president challenged the Democrat-controlled Congress to back his economic programs by March 20 or face a political fight. Invoking Gulf War rhetoric, he vowed the recession "will not stand."

The centerpiece of his economic plan was a $25 billion program to put more money in peoples' paychecks by lowering tax withholding rates — even though it would mean smaller refunds a year from now. It would increase take-home pay by an average of $300 for more than 90 million wage-earners, the White House said.

In a nationally televised address, Bush discussed the benefits of a reduced military threat from the disintegrated Soviet Union. "The American taxpayer bore the brunt of the [Cold War] burden, and deserves a hunk of the glory," he said.

Bush said he would ask Russian president Boris Yeltsin on Saturday to agree to eliminate all land-based multiple warhead ballistic missiles. If Yeltsin agrees, Bush said, the United States will eliminate all MX missiles, reduce the number of warheads on Minuteman missiles to just one and cut the number of sea-

Men's hoop loses 21st straight game to Temple

By TAMIR LIPTON

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — Since October 15, the Curry Hicks Cage has been ringing a familiar chant. "We want Temple." Last night, in front of 3,521 fans at McGonigle Hall, the University of Massachusetts basketball team got them. Only, they received more then they wanted, dropping their 21st in a row to the Owls, 83-61.

The game started harmlessly enough as Tony Barbee (16 points) pulled up for a trey and nailed it just five seconds into the contest. But from there, things got bad, as the Minutemen (16-4), 4-3 in the Atlantic 10), were impatient on offense and badly outrebounded.

"We were outplayed and outcoached," said UMass coach John Calipari, whose team has still never beaten Temple in 21 attempts. "Up and down the line we need to do some soul searching.

"We were scared. We were tentative. We played with no passion," Calipari said.

Temple (8-7, 5-4 in the A-10) went ahead 8-3 after Frazier Johnson scored a quick 3 points, Vic Carstarphen hit a trey and Mark Strickland connected on an 8-foot turnaround. Barbee hit a second 3-pointer to halt the Owl run and a third Barbee bomb ended a 7-0 Owl run.

From there, Anton Brown (11 points off the bench) stuck two from behind the arc to pull the Minutemen within two, 17-15. Mike Williams then stole a lazy pass and coasted in for the first UMass basket from inside the 3-point stripe to tie the score. He later gave the Minutemen their last

RAs call for removal of offensive textbook

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

Decrying what they called blatantly racist remarks, resident assistants across the campus asked residential education to get rid of a textbook which was used last semester to teach incoming RAs how to act as counselors.

The Experienced Resident Assistant, which was used to teach the Race, Sex and Social Issues class required for new RAs, contains a chapter titled "Issues of Race and Culture on the College Campus." Authored by Christine Bennet, a professor of curriculum and institution at Indiana University, the chapter quotes from an article written by anthropology professor Kenneth Johnson which describes the difference between the "White males' walk" and the "Black males' walk."

While Johnson describes the White males' walk as being "brisk" with "strides of authority," it said the Black males' walk was much slower, rhythmic and he calls it "the pimp strut."

Even more disturbing to the RAs is the author's interpretation of the walk.

"The Black walk communicates that the young Black male is beautiful, and it beckons female attention to the sexual prowess possessed by the walker," the excerpt reads. "Finally, the Black walk communicates that the walker is "cool"; in other words, he is not upset or bothered by the cares of the world and is, in fact, somewhat disdainful and insolent towards the world."

Bennet wraps up the passage with: "Students of any racial background who are unfamiliar with the "black walk" may feel threatened by it, particularly if it occurs in their home away from home, the residence hall."

"I feel that it plays on sexual myths that have plagued Black men for centuries," said one RA who wished to be identified only as Abbot S. for fear of any reprisals from his residential director. "When any other race walks, they just walk. But when the Black man walks, he has to be displaying his sexual prowess. He can't even walk without being stereotyped."

While Bennet was unavailable for comment, Gregory Blimling, who edited the book while he taught at Louisiana State University and now works for Appalachian State University in North Carolina, defended his book

RA Manners group criticizes residential ed

By MARC ELLIOTT
Collegian Staff

This year's spring residential assistant training session didn't go quite as planned thanks to the newly formed ALANA RA Manners group.

When residential education scheduled a session with space for five skits dealing with racism on campus presented by the RAs themselves, they never expected anything like "The Class." Set in a university classroom, the skit criticized residential education's use of The Experienced Resident Assistant, which the RAs found offensive, to train RAs to be counselors.

During the skit, one of the players read the offensive passage from the book while another did a monologue encouraging people to confront what they called "institutionalized racism."

One of the players, who wished to remain nameless, said that a handful of central administrative staff tried to stop the skit in the middle once they realized what was happening but were blocked by another RA.

While administrators saw the skit as a "bashing of residential education" at first, Manners Co-Chairman Charles Venator said they came to realize after a while the RAs were merely trying to voice an opinion and communicate how they felt.

"We were trying to educate and communicate the views of RAs that sometimes get lost in the hierarchy," he said. Venator applauded residential education for including RAs in the training session and allowing them to

Panel asks for release of JFK secret files

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Louis Stokes, who headed the House investigation into President John F. Kennedy's assassination, said Tuesday he will introduce a resolution to release secret files on the case.

Stokes offered no timetable and said he's seeking co-sponsors for his measure.

While many of his committee's records on the assassination were released in 1979, others were to remain sealed until 2029.

The files have become controversial because of the movie "JFK" suggests they could yield important clues on an assassination conspiracy.

The movie alleges that Kennedy's death resulted from a conspiracy involving government officials and defense contractors. The Oliver Stone-directed film indicates the files were kept sealed as part of a coverup.

Stokes, D-Ohio, said in a brief floor speech that the files will reveal nothing about a government conspiracy or a cover-up.

"I can assure my colleagues that nothing could be further from the truth," Stokes said. "Americans are entitled to know the truth of the assassination

Cuban rally draws thousands

Speakers call for end to U.S. economic blockade

By MADANMOHAN RAO
Collegian Staff

While hundreds waited outside impatiently in 20-degree weather, close to 4,000 people packed the Javits Convention Center in New York City this past Saturday, to attend the controversial International Peace for Cuba Rally.

Right from the beginning, the rally was hindered by denial of visas to some international participants, threats of violent disruption by ardent anti-Castro opponents, and an attempt by the management of the Center to cancel the rally.

Speakers at the rally called for an end to decades of U.S. economic blockade of Cuba, respect for Cuban sovereignty, and commencement of peaceful relations.

Although there was little mention of strategies of support for Cuba and ways to end its predicament, glowing tributes were paid to Cuba's domestic social policies and its heroic efforts in fighting against the forces of apartheid in Namibia and Angola.

Ricardo Alarcon, Cuban ambassador to the United Nations, was awarded a plaque in recognition of his efforts to speak out against what the organizers discribed as "the manner in which the U.S. strong-armed and blackmailed the United Nations Security Council to pass the resolution authorizing war against Iraq."

Dr. Donn Sloanne, a member of the U.S.-Cuba Medical Project, said that the U.S. used medicine as a weapon against Cuba for over 30 years. "The U.S. blockade contributed to the deaths of more than 100 children in a dengue fever epidemic in 1981," Sloanne said.

"In the U.S., the world's greatest superpower, more than 38 million people have no health care," Sloanne said, "but in tiny Cuba health care is everyone's right."

Sloanne added that despite the stifling U.S. blockade, Cuba has been able to provide medical care and aid to victims of the Armenian earthquake, the Chernobyl nuclear disaster, and dozens of Asian, African, and Latin

Father arrested in fatal shooting

10-year-old daughter dies, two others injured

MEDFORD (AP) — A 10-year-old girl was shot dead and her mother and half-sister wounded early Tuesday, and the father of the two girls was charged in the crimes, authorities said.

The shooting occurred within hours after the woman, Pamela Watkins, had apparently obtained a restraining order against the suspect, Louis Johnson, and police had escorted him from their apartment, authorities said.

Johnson, 35, pleaded innocent to a charge of murder in the death of his daughter, Kimberly Watkins. He also pleaded innocent to two counts of assault with intent to murder, violation of a restraining order and unlawful possession of a handgun.

Johnson was ordered held without bail and sent to Bridgewater State Hospital for a 20-day psychiatric evaluation.

As he was being led into Somerville District Court by police, Johnson was asked why he allegedly shot the three.

"I went off, man, I just went off," Johnson said. "I blacked out. I don't know why."

Police got a call at 2:46 a.m. from a female caller saying she had been shot, said Police Lt. Michael DiChiara.

Officers forced their way into a second-floor apartment of a building on Arlington Street in West Medford and found the three shooting victims, DiChiara said.

Kimberly Watkins was pronounced dead at the scene of a gunshot would to the head, said Jill Reilly, a spokeswoman for the Middlesex County district attorney's office.

The dead girl's mother, Pamela Watkins, 33, and Nekeya Gomez, 14, were taken to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, where they underwent surgery for multiple gunshot wounds. Watking was listed in critical condition, and Gomez was listed as serious, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Johnson lived with the woman and was the father of both girls, Reilly said. Watkins was the mother of Kimberly, and Nekeya was her half-sister, Reilly said.

Reilly said Medford police had been called to the apartment about 10 p.m. Monday for a domestic disturbance. When officers determined that Johnson was drunk, they took him into protective custody, Reilly said.

Mrs. Watkins then got a restraining order against Johnson, and police drove Johnson back to the apartment about 2 a.m. to pick up some of his belongings, which had been left on the front porch. Police followed Johnson as he drove away from the apartment, Reilly said.

Following the shooting, police put out a description of Johnson's vehicle and he was arrested later in Boston's Roxbury section, Reilly said.

Keg bylaws' enforcement planned soon

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The town of Amherst is ready to implement a bylaw that would require a license to possess a keg of beer within town limits.

The Select Board decided in May of 1991 at the Town Meeting to implement a bylaw to license kegs to monitor the selling of alcohol to minors, said Linda Smith, chairperson for the Keg Task Force Committee.

A decision will be made within the next few days when it will be on the agenda of their next meeting. "The issue was left up in the air because some of the details need to be worked out," said Carolyn Holstein, vice chair of the Amherst Select Board.

The Keg Policy Task Force, a group of students and Amherst residents, were brought together in order to find a fair way of enforcing the policy. They created a report at the request of the Select Board and presented it to them on January 4, 1992.

Marie Wickey, staff liaison for the town of Amherst to the task force, said "the town manager has seen the report and presented his recommendations to the Select Board on Monday night."

The report presented by the task force recommended these guidelines to acquire a license: 1.The application is properly filled out,(putting your social security number will be optional). 2. Photo identification must be presented. 3. An Amherst Police Department person must sign and circle the appropriate recommendation on the application.

Also, all license holders must be 21 years of age or older. The license would be issued within 24 hours and no fee would be charged.

The applications once approved will be available at the Town Hall and the Police Station during regular business hours.

The town will provide information about keg licenses to the college and university community, liquor stores and the general public.

The term of the license shall be determined by the applicant and the police department. Only the license number of kegs shall be kept on the premises, and the number of kegs shall be determined by the applicant and the police department.

Although the Keg Policy Task Force understands that the Select Board is the authority for other liquor licenses in the Commonwealth, they think that the authority should be delegated to the Town Manager or his/her designee, said the report.

It went on to say that by delegating the power to the Town Manager, it would make the application process efficient because it would provide residents with a way of appeal (via the Select Board).

"Approximately two hundred kegs are being sold in the Amherst area, and some of that beer is being sold illegally," said Barry Del Castilho, town manager of Amherst.

"We are not trying to hassle anyone, but we want to assume that legal dispensing of alcohol is going on," he said.

Rob Witherell, budget chairperson for SGA and one of the main forces in last semester's "keg rally," said, "The town is walking on us much like the administration does." But relations have improved with the town since the keg rally, he said.

The plan stated above is only recommendations to the Select Board by the Keg Policy Task Force and is subject to change.

Student group proposes bills

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

A student advocacy group is stepping up the fight for affordable, quality public higher education in Massachusetts.

The State Student Association of Massachusetts has filed 18 bills with the state legislature on issues ranging from increasing scholarship aid to implementing tuition retention.

"Public higher education has taken a beating during the last three years, but nothing says we can't fight back," said Joseph Langis, executive director of SSAM.

"These bills, combined with SSAM's victories last spring, send a clear message to Beacon Hill: Protect public higher education," Langis said.

One of the bills deals with the issue of tuition retention which would allow the University of Massachusetts to keep all the tuition it collects.

The University currently retains only 30 percent and turns the rest over to the state.

Another bill calls for the increase of scholarship aid in proportion to the increase in tuition and fees. In Massachusetts, tuition at state colleges and universities increased by 6 percent for the current academic year.

In a related Collegian story last semester, Langis said the amount of aid handed out to students dropped by 70 percent in the last two years.

A related bill aims to restrict tuition and fee increases to the rate of inflation.

Several additional bills filed by SSAM:

- A controversial bill endorsed by Gov. Weld several weeks ago would raise money for public higher education from a sports lottery game.
- Guarantee the presence of public higher education graduates on various government boards and committees.
- Allow public higher education students to deduct tuition and fees from their state income tax.
- Include administrative fees in scholarship aid, eliminating "hidden" costs.

Staff cuts create long lines

By KRISTEN LANS
Collegian Correspondent

Students waited between 30 minutes and two hours at teller windows inside Whitmore on Monday to make payments to the Bursar's office before the University of Massachusetts' tuition payment deadline.

The Bursar's Office is the depository for all funds for the University. Monday was the last day students could pay fees before losing classes.

The lines were in part caused by understaffing at the office's five teller windows. Signs were posted stating "Due to personnel cutbacks we only have a limited number of tellers. We appreciate your patience and cooperation."

Michael Sullivan, University of Massachusettes Controller and Director of Fincance, said, "three Bursars positions have been vacated and not been refilled when employees' resigned over the last four years."

UMass Bursar Robert Mishol said the signs are intended to let students know that they will be taken care of as fast as possible.

"Every normal problem becomes a crisis when staff is reduced," Mishol added.

Mishol worked at one of the two windows that were open to answer questions and solve problems on Monday.

According to Mishol, students were sent a flier over intersession suggesting students pay in advance by mail.

"[The Bursars Office] is dealing with human nature, waiting until the last minute," he said.

Lines at the Bursars Office averaged 17 people each at one time during the day. Mishol compared the large number of people to the size of UMass.

"Percentage-wise it was not a lot of people — but the absolute number of people was large," he said.

saying Bennet had quoted from a study done by an expert in different kinds of walks and what they represent.

"It is what research has been determined based on anthropological and sociological studies done by experts in that area," he said.

But Abbot S. said he also disliked Bennet's remarks which he said "plays up the myth that Black men are fearsome and dangerous."

"The Black man's walk was called the 'pimp strut' and I'm not reading the writer's mind or anything, but I doubt he would ever refer to the White males' walk like that," he said.

Justin Harris, an RA in Pierpont who is a member of a newly formed group of minority RAs called the ALANA Manners group which is dedicated to improving the way RAs are treated and educated, said that he felt the book makes some very racist insights into how they thought Black people act."

Associate Housing Director Ann Miller said they have discontinued the book's use and are searching for alternatives. Miller replaced Larry Moneta as associate housing director two weeks ago.

"There is no question that it's offensive," she said.

Miller said a number of people reviewed the book beforehand, but they must have "missed" that section.

She also said she was proud of her staff for being sensitive enough to bring the book's flaws to her attention.

"They see it and they say 'well, that's inconsistent with what we want to accomplish here," Miller said.

Harris said he was particularly concerned that the book was being used to train RAs.

"If our roles as RAs are very important because we're looked upon as counselors and as resource people and if we can't do our job effectively, we're not helping the situation, we're perpetuating it," he said.

based missiles by about one-third.

Over five years, the president proposed to cut defense spending by $50 billion and use the savings to finance tax reductions.

Bush's plan would also freeze federal spending on most domestic programs at current levels.

The Democrats have sought to portray the tax cuts certain to come in terms of haves versus have-nots.

". . .We seek a fundamental change from the unsuccessful economic policies of the past 12 years," House Speaker Thomas S. Foley said.

"We will insist that this time, the benefits must go to working families, not to the privileged."

"We will insist that a middle class tax cut be paid for not by taking money that should go to schools and health care, but by calling on the richest of our citizens, at long last, to pay their fair share," he said.

The president openly acknowledged that his election-year message to the nation would be read by many as a partisan theme for his campaign. The White House also hopes it will arrest his slide in the polls.

"I am doing what I think is right; I am proposing what I know will help," Bush said.

have "input."

Associate Housing Director Ann Miller said that she was at the session where the skits were being acted out and that she didn't see anyone attempt to interfere.

"I liked the play," she said. "I thought it was very creative."

Venator emphasized that the goal of the Manners group was not to "battle" with Housing Services and Residential Education.

American countries.

"In fact," Sloanne said, "Cuba has more doctors overseas than even the World Health Organization. Cuba ranks first among nations sending health care professionals to aid other countries."

An emotionally-charged speech was also delivered by former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, one of the founding members of the International War Crimes Tribunal which is attempting to try the U.S. for war crimes committed in the Gulf War against the people of Iraq.

Outlining the history of U.S. aggression against Cuba, Clark said that the U.S. has the same values as Christopher Columbus. "Columbus set the stage for the genocide of the indigenous people of Cuba in 1492, and the U.S. continues the assault on the citizens of Cuba today," Clark said.

"We have been unable to stop the economic strangulation of Vietnam, the intervention in Granada, the rampage in Panama, or the merciless slaughter in Iraq — but we must not stand by as Cuba is crushed," said Clark.

Speakers from abroad included a representative of the Salvadorian FMLN, a delegate from Brazil, an official from the late Maurice Bishop's government in Grenada, Haiti's ambassador to the United Nations in the Aristide government, a representative from South Africa's African National Congress, and a Member of Parliament from England.

"In the anti-imperialist movements of the latter half of the 20th century, the Cuban revolution is the most remarkable of all," said Anthony Glenn, MP from London. "Sitting right next to the U.S., Cuba has been able to develop a better social policy for its people than even the mighty U.S. — something which frightens and irks the U.S.," Glenn said.

"For decades, the Soviet Union was there to support Cuba — we now need to take over its role and help the Cuban people," Glenn said.

Palestinians boycott talks in protest

AP photo

Isreali Foreign Minister David Levy sits at the opening session of the Middle East peace talks in Moscow Tuesday. The Palestinian delegation boycotted the talks after rejecting U.S. and Russian demands that only West Bank and Gaza residents be included in the Palestinian delegation.

By DALIA BALIGH
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Palestinians boycotted the latest phase of Middle East peace talks today after the United States and Russia barred some of their negotiators as unacceptable.

Algeria and Yemen joined the boycott, marring an otherwise unprecedented gathering in Moscow that brought Arabs and Israelis together alongside a host of Western and Far Eastern countries seeking to promote the peace process.

For Israel, the conference represented the beginning of a dream come true. Throughout its existence, Israelis have believed real peace would come not through diplomacy but through gradual rapproachment on the ground — through water-sharing, exchange of farming know-how and all other mundane matters now on the negotiating table.

The Palestinians, attemting to defy restrictions imposed at Israel's insistence, brought a delegation made up of people from the occupied territories, Jerusalem and other countries.

But Israel says it will only negotiate according to "the Madrid formula" — the procedure established for the Madrid peace conferece whereby only Palestinians from the West Bank and Gaza Strip can take part. That ruled out five of the eight Palestinian delegates in Moscow.

Israeli Foreign Minister David Levy said the Palestinians were trying to inject the Palestinian Liberation Organization, Israel's archenemy, into the peace talks.

"If people who we are opposed to will come, they will negotiate with themselves," Levy said. "I'll be sorry if this happens, but those who act this way will put sticks in the wheels of peace. However, I am certain this will not happen tomorrow."

The Palestinians are walking a tightrope at the conference, torn between the tangible benefits they could lose by staying away, and the risk of alienating supporters at home and abroad by appearing once again to bow to the Israeli line.

"No, we are not going to the conference," Palestinian delegation leader Faisal Husseini told The Associated Press at his hotel after the talks began.

"We are ready to go as soon as they accept our delegation. ... At the moment that the precondition on our delegation is removed, we will attend the conference, but not before then," he said.

Israel says acceptance of Palestinians from Jerusalem and the diaspora would imply recognition of their claim to the city's Arab sector and the homes they lost when Israel became a state. Israel seized east Jerusalem along with the West Bank and Gaza Strip during the 1967 Middle East war.

Palestinian spokeswoman Hanan Ashrawi said delegations from Yemen and Alegeria also did not take part in the morning session out of "solidarity" with the Palestinians.

WORK SMARTER. NOT HARDER.

We're working smarter, too. So you don't have to work harder.

For us, it means an ongoing relationship with educators and professors, striving to understand what's needed to help them make math concepts come alive.

It means continually working with students like you, discovering firsthand what you expect from the calculator you select.

The result? Calculators that are highly recommended by your teachers and peers. Calculators that are perfectly matched to your major and your coursework.

The TI-81 is a perfect example. It offers the most comprehensive, easy-to-use graphing features available with extensive programming capabilities.

And there are others. Like the TI-68, an advanced scientific that solves up to five simultaneous equations, performs complex numbers and offers formula programming.

The BA II PLUS.™ For business students, this is the one to get. It handles time-value-of-money and offers cash flow analysis for internal rate of return (IRR) and net present value (NPV). Plus a whole lot more.

No matter what your major, no matter what the course, there's a TI scientific or business calculator that's right for you. Do the smart thing: make one of them a part of your professional personality now, and for the years to come.

You'll be on your way to working smarter. Instead of harder.

Try the entire line of TI scientific and business calculators at your local TI retailer.

Read what you missed while away from UMass

To all those who left the Valley, this is what you missed. . .

The new year began like a slow, painful death as intersession teachers assigned five weeks worth of work in five days. The idea of vacation quickly became a sweet memory.

It was a week to be angry at my alarm clock which woke me early each morning, at my floors for being so cold, at those who smugly prolonged the holiday spirit with Christmas lights, and at friends who sent postcards from warm, exotic places.

Jennifer Naumes

Progressing along into the second week, the mornings became colder, the work load, heavier. Then, I realized I was not alone in the Valley.

I was greeted each morning at the bus stop by a group of students as tired and cold as I was. Some were armed with coffee mugs, determined and ready to sneak past the bus driver who always seemed to win. We all seemed to have gained weight during our one week break. It was mostly due to the extra layers of clothing, yet still we soon managed to catch colds.

Other students could be found after class in the Cape Cod Lounge, each luxuriously with a couch to themselves. There were no lines to get coffee or to play video games. UMass rested peacefully without any background noise of dormitories and dining commons.

It became almost fashionable to discuss what one was taking. We name dropped classes and professors, competing for the most sympathy. Even at social outings, I found myself sticking with fellow classmates. As the mornings got colder, the group of students at the bus stop became closer. By the third week, intersession became almost enjoyable.

Despite the lack of or an excess of heat, depending on the morning, the classroom became familiar and personal. I soon found myself growing attached to the chair which became part of my every morning. The teacher was more willing to digress into tangents and welcomed personal anecdotes.

After thirty-seven and a half hours of class in three, short weeks, American Realism seemed to pervade my life in the classroom and out. I saw my everyday routine through the eyes of Mark Twain and Henry James. My outlook on life took a sarcastic turn and events presented themselves as realistic images without meaning or reason.

I travelled vicariously to Europe with James where I dressed in expensive gowns, went to balls and danced with gentlemen. In Chicago with Dreiser, I slaved in a factory, making $4 a week before being discovered and brought to stardom. Chopin showed me warm beaches and a sensuous ocean. Jewett brought me to a little town in Maine. With Twain, I explored the South and learned to be sarcastic. Through assigned readings I travelled without the expenses and jet lag.

My travelling was undermined by final exams which brought an intersession crisis. I needed a break and not the pressure of a 10 page paper. I dreamed of watching TV as I tried to make up a semester's worth of work in one night. Having class every day with the same people, I was unable to get away with wearing the same clothes.

And the last day of class brought a great wave of relief as three credits and a requirement were taken care of. As other students who travelled are re-adjusting, I look forward to sitting still for only 50 minutes of class. Overall, intersession turned out to be more than bearable, though I am thankful there are no classes offered during March break.

Recession discourages senior

Since returning to school from the long month break, many of us have faced the same question, "What did you do during the long break?" Many students replied, "Nothing really!" The sad fact is that many of us could not find work. For the most part, many of us were glued to the TV watching President Bush choke in front of the world in Japan. The image is still somewhat familiar. Last year, during this time, many of our friends were on their way to fight against Saddam Hussein in the Saudi desert. As we look around, we see that many New Englanders are leaving the area in search of steady jobs as the recession drags on.

The economy hit bottom. Many people have lost their jobs or have been laid off. The sluggish economy led to the increase in everything and the American consumers are forced to spend extra money. It is difficult keeping up with the mortgage, insurances and all other bills on the credit cards. The school bill arrived before we even came home.

I am graduating in May and I do not know what is out there for me. I need experience to compete for jobs, but I can not go on any internships during the summer because they do not pay too well. I have to work to help my family of eight to cope with the recession and to pay for the school bill. The past four summers were hell as I worked 80 plus hours a week, starting every day at 2 a.m. to 5 p.m. Every day I went through 15 hours of pure sweat and hell. I have to pay for school somehow. Things can only get better, I hope. My family did not do much for the new year because we were trying to save money for the hard times to come. However, we had a happy holiday because we had each other.

In the meantime, the students are trapped in between the sluggish economy and the increase in college tuition. Many of us are getting nowhere after a four year college education. The president's effort to open a free trade market with Japan and other countries is a start in the right direction. We need to create more jobs. Let us hope that the economy will pick up in 1992 instead of continuing at this sluggish pace with long employment lines.

Intersession again used to increase fees, tuition

On January 17, the Student Activities Trust Fund Planning Committee got together and decided to recommend an increase of $2.50 per year of the Student Activities Fee. The most noteworthy part of this meeting was that because the decision had to be made over intersession, most of its student membership were not able to attend, thus putting professional staff in the majority. Facing tough times with decreasing enrollment, the staff members voted to increase the fee paid by students (those still remaining) in order to maintain their job security even though cuts were and still are possible.

Rob Witherell

Undergraduate enrollment has fallen by 3,000 students over the last three years and state funding has been cut by over 30 percent in the last four years. Yet, the University has maintained its operating budget at the same level by increasing students' tuition and fees by $4,000 over the last four years and recruiting more out of state students to the university. UMass is now the second most expensive public university in the nation and fast becoming number one. This trend must be stopped now before it runs us all over.

Gov. William Weld has announced his plan for 100 percent tuition retention in fiscal year 1993 and the UMass administration loves it. In a situation comparable to the one mentioned previously, the administration will soon come toe-to-toe with a budget shortfall. Rather than making tough decisions about reorganization, cuts and layoffs, the administration will simply raise tuition and fees again, as they have done every semester since 1988. That would be the result of Weld's plan to privatize the University: skyrocketing tuition and fees. To quote a statehouse official, Dominic Slowey, from a January 18 Boston Globe article, "It is a management initiative that they have been seeking, and we are glad to grant it. There is no additional money. We said, you want management flexibility, you have it with tuition retention." Translated for you and me, that means that the state will gradually eliminate public education from its budget to save money and let the University administrators raise the students' tuition and fees to make up for the budget shortfall. That's known as balancing the budget on the backs of students.

David Bartley, the president of Holyoke Community College, had declared tuition retention "a fraud" and "shellgame." TUITION RETENTION WILL DESTROY PUBLIC HIGHER EDUCATION. When the campus keeps all the money and the administration does the budget as well as raises the revenues, it becomes the same as every other private university. HIGHER EDUCATION WILL BECOME A PRIVILEGE WHICH ONLY THE RICH CAN AFFORD. Tuition retention will leave the working class as well as the middle class destitute, unable to access the invaluable resource of education. Everyone should have EQUAL ACCESS to higher education. The Weld proposal is elitism in the ugliest form.

Special state representative elections are coming up in this area on February 18. We must elect someone who will fight for us against Weld's plan to privatize the university through tuition retention. Of the two top Democratic candidates in the Amherst/Pelham state representative race, Ellen Story supports Weld's elitist proposal, and Jon Hite is already fighting against it. On February 18, students must go to the polls and vote for the one they feel will do the best fighting on their behalf in Boston.

Maybe it's time we try other ways of balancing the budget here at UMass rather than reaching for the pockets of students. We must act now before Weld's plan for the privatization of the university is implemented. STOP TUITION RETENTION AND SAVE PUBLIC EDUCATION. . ."BY ANY MEANS NECESSARY"!!

Rob Witherell is chairman of the SGA Budgets Committee

MassPIRG's varied roles, goals

For the past 20 years, students at Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group campus chapters have voted to pool resources through per student fees to tackle issues ranging from voter registration to tough recycling standards. The chapter here at UMass Amherst is currently funded through a $4 per student per semester waivable fee.

Last semester, students at MassPIRG's 27 campus chapters were key to qualifying two environmental questions for the 1992 ballot — Recycling and Polluter Pay Initiatives. At UMass, students collected over 23,000 signatures. In addition, MassPIRG chapters educated the campus and community about the dangers of radon and organized Hunger and Homelessness Week to provide education, service and funds to the local hungry and homeless.

MassPIRG's success and our continual effort to keep the Legislature accountable to the public interest on issues like recycling and toxic waste cleanup have sparked retaliation by the Legislature. They passed a law that takes away students' rights to fund our lobbying efforts with waivable fees. This law undermines our right to make decisions for ourselves as a student community, prevents students from participating in the advocacy process through MassPIRG's campus program, and is a blow to the efforts of the entire public interest community to advocate for strong environmental and consumer legislation.

The law dictates that MassPIRG's campus program focus solely on educational, service and action projects. This semester, MassPIRG's Green Voter Campaign will work in coalition with student governments and other student groups to register, educate, and activate over 10,000 student voters statewide for the March and November presidential elections. We will continue to organize education, service and fund raising activities through the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness.

Meanwhile, a statewide coalition of student leaders, faculty and administrators are fighting to restore our right to vote to fund advocacy organizations as students see fit. MassPIRG will continue our work to create positive changes in our society and look forward to working with the UMass campus community this year and for years to come in that effort.

Sex phone lines blocked by Supreme Court ruling

By DIANE DUSTON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court is helping worried parents keep their teenagers away from those sexually explicit telephone lines.

The court Monday upheld a federal law that requires that for-pay sex lines be blocked from general telephone service areas unless specially requested in writing by customers.

But parents still are advised not to leave the kids alone with a credit card, because the ruling apparently doesn't affect sexually explicit message-service companies that do their own billing.

Sex lines are abandoning 900 numbers and those with local prefixes, like 976, in which phone companies do the billing. Now they have 800 numbers and ask for credit card information before putting on the tape or person to talk dirty.

"I don't think there are that many sexually explicit lines left of local (exchanges)," said Steve Reynolds, an analyst for Link Resources Corp. in New York City, which does telemarketing research.

"A lot of it has gone to 800 numbers with credit cards."

In order to protect the public from sex lines, local telephone companies have been assigning the services to specific prefixes so they can easily be blocked from customers who don't want them.

Michael Daley, a spokesman for C&P Telephone Co. in Washington, said that in 1988 his company put sexually explicit talk lines on the 915 exchange. Callers paid a toll, just like for 976 numbers used by other phone messages services, such as sports or weather.

About a year ago, the major long distance companies — AT&T, US Sprint and MCI — stopped billing and collecting for sexually explicit phone services.

"We took a formal stand against adult services, defined as any content that implied or promoted sexual stimulation," said Pam Small of MCI. She said that under the law, the telephone companies cannot refuse service, but they did develop the 745 prefix for use by sex talk lines.

Without the billing services of the telephone companies, the businesses turned to credit card users and 800 numbers.

Daley said it's easy to block access to telephone numbers with specific prefixes. But Herb Linnen of AT&T said that when it comes to 800 numbers, no special exchange has been designated for sex lines, nor is it likely to be.

Britny Fox returns with a vengeance

Band releases new album against odds

By CHRISTIAN ALEXANDER FOSTER
Collegian Correspondent

It's safe to say that as a band you've had your share of bad luck when your drummer is killed in a car accident, your lead singer, who is also a guitarist and a song writer quits, and you consequently lose your record contract. And unless you're Def Leppard, circumstances like these are enough to make a band think about other career paths. However, the historically snake-bitten group of Britny Fox is overcoming these obstacles and re-emerging on the music scene with a new album, on a new label, with a new lead singer, who is a guitarist and a songwriter as well.

The new addition is Tommy Paris from Las Vegas, who is taking on the duties that were left when "Dizzy" Dean Davidson quit the band.

"Dean just wasn't happy in the group," said drummer Johnny Dee. "He wanted something more centered around himself, so he left."

Davidson formed the original BF with bassist Billy Childs, and ex-Cinderella members guitarist Michael Kelly Smith and drummer Tony Destra (whom Johnny Dee replaced after the accident). The quartet produced a Top 40 debut album in 1988 under the prestigious record label of Columbia, and it looked as if BF was going to be around for a while. However, after the release of BF's second album, "Boys in the Heat," Davidson quit and ventured off on his own. Determined to prove they were for real , Smith, Childs and Dee picked up the pieces.

"We put word of out that the position in the band was open, and we came across Tommy," said Dee. "Tommy brought a lot of song ideas with him and we found a chemistry that really 'worked.'"

Indeed it did and does. The 'new' BF landed a deal with East/West Records, a division of Atlantic Records, and recorded the third BF album overall entitled Bite Down Hard.

This album has already released the song "Louder" to metal airwaves and will soon be releasing the song "Over and Out" to radio airwaves everywhere shortly. In fact "Over and Out" happens to be one of the "song ideas" that Paris brought with him. Other areas of the album worth checking out include the extremely powerful "Six Guns Loaded" and the rhythm driven "Black and White."

BF is currently on tour, hitting clubs everywhere. At the Vertex (formerly Katina's) on Jan. 19, they showed that the chemistry formed with this new line-up extended beyond the recording studio walls and onto the stage. Paris is an excellent replacement for the performance of older pieces such as "Girlschool" and "Long Way to Love" as his raspy voice is a shadow of Davidson's.

Furthermore, in the newer material played, Paris effectively introduced this "reborn" group to the crowd as a band that plans on being around for a while. The fact that the group played a solid, tight set, regardless of the small crowd, showed that they were for real.

The element of strong back-up vocals on the new material is symbolic of the band being more "as one" in this line-up. Although BF has to start at square one once again they are blazing themselves a trail to follow straight back into the heart of the heavy metal scene.

You can check out BF live at the Malibu Beach Club in Haverhill in the beginning of February.

Experience 'Search' in new installation

By PAMELA A. GAULIN
Collegian Correspondent

Dried seaweed, pink lingerie, a vacuum cleaner hose, tree branches and prom dresses seem unrelated.

Add a celebration of beauty and sexuality, nature, suffering, and healing and you're in the world of Karen Dolmanisth, an MFA candidate in sculpture at UMass.

Dolmanisth will transform Wheeler Art Gallery for the upcoming installation, "The Daughter's Search: Memory, Longing and Mystery."

The installation represents Dolmanisth's search for herself as a daughter and is not simply a spiritual search or a search for justice, Dolmanisth said.

"It's about knowing myself as a daughter, knowing that I have a gender and that affects me," she said. "As a daughter, you're not really understood in terms of how complex you are and what you may need."

She creates shelters, and alters spaces with raw material and objects she has gathered from dumps, thrift shops and the Shutesbury woods.

"When I work on a site that is an art site, I have to bring things in," she said. "That's where the idea of installation comes for me. The galleries are empty and I have to bring in my raw material to do this ordering process."

Dolmanisth will include altars dedicated to the images of the goddesses, Artemis, Hecate, Ariadne and Ianna because of their links to the darker, mythological realms.

"This darker feminine location— the womb, the cave, the bleeding—has been exiled," she said. "The altars will be about this underworld journey, the mythical cave, and that inner process of descent that we understand as depression."

Dolmanisth will weave stereotypically feminine objects with representations of darker feminine qualities.

"I will have things that are dark and have been through their death and dying phase as well as things that are bright, sexual and soft."

These conflicting and potentially controversial pieces of the installation are part of the daughter's search for self-understanding, Dolmanisth added.

"I'm into the women's space of knowledge and history and I'm dredging up only and all of the material that is most problematic."

Dolmanisth said she demands the freedom to be allowed to say how she feels about things and does not believe that the controversial material is harmful.

"It may create argument, but I don't think there is anything I am capable of doing that will victimize someone," she said.

Dolmanisth has created installations for the Tower Library's sculpture courtyard and Springfield's Baystate West mall.

"The Daughter's Search" installation will run from February 3-20. A closing reception will be held on Feb. 20 between 5 and 7 p.m., and is open to the public.

Fungo Mungo is Mongo Humungo

New album rocks hard

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

Like their cartoon CD cover which sports a scantily clad blonde woman with a mallet in her hand riding a a ferocious gorilla, Fungo Mungo's first album is full of high energy, low regard for women, and a kooky sense of humor. Spawned from the San Francisco/Oakland Bay Area, Fungo Mungo's Humongous, is a danceable, funky mix of everything you could want in a happy, yet mostly socially conscious album.

Humongous was written and co-produced by Fungo Mungo with the production help of Joe Blaney (who has also recorded the Beastie Boys, The Clash, Keith Richards and Prince.) Also assisting on this new release was the mixer of albums from Stevie Wonder, Devo and 2 Live Crew, Bob Margouleff.

Fungo Mungo's members, all of Hispanic descent and of ages 21 to 23, have chosen to attack some political issues with their funk and kinetic guitars. They comment on societal ills in "Sex Sells" and "Hype is Stupid." The infamous TV evangelists are bashed in "Do you Believe in God?" Interracial harmony is encouraged in "Brothers and Sisters." Two odes to their hometown include "Homies" and "Downtown Oakland."

"Growing up in the Bay Area, we were always surrounded by a huge mix of people with different cultures and different music and rhythms," says Gallegos. "We couldn't help but reflect that in our own music."

Drummer Jeff Gomes and bassist Arion Salazar are bonded together in the funk foundation that forms the basis of the band's "in-your-face" sound. Keyboardist Damon Ramirez softens the blows of Gallegos' staccato guitar playing.

"Our main goal for this album was to capture our live sound," says Gallegos. In fact, it was on the basis of their live show that the band was signed to the Island label. The Fungo Mungo energy has been lighting up stages since early 1990.

There are many pleasant surprises on this album, and some not so pleasant, including the beginning of the first song, "Time on my Hands" when the singer abruptly yells "Damn it" so loud I fell out of my chair. Otherwise this first track is one of the best; it's foot tapping, funky fun.

"Do You Believe in God?" is a kaleidoscope of sounds from phones ringing to chugging, rocking guitar to a rumbling heavy voice uttering, "life, death, blood, flesh." Yes, there's something for everyone.

A hopping, steely guitar sound reminiscent of Prince's "Kiss" combined with exceptional drum spurts, produce a comical effect when a deep, gravelly voice and a big attitude asserts, "Yo - hype is stu - pid."

Damion Gallegos uses the spoken word effectively, it's not exactly rap but it isn't singing either. There is a palpable energy in this album; it glows with good feeling even though many of the lines are sarcastic. They use a wide range of sounds, probably not things you would consider as instruments (including whistles blowing) but there is some fun piano.

"Brothers and Sisters" is less of a good time feeling song with a bit of a disco-y touch which may remind you of that classic police TV show, CHiPs. The horns are worth a listen however. Curve Ball, Zeke the Freak, Matt Winegar and Well Hung Horns are Ken Schink, alto sax, Chris Mondt, bonaphone, Tony George, trumpet, Reed Boy, tenor sax, and swampy Dave on the baritone sax.

There are splashes of Spanish in the very cool "Homies." I like the rap sounds of "Downtown Oakland" which even addresses the drug abuse issues of the big city, yet still has that "I love my home town" mushy undertone.

There are an eclectic mix of sounds on the album, and yet they sound so right together. When I opened the CD with the guys smooshing their faces up against a glass window I should have suspected that this was a different type of an album.

"Sex Sells" is a song which wrestles with some controversial issues by utilizing the following lyrics: "Sex in the classroom/ condoms down the hall" yet right when you think you know their point they yell "Lots of tits and ass!" with just the right amount of sarcasm and general disregard for women.

"STFU" is a bitter injunction of white power, segregation, degradation and taxes being raised. Two minutes seems awfully short for a song with so many good points.

"Death Song" I didn't like as much with its limited deep, distorted, and spooky vocals.

Fungo Mungo's new album is fantastic happy music that will keep you humming for days. It's worth an investment, even now when everyone's trying to cut back. Humongous is an album of great music with a few "think" messages thrown in as a bonus.

UMass theatre community acts up

By SHAWN McDONNELL
Collegian Correspondent

The upcoming season for theatre at UMass looks to be full of both promises and (possibly) problems.

Promise: The Theatre Department is to do a production of Constance Congdon's Tales of the Lost Formicans and test its hand in contemporary comedy, after a seemingly endless parade of classics and dramas. No, nothing is wrong with the plays they've produced in recent years — but where other groups seek diversity, the department has remained one-sided too long. Their only attempt at comedy, within recent memory, was an anachronistic staging of that old chestnut Volpone which failed to slay them in the aisles.

Problem: Like Volpone, Formicans can easily be over-thought. Viewing the world of the 20th century through the P.O.V. of alien observers, the play pricks at all of our pretension and follies in a manner which could be dangerously overplayed by any director with politics more on mind than entertainment.

Promise: The UMass Theatre Guild is going to produce one of the most controversial and revolutionary musicals in recent times — Stephen Sondheim's Sweeney Todd. Filled with lust, revenge, insanity, murder, and cannibalism, Todd changed the face of theatre when it appeared in 1979. The first through-sung musical of serious intent and popular acclaim, it is also still the best — despite the success of later entries in this genre, such as Les Miserables and Phantom of the Opera.

Problem: The role of Todd is one of the most demanding, and difficult, in the entire spectrum of musical theatre — the singing equivalent of Willy Loman or Hamlet. The Guild may have trouble finding the necessary talent to make him more than a caricature. What's more, the technical requirements are great — blood spurts, ovens steam, trap doors open, and budgets rise. Can a student group handle the expense?

Promise: The world premiere of In My Abyss, a brilliant and darkly humored work by UMass undergrad Elisabeth Sampson. Student Valley Productions will stage this great absurdist play, which carries the added excitement of being an all around first. Formicans has played at countless regional theatres, and Sweeney Todd has gone even further by being produced twice on Broadway in the span of a single decade.

Problems: First of all, Student Valley Production is a decided underdog amongst student theatre groups, and actors generally seem to consider them last priority for auditions — whether through snobbishness, or simple lack of knowledge about the group is hard to say. This makes casting any SVP show a little difficult. Further, because of the "underdog" status, SVP has immense difficulty in finding performance space. Abyss will be produced in the thoroughly un-theatrical Southside Lounge at Hampden, and that cannot help but damage the production.

Anything may happen in the months ahead, and whether or not all the productions live up to their promises, it is nice to see that the UMass theatre community, as a whole, is working harder and taking more chances to keep us entertained. At the very least, that deserves a round of applause.

President's address on comedy show

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC, CBS, CNN, NBC, C-SPAN and, just for laughs, Comedy Central covered President Bush's State of the Union address live last night.

The comedy cable network, which threatened legal action to get pool coverage of the speech, planned commentary from a panel of such comics as Richard Belzer, Will Durst and Al Franken after the 9 p.m. EST address.

The TV networks also planned to air the Democrats' response, from House Speaker Thomas Foley.

Among the special coverage planned: ABC's "Nightline" had Bush's Chief of Staff Samuel Skinner answering questions from audiences in Phoenix and Los Angeles, and CBS had an "interactive broadcast" that let as many as 300,000 people call in toll-free to register their views on the issues.

"Do I Have a Case?"

The attorneys at your Legal Services Center can answer fee-paying UMass student's questions on a wide variety of legal problems, including:

Housing, Criminal, University-related, Civil Rights, Consumer, Labor, Family, Personal Injury, and more

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Deal with a minor health problem before it escalates. Candid discussion with your mate will lead to practical solutions. A forgiving attitude is the key to domestic happiness.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Going over your finances will help you make a practical budget revision. Let others know where you stand. By remaining your sweet and steadfast self you will accomplish more.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A favorable day for building joint resources. New developments concerning other people's money or possessions could alter a longtime relationship. Avoid doing anything drastic.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An influential person offers you excellent support, perhaps even a partnership. Keep spending within reasonable limits. A teen-ager does you proud, winning a scholarship or special award.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You will be meeting many people who can help your career or business now. Verbal promises will not do; get everything in writing. A platonic relationship intensifies.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Unexpected developments within your family could throw you off-balance unless you are prepared to make concessions. Romance offers some interesting social opportunities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Continue to show faith in a unified effort to improve your community or workplace. Joint financial interests stand to benefit in good time. Keep things in proper perspective on a daily basis.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make sure your long-range objectives are realistic if you hope to win over new allies. A tranquil afternoon lets you devote time to a pet project. Make key telephone calls without further delay.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Concentration on the problems at hand by everyone concerned leads to an intelligent solution. Be more realistic about a romantic attachment.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It is comforting to have a trustworthy friend to whom one can bare one's soul. Choose your confidants with care. Laughter is a healing tonic. Do not mistake good-natured ribbing for criticism.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Bow to the winds of circumstance in order to get through this day with the least fuss and bother. Higher-ups expect a lot now. Budget your time and energy wisely to make a deadline.

PICES (Feb. 19-March 20): Spend as much time as necessary to get the essential details of a big project worked out. Then you can put your plans into action.

■ Coach Reid

It's the "perks" that fascinated Reid the most. Like a child visiting Disneyland for his first time, Reid was awestruck. His friend, head basketball coach John Calipari, had told him about some of the benefits offered at other schools but he never explored the opportunities. He was simply happy in Amherst.

"From a football standpoint, you want to stay here," Reid said. "I love the university and I get along with the faculty here. I like my team here at UMass.

"I'm really excited because we've been able to bring in some recruits through the success of the basketball program," Reid said.

Therein lies another irony of the whole situation. Reid talked about how he was excited for the upcoming years at UMass with the addition of the Mullins Sports Complex and a hockey team. But even the success of Calipari's Minutemen in Division I basketball can't add enough revenue for the Division I-AA football program. McInerney has termed the basketball program untouchable in terms of budget cuts.

By far Reid's most ironic comments during our hour-long interview came when he discussed his future after coaching.

"I'm interested greatly in athletic administration," Reid said. "There's going to be some tough decisions. [McInerney] has already made some tough decision and it kills the guy."

So when Calipari and women's soccer coach Jim Rudy came down to Reid's office last Friday to say goodbye it was far from a token gesture. While Calipari basks in the national spotlight, his friend becomes the victim of a state and a University that are being run like a defensive back moves in coverage — backwards.

Now UMass has lost Jim Reid. For that, Frank McInerney and his cohorts should be ashamed. For that, they owe football fans an apology. More importantly, they owe Jim Reid an apology.

lead at 21-20 with 8:56 remaining, when he hit a leaner amongst the trees.

The Temple zone defense caused UMass fits. The usually methodical Minuteman offense went to its frantic, Rick Pitino — style offense, launching 24 3-pointers (14 in the first half) and mainly scoring from the perimeter.

When the shots caromed off, Temple's Strickland (8 rebounds) and Johnson (8 boards) were there to pull down the misses.

"We don't shoot a lot of threes," Calipari said. "That is not UMass basketball."

The Minutemen could mount no inside game at all. And, as a result, they trailed 38-31 at the half after Temple went on an 18-10 run, which included three Eddie Jones buckets, one a loud one-handed jam over a Minuteman defender.

The second half was more of the same. The Minutemen could not solve the Temple defense and could not stop Jones, who matched his career-high scoring output with 22 points.

When the Minutemen tried to cut into Temple's lead, it was Jones (6 steals) who shunned them away. After Harper Williams converted a Mike Williams feed, the Minutemen were within 6, 48-42. Jones then drove the length of the court and spun home a reverse layup around the entire UMass defense.

The Minutemen shot a abyssmal 33 percent for the game. Jim McCoy could not find an open shot amidst the Temple defense. He scored just 10 points on 5-for-14 shooting.

UMass' inside players, Kennard Robinson, Harper Williams, and William Herndon were held to a combined 12 points.

"I wrote on the chalkboard, the team that is going to win this game is the team that wants it more," Calipari said. "It's clear who wanted it more."

For the game, the Minutemen were outrebounded 41-30. The offense could never find its grove, as every pass inside was a struggle.

"Harper and Herndon destroyed teams by going to the glass," said Temple coach John Chaney. "We destroyed that tonight."

■ Coach Reid

he wanted, opted to stay on at UMass not because he had a lucrative contract with incentives or a marketing deal with an athletic goods supplier, but because he had a commitment to this school and to his team. How much of a commitment? He withdrew his name from the running for an $80,000 a year job at Pennsylvania.

Who would turn down such an offer? A man who believes in words like integrity and hard work. A man who has earned the respect of his players, his peers and the entire University.

And this school's administration and athletic department dare compromise this man's integrity by taking away scholarships he had already promised? I find that hard to swallow.

You can not win a conference title in the Yankee Conference without scholarship players. Maybe that was possible in the 60's and 70's, but not now. Not in one of the most competitive I-AA conferences in the nation.

You might say "Holy Cross can win without scholarships." Point well taken, but you can't compare Holy Cross and UMass. Holy Cross is a private college with financial security, tuition payments few UMass families can afford and the luxury of playing in a conference which disallows scholarships entirely. UMass is none of those things.

Of the people I have worked with at this University, Jim Reid is one of the men I respect the most. He will undoubtedly make a great future for himself in some aspect of college football, and he'll do it the right way. Without compromise.

As for this school's future, who knows?

Athletic council regroups in wake of resignation

By BRETT MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The shocking resignation of University of Massachusetts football coach Jim Reid spurned an immediate reaction by Chancellor Richard O'Brien, who called to order an unscheduled meeting of the Athletic Council Monday to discuss the future of the University's athletic programs and their funding.

The Athletic Council, which consists of a group of student, faculty and alumni representatives and is headed by Stevenson Fletcher, discussed the budgetary and policy context of the fourth year of budget cuts to the University and in turn the Athletic Department.

The Council also discussed the management of the Athletic Department and its role in Reid's decision and its timing.

"Intercollegiate sports at [UMass] are at risk," said Fletcher, who is the head of the hotel resource and travel department. "We had a meeting of the task force to discuss how to meet the shortfall in the scholastic budget."

One of the recommendations given to the Chancellor by the Council was to put pressure on the Commonwealth to allocate funds specifically for athletics.

"We're still thinking that through," O'Brien said. "We still have to learn how to live within the budget cuts.

"The administration is strongly against cutting any more sports."

O'Brien also said the council discussed the future of the men's soccer program and he said he hopes to release a formal statement on the issue Wednesday afternoon.

The Council was concerned about the reduction in enrollment and consequently the Athletic Department's income from the athletic fee charged to every student.

However, O'Brien assured that there would be no change in the fee.

"It would be very unlikely that the administration or trustees would see any increase in fees," O'Brien said.

O'Brien said he had lunch with Reid Monday afternoon to try and convince him to withdraw his resignation.

"I would go a long country mile to get him to stay," O'Brien said. "But, he seems to be absolutely certain of his decision, regardless of any future action."

Loss of Reid makes athletic dept. pathetic

The shirts that used to be emblazoned with "Property of the UMass Athletic Department," will now read "Property of the UMass Pathetic Department." Because pathetic is the only way to describe the events that transpired last week involving a man who can truly be considered a "winner," in every sense of the word.

Jim Reid became a victim of the administration's backward ways and while Athletic Director Frank McInerney lamented losing Reid, there is positively no excuse for giving the six-year head coach less than two weeks notice of the decision not to offer full athletic scholarships.

McInerney spoke last Thursday of a "blue ribbon panel" and the tough decisions they were making. Blue ribbon? The only blue ribbon this committee deserves is bottom of the shelf Pabst Blue Ribbon beer.

Dave Scott

Reid was put in a compromising situation and in the end his pride and integrity won out. No matter how much Reid loves football and his players, misleading recruits was not something he could allow himself to do. Who can blame him?

Ironically, just four days before Reid said, "I quit," I sat down for an 8:30 a.m. interview that now proves to be both revealing and ironic. Quite honestly I'm not a morning person, but the chance to find out why Reid withdrew his name from consideration for the head coaching job at the University of Pennsylvania was too good to pass up.

More accurately, I relished the opportunity to talk with the man who is the definition of a "good interview." The story that was going to run (eerily headlined "Reid stays put, for now") was laden with precious quotes that went to the heart of a man who loves football, his family and his players.

Reid is the kindergarten teacher who sat down with you on your first day of school and immediately soothed any fears you had. He makes you feel important and talks with you, not at you. He tells it like it is and he throws no punches (even if he does go off the record more times than an old Victrola needle). Much like that kindergarten teacher who's forever etched in your memory, Reid too, represents everything good in people.

UMass football coach Jim Reid hastily resigned last Thursday when scholarships were cut by the University.

"I got in there (University of Pennsylvania) and met all the people, very nice people," Reid said. "I took off my jacket, loosened my tie and got to work. I scared the hell out of them."

That's the way Reid talks, straightforward and to the point. He got a second interview and then withdrew his name from the list. Let's clarify, he withdrew his name from a chance at an $80,000 job, in addition to a car and a country club membership.

Coach chooses integrity over compromise

Jim Reid is a man of integrity. That's why I'm not surprised he left the UMass football program over the elimination of scholarship money. In fact, although I am disappointed Reid won't be around, I have to congratulate him for doing what he did.

It's not the first time Reid, or the football program for that matter, has been forced to put up with budget cuts while other Yankee Conference programs spend money carte blanche. While the Yankee's upper crust — private schools like Boston University, Villanova, Richmond, William and Mary and James Madison — have had the resources to go after the best recruits, Reid was packing bag lunches for himself and his team for road trips. And his teams still won or shared three Yankee titles during his stint.

The football team's performance in the face of budget cuts mirrored the University's in the sense that both took some heavy hits, yet persevered. While the Minutemen dealt with budget cuts, untimely injuries and occasional "rebuilding" seasons, they also succeeded. They even managed to become the best in their field, the Yankee Conference.

The University's recent history is much the same. While budget cuts hurt, the state's "flagship" managed to hold on to its best faculty and remain highly regarded in academic circles.

Now both are in trouble. You can only survive so many cuts before you bleed to death.

Greg Sukiennik

From the perspective of Joe Average, state official or Joe Average, UMass administrator, a few scholarship cuts are not the end of the world. But Joe Average doesn't understand things like integrity or tradition.

Jim Reid could not be expected to stand by and watch the administration, the state and the athletic department break promises he had already made to student athletes. He had put up with budget cuts before, but these went too far. What other recourse did he have but to say "I quit?" None.

This isn't some ordinary football program we're talking about. Look at the history and you'll see how special it is:

- The most conference titles, won or shared, in Yankee Conference history;
- tradition — UMass has played football over 100 years. Only the baseball program can compare in age or history;
- pride — UMass football alumni include current New England Patriots coach Dick MacPherson, Chicago Bears offensive assistant and former NFL quarterback Greg Landry, and hundreds more who completed distinguished careers at UMass.

I wish I knew who I could howl at, but blame falls everywhere. I'd blame the state, but yelling at the state has never done UMass any good. Indeed, it only seems to make things worse.

I'd blame the University and the athletic department, but how can they cope without enough money to properly fund every sport? Remember, UMass has already lost women's volleyball, women's lacrosse, and spring tennis for men and women. Had it not been for the persistence of some concerned parents, men's soccer would be a memory, too.

Money and college athletics go hand in hand — even the NCAA, the supposed watchdog of college athletics, will admit this. They make millions of dollars in licensing, television contracts and the like. It's not right, but it's the truth.

In some sports, for example, playoff sites are determined not by who earned the home-field advantage, but who will most likely pack the most fans into their stadium on a given night. This is why UMass football didn't get a home game in 1990 when they made the I-AA playoffs - other schools had better attendance records than UMass.

That's not the mission of college athletics Jim Reid sees. Reid, who could have left UMass to coach anywhere

Men's track off and running

Kourafas, Walters, lead Minutemen to 6-0 start

By CHRIS CUDDY
Collegian Staff

For most, winter break means five weeks of rest and relaxation.

For the University of Massachusetts men's indoor track team, winter break meant a month of grueling two a day practices, and a sizzling undefeated start.

The Minutemen ran their record to 6-0, with January wins over Bowdoin, Fitchburg State, M.I.T., Springfield, UMass-Lowell, and Worcester Polytech.

"The one thing that's impressed me the most about this team has been the depth and balance," Coach Ken O'Brien said. "We've scored relatively evenly across the board in all our events, with 29 different athletes scoring."

Thus far for the Minutemen, scoring has come relatively easy and often as the Minutemen have beaten up on their opponents by an average of almost 33 points, a margin of victory that has come as an early season surprise to O'Brien.

"I was anticipating maybe a 10 to 12 point difference," O'Brien said. "But we've been getting a dozen or so points from our freshmen and sophomores, and that's where that large margin of victory comes in."

That margin of victory O'Brien spoke of was never more evident than on Saturday, when the Minutemen finished in one of the top two places in 13 out of 18 events, while cruising to a 37 point victory over host Springfield, as well as UMass-Lowell and Bowdoin.

Leading the Minutemen to Saturday's victory was Senior Kevin Walters, who placed first in both the 55 meter and 200 meter dash. He barely edged teammate Jerome Bledsoe, who finished second in a time of 6.63 seconds, .03 behind Walters.

"Kevin's running very well, as is Steven Brown (who placed first in the 800)," O'Brien said. "In terms of a point leader, that would be Joe Kourafas, who's done well for us in both the high jump and long jump."

Other first place finishers for the Minutemen included Craig Cormier, Patrick Locket, Luke Simpson, and Jeffrey White.

"Overall, I think we did well," O'Brien said. "I think we're really using our depth and balance well, and we've got a hungry group of kids."

Earlier over the break, on January 17th, the Minutemen got their season off on the right foot with a 29 point victory over M.I.T., Fitchburgh State, and Worcester Polytech.

Leading the victory trail at M.I.T. was Kourafas, who placed first in the long jump, and second in the high jump.

Also finishing first for the Minutemen were Brown, Cormier, Nelson Simao, Matt Simon, and Andrew Yahner.

"I think that the kids have matured rapidly, and knock on wood, we haven't had any injuries," O'Brien said. "Our schedule only gets tougher from here, so hopefully we can keep it up."

The Minutemen hope to continue their winning ways on Friday night when they travel to the University of New Hampshire to take on the host Wildcats and Holy Cross.

Group saves men's soccer from demise

By DAN WETZEL
Collegian Staff

After months of speculation and rumors, Gov. Weld's office announced yesterday the University of Massachusetts men's varsity soccer program has received funding to continue playing for the next five seasons from a private source, the World Cup Soccer Camp.

WCSC, whose President Jeff Ryan is a 1982 graduate of UMass, will contribute $780,000 to the soccer program, which was slated for elimination last spring by the Athletic Department.

Gov. Weld announced the agreement between UMass and Ryan yesterday afternoon at the State House.

"The men's soccer program at UMass has been part of the school for some 60 years," Weld said. "The ending of the program in the wake of a very successful season would have been a significant loss for the University.

"It is especially good to see that as University officials were making the decision to save the program, WCSC came forward with a funding commitment to the men's soccer program," Weld said.

The agreement re-ignites hopes that World Cup U.S.A. 1994 will consider Foxboro, Mass. as a site for the 1994 games, a move which would pump an estimated $98 million of tourism business into the state's economy.

Previously, World Cup U.S.A. 1994 had indicated the loss of the University's soccer team would hurt the state's chances of being considered, since it symbolized the state's lack of enthusiasm for the sport.

Ryan, who fell in love with soccer while working in the United Kingdom, was interested not only in helping his state but his alma mater as well.

"My action to assist the continuation of soccer with this financial help provided by WCSC is a way to pay back, in a small way, the opportunity I had at UMass," Ryan said. "I wouldn't have been able to do any of the things I have done if it weren't for UMass. This school allowed me to explore where my strengths are. I've never forgotten the University."

University Chancellor Richard O'Brien said, "Everyone wins under this plan. We get our soccer team back, the soccer camp gets a boost, and the University may once again be of benefit to the state if the World Cup sees this move as a show of support for soccer."

University President E.K. Fretwell said he was pleased to see the program return and added, "The University welcomes the occasion to be part of a public-private partnership with Mr. Jeff Ryan and his colleagues."

Despite being in its "terminal" season, Massachusetts streaked to an 11-5-4 record — good enough to qualify for the Atlantic 10 Championships for the first time in the team's history. After the season was over, head coach Sam Koch was named New England Div. I Coach of the Year.

It had been rumored Ryan would make a substantial donation to the soccer program since mid-fall. As the

Bush's plan raises doubts

Potential effect of eight-step program questioned

MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It was "my plan for America." It was George Bush vs. the malaise. It was described as the most important speech of his presidency.

Falling in the polls, he'd been promising big things. He'd been talking about this speech since before Thanksgiving. He mentioned it about a dozen times on a single day of campaigning in New Hampshire.

A lot of Americans think the country is in a tailspin and Bush's State of the Union plan to counter the malaise turned out to be a melange. His eight-steps-in-all-directions plan starts with international trade negotiations and ends with the creation of a "Commission on America's Urban Families."

An eight-step plan is not much to rally a country around.

It is hard to imagine that the American people will feel more comfortable knowing that they may be able to tap their IRA accounts for doctor's bills, home purchases or tuition, or that real estate developers may soon benefit from modification of "the Passive Loss Rule."

They might like lower withholding — more take-home pay now but smaller tax refunds next spring. Yet they know it's their own money either way.

Bush stressed haste and gave Congress until March 20 to act or face a fight.

But no legislation was required to put into effect the withholding plan — the $25 billion centerpiece of his anti-recession program. Bush did it unilaterally. He could have done it months ago. For all the talk of urgency, he waited for the big speech.

House Speaker Thomas Foley said his Democrats will seek common ground with Bush, "but we will also stand our ground when basic principles are at stake." Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., said Bush was just "tinkering with the same old tools."

"He's demanding that Congress approve in 50 days a proposal he's been working on for 90 days, and he's still fine-tuning it," groused Sen. Lloyd Bentson, D-Texas.

Even if Congress enacts Bush's program by March 20 — it won't — the core issue is whether the program addresses what ails America.

If America is undergoing "a crisis of confidence" (as The Los Angeles Times believes) or is "gloomier than it has been in 13 years" (as says The New York Times), this speech will not overcome the crisis or clear the gloom.

Thirteen years ago, Jimmy Carter was in the White House, a prisoner of the Iranian hostage crisis and of a severe inflation that made people fear for their future. The term that described their dismay was "malaise," a vague sense of decline.

Democratic presidential hopefuls rap Bush on his presidential record, Union address

By JOHN KING
Associated Press

MANCHESTER, N.H. — The men who would replace President Bush were split on whether his State of the Union address offered too much or too little. But they were unanimous in calling its promises too late — and from a man who can't be trusted to keep them.

Although they were quick to criticize the president, many of the themes Bush used Tuesday night echoed those heard as the 1992 campaign heats up in New Hampshire: health care, welfare reform, trade and a promise to take care of problems at home with money now spent abroad.

Congressional Democrats, who have the first crack at Bush's promises when they become legislation, also said the flurry of proposals belied his three-year White House record.

Sounding the overall Democratic critique was House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., who said Democrats would dedicate the election year to helping the working and middle classes.

"America needs a president who is ready to lead, not a president who comes to the American public with an election-year litany that gives an inaccurate perspective of the real state of the union," said Democratic presidential candidate Bob Kerrey, a Nebraska senator who watched the speech in the leadoff primary state of New Hampshire.

"We're going to read the record, and the record is four years of neglect, four years of broken promises," said candidate Tom Harkin, an Iowa senator.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentson, D-Texas, and House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., the men in charge of Congress's tax-writing panels, warned Bush that cooperation was a two-way street.

If Bush's idea of cost control was another attempt to cut back Medicare, "that won't sit well with either Democrats or Republicans in Congress," Bentson said.

Of Bush's challenge to Congress to act on his economy proposals by March 20, Rostenkowski said cooperation from Bush could mean "we'll get a package by March 20 — or not."

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, listening to the president's speech in Houston, heard Bush borrow his stump calls for welfare reform and improvements in race relations, but said they rang hollow.

Clinton, who has proposed making college funds available to anyone in exchange for a payroll deduction or public service, said Bush's proposal to allow penalty-free use of IRA money for college was short-sighted.

Filene's goofs, nabs judge

By EVE EPSTEIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — A downtown bargain department store says a pricing mixup led to the arrest of a state Supreme Court justice on charges she switched price tags on a $12 purse. The store apologized today.

Justice Ruth I. Abrams, who was arrested and handcuffed by Boston police, was released because Filene's Basement chose not to press charges. Abrams, 61, the only woman to serve on the Supreme Judicial Court, demanded an apology Tuesday from the store.

The store issued an apology today, blaming the media in part for what happened. "We acknowledge that the humiliation imposed on Justice Abrams through the distortion of facts as reported in the media was totally unjustified, and apologize in the hope that this apology will help to mitigate the harm that has been done to her impeccable reputation," the store said in a written statement.

The store, however, referred to the incident as a misunderstanding.

"...we fully believe that our employees acted at all times in good faith and in conformity with company policy," the statement said.

Abrams said in a statement Tuesday that after paying for the purse she found in a discount bin Sunday, she was approached by a security person who accused her of having switched the price tag.

She was then taken to a downstairs room and held.

"I repeatedly asked and insisted that Filene's personnel go upstairs and see for themselves that the purse was a $12 purse as shown by others of the same make still there. They refused to do so, and subsequently the police were notified I had been shoplifting," Justice Abrams said in her statement.

She was handcuffed and taken to the police station and released after several hours when Filene's said it would not press charges.

Filene's released a statement Tuesday evening calling the incident a mix-up.

"There was confusion as to the proper pricing of a purchased item," the store said.

Abrams said that on Monday her attorney obtained three purses from three Filene's Basement stores that were similar in style to the one she had purchased; the price tag on each was $12.

"It is now established beyond any doubt that the purse I purchased contained the proper $12 price tag," the statement said. "Through my counsel, I have not made a demand to Filene's Basement for appropriate admissions and an apology."

Joan Kenney, a spokesman for the court, said Abrams signed a waiver agreeing not to enter the store until the matter was resolved.

Filene's Basement was buzzing with word of the incident Tuesday, but several employees said they were not allowed to discuss it.

Filene's Basement has its own in-house police force, said Donald Scott, vice president and general manager of Filene's Basement. They have the authority to make arrests within the store.

Bush said Tuesday night that what he's dealing with is a "mood," but he dismissed it.

UM student leaders decry tuition plan

By DAVID MASSEY
Collegian Staff

A proposal endorsed by Gov. Weld which would allow state public colleges and universities to retain all the tuition revenue they collect has been met with mixed reactions from student leaders at the University of Massachusetts.

The University currently holds on to about 30 percent of tuition and returns the rest to the state, according to a University spokesperson. Last year, colleges turned over $85 million to the state.

The Weld administration has defended the proposal as a way to give state colleges more fiscal flexibility and insulate the colleges from budget slashes.

Kevin Newnan, student trustee for the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, said Weld's tuition retention idea would hurt students by encouraging the University administration to raise tuition and fees to increase revenue.

In 1988, in-state tuition was raised by 15 percent, the largest increase since 1980, according to the University Office of Institutional Research and Planning.

"It will only give the state a way to welch out of its funding [responsibilities]," Newnan said. "It's not in the interest of students."

Newnan said the state legislature should be responsible for funding its own universities, not the institutions themselves.

In addition, with enrollment at its lowest point in 20 years, Newnan said the plan would turn the campus into an "enrollment-driven" University, adversely affecting the quality of education.

"There's no way we are going to gain from it," he said.

Joseph Langis, executive director of the State Student Association, a student advocacy group based in Boston, said tuition retention should be implemented with a limit on the rise of tuition.

With this plan, which has been filed with the legislature, tuition would annually rise by 3 to 5 percent, the average increase in inflation.

"Nobody wants to see tuition increase," Langis said. "Given the different fiscal state, 3 to 5 percent looks attractive."

Langis did see some "light at the end of the tunnel" in Weld's plan to not cut the state higher education budget for the first time in four years.

Rob Witherell, head of the budget committee of the Student Government Association, said of the State Student Association, "SAM is a scam.

"I think [Langis] is mistaken in advocating any kind of tuition and fee increases. That's inexcusable," Witherell said.

He said the state should take care of the campuses instead of the campus administration.

"The whole idea of letting tuition retention happen can lead to dire consequences," Witherell said.

Student Senate votes to oppose tuition plan

By MARK PRESTON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted unanimously last night to take action to prevent implementation of Gov. Weld's proposal for 100 percent tuition retention for the state's universities and colleges

The motion stated that tuition and fees have gone up $4,000 over the last four years and that undergraduate enrollment has dropped by 3,000 since 1988 because of these increases.

A public university provides accessibility to those otherwise unable to afford an education and many students would no longer be able to afford a college education if 100 percent tuition is implemented, the motion said.

"Tuition retention is great for the state, because it takes the burden of education out of the budget," said senior Rob Witherell, budget chairperson for the Student Senate.

The movement against tuition retention centers on the probability that the state universities and colleges will become more like private institutions, and the state will not feel a need to fund a university or college that is able to keep all of its own tuition, according to the motion.

"It defeats the purpose of state education, and we have to act fast before it destroys us," said Witherell

The motion ended with a resolution stating that the Student Government Association planned to take action to prevent its implementation.

Sophomore Matt Pavesi, chair of the public policy committee, brought up two main avenues for fighting the implementation of 100 percent tuition retention.

The first way is to have parents and alumni write letters to their legislators, fighting tuition retention, said Pavesi. Deirdre Bannon, attorney general for the Student Senate, who worked for a state legislator this past summner said, "the Candidates spar, sparks fly

Retention causes friction for Democratic candidates

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

The campaign for the state representative seat from the Third Hampshire District continues to heat up, as the four candidates for the Democratic nomination participated in a debate marked by sharp words between several of the candidates Tuesday night.

Democrats Jon Hite, Ellen Story and Terry Franklin of Amherst and Norman Page of Pelham participated in the debate held at Pelham Elementary School and sponsored by the Amherst Democratic Town Committee.

The sparks began to fly when the candidates were asked to state their positions on Gov. Weld's proposal for tuition retention.

Story said although she would have opposed the tuition retention plan when it was first proposed in 1986, she said it is now "politically impossible" to roll back retention.

"A rollback of retention would devastate the University," Story said. "It would be both politically impossible and would lead to major layoffs of faculty and staff [at the University]."

Hite, who has strongly opposed tuition retention, said he was sure Story knew he wasn't advocating layoffs of faculty and staff in his opposition to retention. When Story interjected that she "wasn't sure" of Hite's position, Hite lashed out, saying he was "insulted" by Story's comment.

During the candidate's closing statements, Hite said he would "use every ounce of my energy to work with faculty, staff and alumni to fight the consensus" that exists on Beacon Hill, particularly regarding tuition retention.

Page said he believes Hite and Story are "both wrong" in their positions on tuition retention. Page said he is not opposed to tuition retention as long as the cost of tuition is kept low relative to the total costs of University programs.

Franklin said while he basically opposes tuition retention, he believes Weld "has it in for the University" and will look for other ways to cut the University's budget, even if retention fails.

During the candidate's closing statements, each of the four candidates attempted to paint the differences among them.

Story noted that while she has had to "learn her way around the Boston political scene" during her 18 years working in family planning, she is "not one of the boys."

"If you want more of the same [in state government], vote for Jon Hite," Story said. "I'm in this race to change the game."

Hite said there is currently an atmosphere in the Commonwealth where the state's public colleges and universities are about to be "privatized by an uncaring

GLB program offerings

The Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns has existed here at UMASS for five years. It is the purpose of the Program to serve the diverse needs of the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual communities, as well as to create a positive environment by increasing community-wide understanding and awareness of the needs of GLB people. Through education and advocacy, they work to eliminate negative behaviors and attitudes and to reduce the effects of alienation often experienced by GLB people. The Program Office is located in Southwest in Crampton House and the phone number is 545-4824.

In addition, a new class is being offered this semester, titled Lesbians, Gays and Bisexuals in U.S. Society. Taught by Felice Yeskel and Chris Macek, it will cover GLB culture from psychological, sociological and historical perspectives. The class is being offered Wednesdays from 3:30 to 6 pm, and can be added in 508 John Quincy Adams Tower.

March vote on hand

On Sunday, February 2nd, there will be an election to determine the official title and steering committee for the 1992 Northampton Pride March. The election will be held on the third floor of the Northampton Center For The Arts from 3 to 5 p.m. From 5:15 to 6 p.m., the results will be announced, and a meeting held to form the steering committee and begin planning the 1992 March.

Last fall, four public forums were held and a decision was made to use a public ballot to determine the official name of the March and the members of the steering committee. A sub-committee was formed to organize the vote. Along with questions to determine the name and steering committee is a question to decide if steering committee members will be volunteers or elected.

Members of the Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual communities of the Valley are encouraged to attend and vote.

best way to go is by sending personal letters, not form letters to the state legislators, because they pay particular attention to constituent letters of concern."

The second way of beating Weld's proposal for full tuition retention is by going to other state colleges and informing them of the devastation that tuition retention would have on state college campuses, said Pavesi.

"We can have an effect on tuition retention through political power," said senior Bob Monaghan, speaker of the Student Senate.

"We are going to have to target every legislator, and we can do this by going to other schools and organizing them," he said.

Currently, UMass is able to keep 30 percent of the tuition, said Monaghan.

In another resolution, the Senate voted unanimously to ask that Interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Jo-Anne T. Vanin not accept nominations or apply for the permanent position of vice chancellor for student affairs.

The Senate does not want Vanin to accept nominations nor apply for the position because they feel that she does not represent the views of the students, senate members said.

"We need a vice chancellor who will fight for student rights, and it is time that we get rid of administrators who don't care about students but care about their own agenda," said Pavesi.

"Student affairs as a division is anti-student, which comes from the top down," said Monaghan.

"There needs to be a change in the top to an individual to bring a pro-student agenda to student affairs," he concluded.

Probe clears Bulger of wrongdoing

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Massachusetts Attorney General Scott Harshbarger today closed his investigation of the 75 State Street project and said the probe cleared Senate President William Bulger of allegations of wrongdoing.

Harshbarger said his staff reviewed evidence collected by the U.S. Attorney's office in the case and conducted an independent investigation.

Then U.S. Attorney Jeremiah T. O'Sullivan closed his investigation on March 31, 1989, with no charges and said the decision was "not a close call."

Harshbarger agreed.

"Based on our investigation, there is no credible evidence to support, and therefore, no professionally responsible basis, for convening a Grand Jury in connection with the allegations of improper action by any individual, including Senator William Bulger, in connection with the 75 State Street development," Harshbarger said.

"Therefore, there is no responsible basis for initiating any criminal prosecution for improper action in this matter," the attorney general said. "I concur with former U.S. Attorney Jeremiah O'Sullivan that this is, on the facts and under state law as well, not a close call."

In December 1988, Harshbarger said, The Boston Globe (underline please) published a series of articles questioning certain transactions and financial arrangements that occurred in 1985 and 1986 between Boston developers, attorneys and current and former state officials, most notably Bulger.

The investigation centered on whether Thomas Finnerty, a Boston attorney, extorted $500,000 from developer Harold Brown in return for Finnerty using his alleged influence with Bulger to obtain necessary approvals for Brown's 75 State Street project.

The central allegations, Harshbarger said, were that Brown paid $500,000 in 1985 to Finnerty and that a portion of the money, $250,000, was paid to Bulger through a Finnerty-controlled trust.

In an affidavit filed in connection with a related civil action in Suffolk Superior Court, Bulger acknowledged receiving a loan from the trust, but denied any contemporaneous knowledge or connection with the Brown-Finnerty transaction.

Bulger said the money he got was received as legal fees in connection with an unrelated action in which he and Finnerty were counsel.

Harshbarger said the facts didn't support the allegations of wrongdoing.

". . . I have concluded that, under state law, there is no responsible basis for criminal prosecution in connection with the 75 State Street project, and this office will take no further action of any kind."

However, Harshbarger, without mentioning him by name, criticized his predecessor, James Shannon, for not conducting an independent investigation of the allegations.

O'Sullivan's investigation, Harshbarger said, dealt only with potential violations of federal law, not state law.

Bisexuals should not be in NoHo Gay and Lesbian march

Hopefully this Sunday a lengthy, heated and bitter controversy will be laid to rest as community members meet to vote on the title for the 1992 Northampton Lesbian and Gay Pride March. The issue: whether to include the word "Bisexual" in the march's title.

It is absolutely extraordinary that this vote is being held in a public forum in a small town in rural Massachusetts. There are few places in the entire world where lesbians, gays and bisexuals can meet in public forums to discuss their political issues.

But Northampton is well known as a special place for gays. The Los Angeles Times recently described Northampton as a special haven for lesbians, and last year Time magazine referred to it as a "rural lesbian enclave" in its special women's issue. It is home to some of the nation's leading lesbian writers, including award-winners Leslea Newman and Sarah Dreher, along with many other talented lesbian artists and businesswomen.

In the late 60s and early 70s Northampton was the base for a strong lesbian separatist community that made significant contributions to the feminist dialogue about sexual politics.

It is important to acknowledge that it is primarily due to the efforts of political lesbians that Northampton is a safe space for lesbians and gays today.

Northampton is an exception to the national gay rights movement, which is dominated by homosexual men. They own and publish most of the major gay magazines and newspapers. Lesbians have been invisible in most of the recent coverage stemming from gay men's struggles against AIDS.

So perhaps it is understandable why some lesbians are protective of the Northampton Lesbian and Gay Pride March. Its title reflects a historically unique and successful effort by lesbians to establish visibility, power and community.

I think bisexuals should branch off and organize their own bisexual/queer pride march in Amherst and respect the Northampton March's traditional focus on lesbian and gay liberation. It's counterproductive for bisexuals and lesbians to spend so much time and energy in a power struggle that I believe reflects some irreconcilable philosophical differences. It would be better for lesbians and bisexuals to agree to disagree.

Trystan Skeigh

It's not that homosexuals and bisexuals should not be allies. Clearly lesbians, gays and bisexuals share the goal of ending social intolerance of same-sex relationships. But they often hold very different political perspectives. This is especially apparent when contrasting the views of bisexual women with lesbian feminists.

Lesbian feminists argue that key to overcoming sexist oppression is ending the sexual domination of women by men. Many argue that it would be better if women did not sleep with men at all until patriarchy is overturned.

This philosophical difference is at the root of much of the resistance voiced by some lesbians to the inclusion of the word "bisexual" in the March's title. They argue that because bisexuality, by definition, includes sexual relations with members of the opposite sex, bisexuals do not relinquish heterosexual privilege.

Homosexuality, on the other hand, by definition excludes the possibility of heterosexual relationships. Hence some lesbian feminists argue homosexuals are the primary targets of homophobia and should remain the focus of the march's title.

Much of the debate around the march has focused on this point: Do bisexuals have heterosexual privilege? I think the answer for bisexual women is an obvious yes. But, it is a dubious privilege that stems from sexism.

In typical heterosexual male porn, bisexual women are highly popular eroticized images — two women have an encounter, then they have sex with men.

Bisexual women say this objectification is part of their oppression, and I agree. But I still argue that because men view bisexual women as potential sexual partners, these women experience a higher social tolerance level than lesbians — who are labeled "man-hating dykes" and particularly singled out for persecution because they don't sleep with men.

Bisexual politics argue for the freedom to choose partners of either gender without criticism or condemnation. This political goal is extremely important to the social debate about gender relationships. The increasing visibility of the Bisexual Movement is laudable and their increasing unity and strength is heartening. However, I do not believe the Bisexual Movement should push its own agenda by infiltrating historical lesbian and gay organizations. Instead, I believe they should develop their own projects and groups and work with lesbians and gays as allies.

All three groups have a different political message to bring to the struggle against heterosexism and homophobia. It is important these different messages be clearly heard and understood in all their implications. However, rather than insisting that gay/lesbian/bisexual always be uttered in the same breath, sometimes these groups should take different space.

Animal rights activists should support humans

Passing through the Student Union the other day on a search for a cup of politically uncorrect coffee from an agreeably right-wing Central American nation, I had occasion to notice the banner of the Animal Rights Coalition. Belonging to one of the many monomaniacal caucuses on campus, it of course bore a suitably emotional and vapid slogan. I find it ironic that our society has unraveled the blueprints of life contained in DNA, and yet we are still haunted by the zeitgeist of primitive animism. Animal "rights" are an epistemology untenable in both a philosophical and a practical sense, and whose adherents will never be overly encumbered by sapience.

Stefan B. Gross

Animal "rights" are most often expressed as the belief that the use of animals in scientific investigation is immoral, because some things that humans would perceive as unpleasant occur in the course of these investigations; prospective converts are bombarded with sanguine details of Machiavellian deeds capriciously performed. This position relies on proselytingrather than pedantics, for we derive our rights from the fact that we are human, not from our ability to feel pain. Persons who believe otherwise are either ignorant of the principles of natural rights as expostulated by Locke or choosing self-deception in order to assuage a propensity for emotionalism. The definition of legal rights as the ability to feel pain carries with it the implication that if one cannot feel pain, one has no rights. Legal struggles over the denial of heroic or sustenative measures to coma victims are an excellent case contrapoint; debates are not over the existence of the rights of the insensate, but rather over their regency. Indeed, if we define pain as response to a human's interpretation of unpleasant stimuli, and accept that plant tissue responds to damage, our erstwhile vegetarian animal "rights" disciple will have to eat rocks in order to uphold his tenets.

The Foundation for Biomedical Research, a Washington D.C.- based think tank, estimates that thanks to animal research, we can expect to live an average of 20.6 years longer. An advocate of extending human rights to animals would argue that much of this research is needless, can be conducted adequately on bacteria, and will present you with dozens of pamphlets depicting woebegone cats and dogs. First, animal research is vital in predicting the metabolic breakdown products of various drugs; that is to say, what will happen to a drug targeted to the heart when it enters the liver. Bacterial models may not have revealed inherent danger of thalidomide or aspartame. Second, the European Committee on Animal Research's 1990 report reveals that over 85 percent of biomedical research not utilizing bacterial models is performed on rats. Since animal "rights" relies not on logic but rather on emotionalism, this is a fact seldom, if ever, revealed in their literature. I would imagine it would be immensely more difficult to mobilize public opinion against testing Taconic-SD 50 strain #432R white rats than the sloe-eyed canines so often depicted. Thus, we have revealed a major inconsistency in such a polemic: while it may seem reasonable to the uninformed to extend the boundaries of natural rights to encompass dolphins or higher primates, the argument verges on hilarity when suggesting that rats be accorded the same legal status as humans. I think not.

The Animal "rights" movement is not likely to be a passing intellectual fad; ominous portents such as the rise of terrorist raids and personal attacks substantially indicate otherwise. A populist movement embodied in an absurdity can still win converts in a society where progress is taken as a matter of course, where melodrama is mundane, and where logic is viewed as superfluous. By according natural rights to brutes, animal "rights" champions are transporting humanity to the state of the beasts in the fields.

Abortion: the hardest of choices

The end of last semester saw a small flurry of editorials on the subject of abortions, most speaking out vehemently against it. But do these people really know what goes through someone's mind when confronted with the situation of an unplanned pregnancy? No. That is why I have written this letter.

My girlfriend tested positive on a pregnancy test in early December 1991. Three weeks later, we had the pregnancy terminated. How did we come to this decision? Pro-life contingencies will say we were accomplices to murder; pro-choice contingencies will say we merely exercised our reproductive rights. I believe the truth is somewhere in between.

Initially, when pregnancy became a real possibility, my girlfriend said she wanted to have the child. I told her two things: one, I would file paternity papers establishing my fatherhood which would guarantee both my rights and responsibilities; two, I suggested that the child be put up for adoption.

The process of adoption is something I know very well. I am the youngest of nine children, the last six of which were adopted. It is not something that comes about from birth, that is quite uncommon. It is usually the offspring of foster care, and becomes more difficult as the child grows older.

My parents, the ones who adopted me, were also foster parents caring for children of all ages. Foster care is just as admirable a process as adoption, but unfortunately there are those who take in children merely for the stipend from the state. As my mother said to me when I found an award she received for outstanding foster parenthood: "It only means I didn't beat my children."

My girlfriend is 18 years old, in high school, and living with her parents. Adoption was not a viable option because of her parents' influence. It was impossible to gauge their level of support if she decided to keep the child.

I am a 20-year-old junior here at UMass. I live here, but still depend on my parents partially for my support. My parents are both 67 years old.

I came to the conclusion: which is the worse sin? To bring a child into the world that I couldn't give my best to; to risk that that child be placed in a situation where s/he is an extra check each month instead of a member of the family? Or to avoid pain and suffering for our parents and ourselves? Some will think of me as a hypocrite, because I am adopted. But the circumstances concerning my adoption were quite different, and therefore do not contradict. My biological mother abandoned my biological father and myself nine months after I was born; they were older and they were married.

It all comes down to quality of life. I do not believe that life should exist merely for its own sake. This reasoning has been used to justify oppression throughout our world. I did not want to give a life of severely compromised quality. I wanted to avoid the possibility and the reality of pain and suffering I have seen, and felt.

HI. Wanna be published? Like I told you before, this ain't no private party, this ain't no private disco, this ain't . . . aw, hell, what we're trying to say (me and freshly hired Melissa) is that if you think there are things wrong with the paper, and with this page in particular (because this is my blurb, dammit!), or even if you don't, you should come down here, underground, where we crawl, and join us! Be one with us. UNITE WITH THE . . . sorry, it's late, way past deadline . . . anyway, we're always looking for good letters or columns — the former must be under 50 lines, the latter over. Over.

Smile at your RA, the servers at the D.C. and your neighborhood janitor

Have you hugged your RA today? Did you smile at your maintainer as he or she cruised down the hall with the vacuum cleaner? Were you polite to the woman who served you the sandwich you're eating as you read this in the D.C.?

If not, think again. These men and women are the unsung heroes of the University — the people who do thankless jobs and take all sorts of abuse. While this institution's bureaucracy takes the credit, financial or otherwise, the seemingly faceless, nameless workforce of UMass goes largely unrewarded.

Maybe UMass is like real life, after all. That's how the world works — someone does all the work, someone else takes the credit. Human nature or societal flaw? You decide. It's your life.

Greg Sukiennik

Think about it for a minute. Let's say it's Friday night in the dorms. You did 10 flaming vodka shots, drank two mud slides, gulped down three beers, ate a pizza and threw up all over the bathroom floor. [Must have been the pizza, right?] Now who's going to clean up after you Monday morning?

Why, of course. Since you passed out like the drunken fool you are, you never stopped to think that someone else had to clean up the remnants of your wild nightlife. How does cleaning up after someone else's vomit sound for a fun morning?

If you're a maintainer, it's just part of the routine. Cleaning toilets, scrubbing graffiti off the walls —it goes on and on. Every day, without fail. Unless, of course, budget cuts take your job away. Truly, being a maintainer on this campus can be a thankless task.

It doesn't have to be if residents think before they act. And no, being drunk is no excuse to not be considerate.

While we're on the subject of being abused, who takes more abuse than RAs? $26.88 a week [unless you work in Sylvan] is barely adequate for a job which requires the patience of Job, the persistence of Wily Coyote and the tolerance level of Gandhi.

Housing's on one side, residents are on the other and RAs are caught in the middle. Some RAs say Housing has fired their peers, well, almost whimsically if they said or did something Housing didn't happen to agree with.

Residents who don't like the policies RAs enforce, or for some reason, don't like them period, have the power to make their lives a living hell.

In my freshman year, angry residents on another floor of my building who were upset their RA dared enforce quiet hours "pennied" him in his room, then set the door on fire. Another RA who came down too hard on her residents found all four of her tires slashed one evening.

Is a free single worth the hassles? It can be, if the circumstances are right. There are advantages to being an RA — obviously, if it were 100 percent misery, there wouldn't be competition for positions every year.

Again, a little consideration goes a long way. Don't set your RA's door on fire. It's not nice.

Do these jobs compare to the occasional hassles and public scrutiny of being, let's say, Chancellor? Having never been an administrator at a public university, I can't say from experience. Others, however, could learn from experience.

Here's the idea: would the administration be as apt to misunderstand, underpay or otherwise shaft its employees if it knew what the job was like? What if UMass' chairpersons and provosts and vice chancellors traded with the D.C. grandmas for a day? What if the powers-that-be at Housing traded positions for a day with their janitors and RAs?

Maybe the switch would foster understanding and empathy. Maybe it wouldn't work after all. But either way, the laughs would be worth it. Imagine the spectacle of seeing Richard O'Brien in a white apron in a hat at the Berkshire D.C., informing you that "macaroni and cheese is a main item — you'll have to come back for seconds."

Imagine your friendly neighborhood maintainer at a press conference, explaining why he or she disagreed with Gov. Weld over his budget because it would hurt those most vulnerable to spending cuts, especially state employees.

You'll never see it happen, I'm afraid. It would make too much sense, and after all, this is Massachusetts.

While the right to live is fine, the final choice is mine

Well, I warned you all a long time ago that when I felt it was time to approach a serious topic and deviate from my usually humorous self, I would do so.

That time has come.

Lorrie Cozzens

While there are some topics that I am admittedly apathetic about, abortion is not one of them. I can not condone someone telling me what I may and may not do with my own body. No matter what the case at hand may be, it should continuously be the right of the woman to choose what should be done in the case of an unexpected pregnancy. This is a light analogy for a heavy topic, but abortion and censorship fall into the same lines. You can choose not to listen to the latest Guns 'N' Roses album, and you can choose whether having an abortion would be the best way to deal with your situation. It should be your own choice, and it should be able to be made without the influence of riots, barricades and photograph waving fanatics.

A few crucial examples helped me to come to that conclusion. An acquaintance at my former college was a victim of date rape that resulted in pregnancy. She decided not to have the baby, and who could blame her? How could any woman lovingly raise that child without constantly being reminded of this horrible incident for the rest of her life? How happy do you suppose that child would be if he were to discover that he was conceived from a rape instead of love (or even lust)? Even worse, how about pregnancies resulting from incest? I don't want the job of telling a 12-year-old girl that the law says she's got to have her father's child.

Consider that no birth control is 100 percent effective. There is always chance of an accident no matter how much precaution you use. I'd rather see abortion made available for those who seek it, than see unwanted children grow up being mentally, physically, or worst of all, sexually abused.

I especially resent a man trying to diminish the right to choose. Men are in no danger of getting pregnant, and that factor seems to get lost somewhere in the mess. Florence Kennedy once said that "If men could get pregnant, abortion would be a sacrament." Those who phase off into the middle by saying "I don't think I'd want one, but I wouldn't prevent someone else from having one either" very possibly have the best attitude. Simply because it really never is your neighbor's business, regardless of their gender.

There is also a viable medical standpoint. I'd rather see abortion kept safe, legal and accessible than go back to the days of "back alley abortions." Women sometimes used wire hangers or long hat pins to abort the pregnancy and sometimes died from either internal bleeding or infection. I was pleased to read in the Middlesex News that Gov. William Weld had said "A woman's right to an abortion is a fundamental individual liberty. Government has no place interfering with a fundamental right." Way to go, Weld.

As I said before, in the case of an unexpected pregnancy you should be able to choose what is right to do for you. If you feel you want to have the child, more power to you. But to take away that right is to let narrow-minded people dictate what you may and may not do with your own body. And once they have control over what they can do with your body, who is to stop them from seeking control of your mind next?

Signing off. . .

A countdown to make the most of this spring

Hooray! Hooray!

It took eight semesters, but my dreams were finally answered. For the first time in my history here at the University of Massachusetts, I did not have to add/drop. I did not have to wake before dawn. I did not have to sit on a hard, cold cement floor for hours. And I did not have to beg and cry for a class that I didn't even want.

Yes, for the first time I can start a semester not already behind on my sleep, allowing me to use my time more productively.

Like counting down the weeks till the end of the semester.

How many times have you started a semester and the first thing you check in your calendar is the number of weeks, days and hours there are left until summer vacation. (15 weeks)

Felice Cohen

For myself (and my roommate will vouch for this) last semester was no exception. I could always be heard yelling, "Hey Hope, can you believe there are only six weeks left? This semester is flying by!" (14 weeks)

Annoyed with my constant updates that graduation was abruptly creeping closer and closer and real life only a skip-dee-do away, she would politely tell me to shut up. (13 weeks)

So I have consented to make a pact with myself. Yesserie, no more countdowns (12 weeks). No more idle remarks about graduation and how this is the worst job market college graduates have been faced with in a long time (11 weeks). And by all means no more joking when people ask, "What are your plans after graduation?" and I reply, "Going out to lunch with my family." (10 weeks)

That's right. After today I am going to live each day at this humble establishment we sometimes slip and call "home," to the fullest. I am going to make sure I take advantage of everything UMass has to offer (maybe hang-gliding?) before I am told to get out to make room for the new recruits. (9 weeks)

I am prepared to act in a rational manner when told, "there are still more fees to be paid," by Whitmore. When warned, "You haven't graduated yet, you still have an exam next week," by my professors. And encouraged, "Let's go out!" by my friends. (7 weeks)

After completing my first semester at UMass, I remember my dad saying to me, "One down and seven to go." At that point, having only one semester left at UMass seemed light years away. (6 weeks) But cruising back to school in my car this week down those familiar winding roads in Amherst, it hit me. The time had come.

"Seven down and one to go."

Dozens of UMass memories suddenly raced in front of my eyes. Warnings from my recently graduated friends that these are the best times of your lives filled my thoughts. (5 weeks) I was overcome with the urge to steer my car into the nearest cow, but alas, I hate red meat. Feeling as though my life would be over after graduation was ridiculous. Sure these are the best times of your life, but there's still plenty more to come.

At that moment I realized college itself is only the first semester of my life and when I am through here I'll still have 50 more to go.

So before hyperventilating and passing out and not even making it till May, here's a bit of advice for all my fellow seniors: enjoy each day you have left here at UMass. Eat a bagel. (4 weeks) Meet as many people as you can. Use a condom. Study. (3 weeks) Attend as many lectures as possible. Go out with your friends. Relax. (2 weeks)

Stop and smell the ros — okay, so maybe there are no roses at UMass, but by all means appreciate your time left here. (1 week) Because before you know it, there will be no weeks left to count.

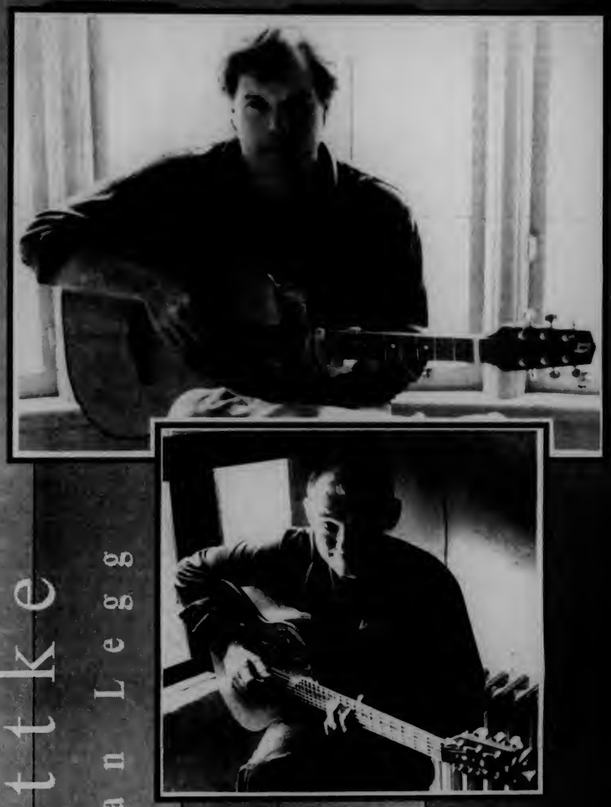
Leo Kottke with Adrian Legg



"I don't jog."

By LISA CURTIS
Collegian Staff

Leo Kottke, the Master of Twelve Steel Strings will be playing at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton on Friday, Jan. 31. A guitar veteran of 25 years this accomplished performer's concert will run the gamut of songs from the Allman Brothers to Bach.

"I owe much of my technique to a failed attempt at banjo playing and all of my affection for the guitar to Pete Seeger; most of my tunes belong in some way to Pete," writes Kottke. "I live in Minnesota with my wife and children. When I'm not playing I rebuild engines, read and write, or poke around the Twin Cities. I don't jog."

Kottke has released 20 albums since his 1968 release 12 String Blues.

Opening for Kottke is British guitarist Adrian Legg.

"Adrian just released an album on Relativity records. He is their next signing for a guitar god, and Ovation guitars signed him as their endorser," says Jordi Herold, proprietor of the Iron Horse.

Guitars and Other Cathedrals is Legg's, first U.S. release. According to Eric Snider of the St. Petersberg Times, "On seven of the 13 tracks, Legg holds court with a custom-made acoustic-electric guitar that is imbued with a metallic bite and resilient echo."

Legg is also author of Customizing Your Electric Guitar. He has described his own guitar as "An electro-acoustic nailed together from various gash bits — the body from a nylon prototype, a neck from a wrecked steel-string, bits from a fire-damaged wreck, and so on."

From lullabies to heavy Cajun and Celtic grooves, Legg masters many sounds. He even has a flair for country in his "Divorcee's Waltz."

"All I got out of it was an alcohol problem and some unwearably tasteless shirts," says Legg about the time he spent playing in British Country Bands in Acoustic Guitar.

This kind of incredible show doesn't happen too often. Both of these musicians are truly guitar virtuosos.

The Iron Horse Music Hall is located at 20 Center St. in Northampton. Dinner is served from 5:30 at all shows. Iron Horse concerts are all ages all the time. Show times are 7 and 10 p.m.

Raising the curtain on 1992's movies

By CHRIS SHADOIAN
Collegian Staff

If you're as big a film buff as I am, you're gonna want to save this article.

So get those scissors out, because I've got the low-down on all of the projected movies from Columbia Pictures for the coming year.

The Inner Circle, starring Tom Hulce (Amadeus) and Lolita Davidovich (Blaze) will be the first Columbia film of the year. It involves a loyal Soviet citizen (Hulce), who is "persuaded" into a job as Stalin's personal projectionist. He cannot, however, swing his marriage to Davidovich.

The basic plot of this movie sounds like it might be quite good, and should, at the least, serve to educate people about the late Soviet Union.

But if you're still not interested, you may want to see this movie because it's scenery. The Inner Circle marks the first time a major motion picture corporation has been allowed to shoot footage inside the Kremlin, KGB headquarters and the Soviet Red Army's war college.

Hard Promises, though, I just don't know about. Billed as a "romantic comedy," it sounds predictable all the way.

It stars Sissy Spacek (JFK) and William Petersen as husband and wife, then as ex-husband and wife, which is when Petersen makes an attempt to save their marriage. But get this. He tries to win Spacek back at her own wedding to another man. Hilarious! Right? No. My vision of the future shows this one sitting on the "forgettable" shelf in video rental stores.

But take a wild guess at what kind of movie Under Suspicion is. If your answer is "thriller," you win a free copy of the Collegian! Heck, keep this one.

Under Suspicion stars Liam Neeson (Darkman) and Laura San Giacomo (Pretty Woman) as a private detective and a mistress of a wealthy murder victim (respectively). The two become involved when Neeson's wife is found murdered along with Giacomo's lover, and, of course, Neeson falls for Giacomo when he comes under suspicion for the crime. Fairly typical.

I can see the billing for Radio Flyer already: "The feel-good movie of the year, of the decade, of the century!" it'll say. However, that pre-release reputation may indeed be founded.

Although the basic plot may sound fairly unoriginal (brothers Elijah Wood and Joseph Mazzello must learn to deal with their monstrous stepfather), it is certainly executed in a unique way.

The brothers try to get their wagon — a tiny red Radio Flyer — to fly in order to cope with the abusive stepfather. Who ever heard of a flying wagon? Then again, who ever heard of a flying bicycle before "E.T." came along? I'd try this movie. It might be great.

Falling From Grace, on the other hand, has an extremely high chance of bombing at the box-office. It won't be caused by the cast, though. Rock and roller John Mellencamp plays — guess — a famous singer returning to his hometown to celebrate his grandfather's 84th birthday. He plays opposite Mariel Hemingway (Star 80). Larry McMurtry, best known for his terrific script in The Last Picture Show, wrote the script, too, so all of that looks promising.

But Mellencamp is debuting as a director with this film. This could be the death of the movie. Mellencamp is a singer, jumping suddenly to acting AND directing? I have serious doubts as to whether or not he can pull it off.

Tom Hulce stars as Ivan Sanshin, a loyal Soviet citizen who is thrown into the fire of Stalin's inner circle.

Now I must admit I feel slightly biased about "Gladiator." It stars James Marshall in his first big screen role. He is best known previously for his work on David Lynch's Twin Peaks, which I was obsessed with while it lasted. So Gladiator has a chance based on the acting ability of Marshall alone.

But the plot leaves something to be desired. Set in the world of underground amateur boxing, Marshall is forced into the ring to avenge his father's name. Jean Claude Van Damme's Kickboxer did this already, and it was a terrible movie, but I admit to finding it incredibly entertaining. If you like beat-em-up-for-my-Dad type of movies, try this one on for size.

A Very Good Year sounds like a seriously stupid movie. I don't mean to knock Academy Award-winning screenwriter William Goldman (Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid), but come ON!

A story about a man and a woman who don't like each other, but end up falling in live while searching for a bottle of wine throughout Europe? An adventure movie like this cannot possibly follow in the footsteps of my favorite adventure ever: Raiders of the Lost Ark.

Columbia Pictures doesn't seem to think that Stephen King's Sleepwalkers needs any explanation besides "Stephen King wrote it, so it must be good".

I know nothing about this film's plot — I'm writing about all of these movies from press releases — because Columbia included nothing whatsoever about it in their press packet. And if this film is anything like the last couple King flicks, I certainly don't blame them.

However, another Twin Peaks alum

Update on new jazz releases and local scene

By SEMAJ SELOM
Collegian Correspondent

The Delmark label, a medium-sized catalogue based in Chicago, has made yet another important show of support for music that would otherwise fall between the cracks.

A few months back, Delmark reissued several of the Art Ensemble of Chicago's more important albums on compact disc, including Muhal Richard Abrams' Levels and Degrees of Light. Delmark's latest release includes not only some historical recordings, but some contemporary ones as well.

Magic Sam Maghett was one of the leading blues singers in Chicago during the 1960s, whose style gave rise to another, better known Sam, Sam Cooke, and eventually to today's Robert Cray.

Magic Sam died of a heart attack at age 32, tragically removing one of the most memorable voices from the scene. He recorded three albums for the Delmark label while still alive, his best performance perhaps being on Magic Sam Live.

This reissue, entitled Give Me Time, was recorded in the living room of Magic Sam. His children playing in the next room, clinking silverware, and other casual noises can be heard in the background, and as you might imagine, the sound quality isn't great. But the music is quite remarkable, as Magic Sam's lilting voice and signature guitar playing make quite a statement.

Due to the sound quality however, Sam's guitar play isn't as audible as it should be, but that is easily passed over by his singing.

While Magic Sam can now only live on through recordings, Wille Kent is alive and well, and helping to keep the great Chicago blues tradition the same. His latest, Ain't It Nice, features eleven tracks, eight from Kent's own hand. Kent's bass play and vocals are backed up by two guitars, harmonica, piano and drums, giving a great big helping sound for the listener.

Kent's voice is distinct, having both the polished contemporary sound of today's singers, combined with the raspiness of earlier artists.

The second contemporary date in Delmark's latest batch is a bit less exciting. Mike Smith, who plays alto saxophone for Frank Sinatra's orchestra, heads up his second album On a Cool Night.

Eight tracks, only two of which are originals, make up the date which also features the trumpet and flugelhorn of Ron Friedman. The album is as straight ahead as an album can be, and lacks any real suprises.

While Delmark continues to increase the scope of its catalogue, Windham Hill Jazz continues to repeat itself. John Beasley's Cauldron marks Windham's latest release, and is completely in form with the rest of the label's albums. Lots of electronic synthesizers, a mish mash of percussion, and seemingly lifeless horns are all that Cauldron can boil up. It's good to see small and medium labels like Windham Hill, working in a cooperative fashion with its artists who are committed to marking a particular kind of music which is off the beaten path. However, I find Windham Hill's style to be rather boring.

As for upcoming live music here in the valley, there's Ladysmith Black Mambazo at Pearl Street on Feb. 4, young trumpeter Wallace Roney leading his own quartet at the Iron Horse on Feb. 8, Bobby McFerrin at the Fine Arts Center on the 13th, and Elvin Jones and his jazz machine at the Horse on the 17th. That's only one of the benefits of February's celebration of Black History Month, an abundance of great music.

Greeks raised library funds

By ADRIENNE FALZONE
Collegian Correspondent

When the Friends of the Library, led by Sigfreid Feller, approached Kappa Kappa Gamma advisor Elaine Barker seeking Greek Area support for their latest fundraiser, they didn't realize just how much support they would get.

The fundraiser involved selling postcards, notecards and holiday greeting cards to benefit the UMass Library's Acquisition Program.

The cards feature a beautiful winter scene of the library and campus pond drawn by UMass student Liane Fisher.

The fundraiser spanned just over four weeks in which each sorority teamed up with a fraternity to sell the cards on the Concourse for a day.

The very first day, Alpha Chi Omega and Alpha Tau Gamma sold over $100 worth of cards (more than doubling the average day's earnings of non-Greek organizations) getting the fundraiser off to a powerful start.

The postcard fundraiser is a pilot program for the Friends of the Library, so anticipated earnings are vague. But with the support of the Greek Area, the fundraising looks promising, and the future of the library a little brighter.

Project Pulse
Student Affairs — University of Massachusetts at Amherst

On Wednesday, October 30, 1991, Project PULSE conducted a telephone survey for the Information Data Bank (IDB) operated by the Dean of Students Office. The survey examined levels of student awareness and use of the IDB. PULSE interviewers attempted to contact 840 students selected randomly from the undergraduate student population, and 430 agreed to be interviewed. The response rate for the survey was 51%.

All of the students sampled, regardless of whether they had heard of or used the IDB, were asked which resource they use most to obtain academic information

Next, students were asked which resource they use most to obtain non-academic information, such as information about clubs, sporting events, UVC, arts events, etc. (see Figure 2).

Finally, students were asked how the IDB could be most effectively advertised (see Figure 3). More than half (51.1%, n=217) of the students said through the Collegian

The Cowboy Junkies hang back and brew

By LOU COVE
Collegian Staff

The year 1988 saw a curious, subtle album stir up a quiet storm in the music world.

The Trinity Session, recorded live at the Holy Trinity Church in Toronto, Canada, in one day on a single Calrec Ambisonic microphone for a mega-budget of $250 (reality check: Michael Jackson just blew many, many millions of dollars recording his wimpy comeback album, Dangerous), caused such a critical catharsis that music critics from every obscure rag in America were wetting their pants over the new find.

Truth of the matter was that they had something worth wetting their BVD's over. The Cowboy Junkies put out a disc of deep and soulful reverie that had turntables spinning into the wee hours of the morning. It was music to muse, drink up and make love to, uncork smoky red wines and write long letters to.

It was also music to see and hear in a little music hall in a quaint town in Western Massachusetts on a cold February night. That's February 3 and 4 to be specific, two shows each night at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton.

Anyway, on that first release, backed by her brothers Michael and Peter on guitar and drums, respectively, and Alan Anton on bass, Margo Timmins' voice captured the dark and desperate pathos of the cover tunes and the original pieces on the album with a haunting eloquence and a potent understatement that was incredibly well-received.

The album had not one uptempo number, not one grinding guitar solo, not on voice raised far above a whisper. The strength of the Cowboy Junkies lay in their ability to hang back and brew, creating a slow burn that warmed the cockles of many a music-lover's heart.

Covers of Lou Reed's "Sweet Jane" and Hank William's "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry" served as an appropriate and infectious introduction to the Junkies' sound. The covers provided a vehicle for their new audience to ride on, into the meditative, mood-shifting swamp sound that the Cowboy Junkies were conjuring up. Their own material seemed like gravy on an already tasty concoction.

Starting out as a high school band called the Hunger Project, playing edgy British rock, of all things, they eventually became Germinal, a kind of controlled musical chaos. "We all did whatever at the same time."

Their next project turned out to be the Cowboy Junkies.

They landed a major record deal with RCA Records and released The Trinity Session, followed by a second album, The Caution Horses, which delved even deeper into the darker roots of country music that they had begun to explore on Trinity Session. A new album is forthcoming.

And, thanks to the friendly folks at the Iron Horse, we'll be getting the Cowboy Junkies for a two-night, four-show stint. In my opinion, that's not bad. So grab your honey (or someone you'd like to have as your honey sometime soon) and give yourself the gift of some fine, mellow music. A fix of the Cowboy Junkies is something you won't soon regret.

The Cowboy Junkies will perform at 7 & 10 p.m. on February 3 and 4 at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Tickets are $17.50, and they're going like hotcakes, so get on it.

Ansel Adams photo theory

By SHELLY FORTIN
Collegian Correspondent

Hot off the press is an Ansel Adams guide to the basic techniques of photography by John P. Shaefer. Together in cooperation with the Ansel Adams publishing rights trust, Shaefer completed this 389-page guide aimed towards the beginner and the novice photographer.

Shaefer draws on "Adams" vast experience in 50 years of writings on the artistic, practical and technical aspects of photography, as well as on his own extensive dialogues with Adams.

"Shaefer provides a clear approach to the artist's theories of practical photography," states Sloane Lederer of Little Brown Publishing Company.

Ansel Adams is considered to be the most influential teacher and writer of our time on photographic techniques. Adams is known for the black and white images of breathtaking scenes of nature captured in time.

Adams felt that photography was another medium of communication — therefore, it became his visual voice. Says Adams, "All art is a vision penetrating the illusion of reality, and photography is one form of this vision and revelation."

Adams aimed most of his writing towards the more advanced student, although he believed his theories could be implemented at the beginning level.

This is where John Shaefer walked into the picture. Shaefer expresses the ideas that Adams could not communicate through words.

"The basic techniques of photography includes the chapter on developing a negative, basic printing and the making of fine prints featuring step-by-step procedures," Schaefer told Lederer. He gives special attention to explaining and applying Adams' brilliant techniques to color photography — something never before done with this degree of authority and clarity — in two detailed chapters on color photography, color printing and even a section on how to make the best use of field trips.

"There are numerous technical drawings and examples of other well-known photographers' images," says Lederer. There are of course a large number of Adams' photographs.

John Shaefer has written a textbook for not only the Ansel Adams fans out there but also the aspiring photographers of the world.

Students using credit wisely

By DAVE DEMERJIAN
Collegian Staff

With the price of going to school rising and the amount of financial aid available dropping, many students are having trouble making ends meet in these recession-battered times. While some can count on relatives and friends to help out with some extra cash, others are not so lucky. Students today are using credit cards to pay for everything from books and prescriptions to beer and compact discs.

Almost any college student can get a credit card. Citibank, Chase, Baybank, Shawmut, Heritage, and a variety of other lenders offer credit cards to students. Most issuers do not look at income when considering a student application, and unless an individual has a bad credit history, he or she is usually give a card.

There are two types of cards generally issued to college students. A credit card, or revolving credit, allows users to finance their purchases over several months. Only a small portion of the balance must be paid each month. The catch, though, is that the portion not paid is subject to an interest charge, more commonly known as a finance charge.

Mastercard and Visa are the major credit cards used by most Americans. Unlike a credit card, a charge card has no minimum balance option. Bills for a charge card must be paid in full the month that they are received, or the issuer will tack on a large late fee, and possible suspend use of the card.

According to Citibank spokesman Max Haynes, students are excellent users of credit.

"There's a common misconception that students aren't good credit risks. That couldn't be further from the truth — students have proven to be very responsible users of credit."

Haynes offers students some tips on managing and using credit:

- Think about how soon you'll be able to pay off the balance when you charge a purchase. If it's more than a few months, maybe the purchase should be postponed until such time as you can better manage it financially.
- Each time that you consider making a purchase, mentally subtract the amount from your budget. Remember, you will have to pay off your credit card eventually, so don't overextend yourself.
- Set a personal limit for yourself based on your present income, expenses, spending habits and ability to pay.
- Shop around for the best rate on your credit card. Different banks offer different interest rates. The following are current credit card rates for different interest rates. The following are current credit card rates for different issuers:

Baybank 16.98%
Heritage 19.80%
Fleet 17.90%
Citibank 21.89%

Read my lips: New Kids go to court

BOSTON (AP) — The New Kids on the Block actually sang only about 20 percent of the music on their most recent album, according to a published report.

"I have documentation a fool could see," the man who produced the album told the New York Post. The charge was denied by the group's representatives.

Greg McPherson, producer of the group's Hangin' Tough album, told the Post that Michael Johnson and his brother Maurice Starr, the Kids' manager, are the real voices behind the group in concert and on albums.

The New Kids were the highest paid entertainers last year, earning $100 million.

McPherson's claims against the band were made in a lawsuit filed Friday in Suffolk Superior Court in Boston, the Post said. The producer, a professor in the University of Massachusetts' music department, is seeking $21 million he believes he is owed for creative contributions and royalties.

The claims were disputed by Starr, who released a statement saying that he and Johnson did only background vocals while the Kids sang all lead vocals.

Bob Woolf, the group's Boston-based business manager, also denied the lip-synching charge. Woolf said McPherson had been "dismissed" by the band after producing the album, but he would not elaborate.

"That's their voices on the album, and their voices when they go on tour," Woolf said. "I've been with them on tour when they were rehearsing, and I've heard them spend 15 minutes on just one note.

"When you've been as successful as they have become, you're always prey to these accusations," Woolf added.

McPherson told the Post he feels "kind of sad that these kids have made as much money on a hoax" and said the members of the band are not very good musicians.

"Donnie (Wahlberg) is supposed to be a drummer. He can't roll over and play dead, let alone play an instrument," McPherson told the Post.

The pop music world had been shaken by frequent charges of lip-synching in recent years.

Two years ago, Milli Vanilli was revealed to have sung on none of its recordings, and the pop duo was forced to give up its Grammy award.

Islands on cassette

By ERIC POULIN
Collegian Staff

Close your eyes on some frigid, blustery winter evening and try to imagine this scene: you're lounging on a hammock located on a picturesque Caribbean beach. The light breezes are just enough to neutralize the warm sun that gently shines upon your face. All you can see for miles is ivory white sand and the perfectly blue water and sky. In your hand is a deliciously smooth island rum punch that brings a smile to your face as you sip from it. It's like a dream come true, and it seems like it will never end...

But, wait a minute. You're a student, remember? You could never afford a trip to the islands, and spring break is months away. Your chances of taking this trip are similar to the possibilities that Coach Reid was given a fair shake by the athletic department. That is, non-existent. So how are you gonna cope?

Well, you could either blow off the spring semester and hop on the next jet to Cancun, anyway, or you could track down Beer Joint & Tailoring (Release date: February 25 on First Warning Records), the new album from mento preservationalists, the Jolly Boys. The experience is similar, and it's a whole lot cheaper than leaving school and joining the jet set.

Mento music is what ska and reggae would sound like if electric instruments had never been invented. It is the primitive forerunner to the two genres previously mentioned, however, it's sound is slightly more akin to its cousin, calypso.

"The skiffle of reggae" was the initial description that entered my mind when I first became acquainted with this music. Translated, it's the island sound before it was toughened — up and politicized, with acoustic instruments providing the groove.

Unlike skiffle, however, mento has survived since its heyday of the 1930s and 40s, and there is no better example of that than Jamaica's own Jolly Boys. These four musicians, who range in age from 49 to 72 (although no one's really sure how old these guys actually are), were discovered when New York musician and producer Jules Shear vacationed in Port Antonio and happened to catch the band at the Trident Hotel, where they've performed for 23 of their 30 years.

They still keep that gig six nights a week, when they're not travelling the world in support of their latest efforts.

Their globetrotting brought them to the Valley during intersession, as they performed on January 24, at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton.

Beer Joint & Tailoring is the band's third album, and the first that Shear did not produce. It is merely an extension of the good-time, happy-go-lucky sounds that go down smooth and warm your tummy, like a good ol' jug o' rum. They really know how to mix it up, mon, and could become one of the newly-found favorites on the world beat scene.

But don't think that success will spoil this foursome. If their newfound fame suddenly disappears from them tomorrow, they'll just cheerfully return to their status as the Trident's house band. After all, when your environment is an island paradise, you can't help but be, well, jolly.

stars in this. She's Madchen Amick, who I fell in love with in her Peaks role as Shelley Johnson.

If you liked The Last Boy Scout, you should like Mo' Money. Starring Damon Wayans (who co-starred with Bruce Willis in the previously mentioned film), it is billed as exactly the same thing: an action comedy.

Wayans is a small-time hustler who goes straight when he falls in love, but is forced into a credit card scam that threatens his romance and his life.

I have to hope it'll be better than The Last Boy Scout, which was terrible. No one liked it. Siskel and Ebert, Gene Shalit. . . me. . . we all hated it.

A League of Their Own is a comedic, true story about the All-American Girls Baseball League that existed during the World War II years.

This could be a good one, folks. Just let me tell you what it's packed with: an original storyline, director Penny Marshall (Awakenings), Geena Davis (Thelma and Louise), and Tom Hanks (Big), and a great co-starring cast list.

Included are Jon Lovitz (Saturday Night Live) and Madonna, as Mae, a ballplayer with a sharp tongue and a "fast" reputation. Hmm. . . that doesn't sound like Madonna at all.

"Bram Stoker's Dracula." If you can get past the horrible title, get to the theaters to see this. It is, in fact, one of my two picks of the litter for next year. Based on the 1897 novel, this movie stars Gary Oldman (JFK), Winona Ryder (Heathers) Anthony Hopkins (Silence of the Lambs), and Keanu Reeves (My Own Private Idaho), and is directed by Francis Ford Coppola (Apocalypse Now).

This version of the Dracula tale places the famous vampire (Oldman) in a romantic/erotic setting told from his point of view. In the past Dracula films, the vampire is the evil no-goodnik. This '90's version is sure to make viewers sympathize with Dracula rather than hate him. See it. Period.

Billy Crystal (City Slickers) plays Mr. Saturday Night, a stand-up comedian shown in stages, from his youth to his old age. It must be loosely based on George Burns' life, since the only two photos I've see of Crystal in the title role show him sucking on an enormous cigar.

Mr. Saturday Night marks Crystal's directorial debut, so be cautious. However, if Crystal shows half as much talent in the directors chair as he does on the other side of the camera, this film should be a doozy.

The Age Of Innocence is my other pick of the litter. Why? Martin Scorsese (Cape Fear). Directing. What else needs to be said?

A Few Good Men is last on Columbia's list, and it could be a good one to end with.

Based on the longest running Broadway drama, Men stars Tom Cruise, Jack Nicholson (YAY!), Keifer Sutherland, Demi Moore, Kevin Bacon, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. Stars galore.

Cruise (Rain Man) plays a navy lawyer trying to find the ever-relusive truth during a military trial.

Did I forget to mention that Rob Reiner (Misery) is directing? I predict this movie will either be extremely good (because of all the big names), or incredibly bad (because of all the big names). This certainly wouldn't be the first movie to fail because of too many big stars and their even bigger egos.

A couple of movies I just didn't have the space for include Honeymoon in Vegas, Single White Female, The Pickle, (yes it is about a pickle of the dill variety), Hexed, and the tentatively titled Hero.

Liam Neeson stars in "Under Suspicion" as a divorced detective drawn to the beautiful mistress (Laura San Giacomo) of a wealthy murder victim.

New violin release from Ellisor a 'roller-coaster ride'

By JENNIFER WELTY
Collegian Correspondent

With the debut releases of her new album for Great Northern Arts, Ltd., Night at the Museum, Conni Ellisor combines her classical violin training with contemporary melodies and takes you on a roller-coaster ride of many different moods and emotions.

Conni's professional career began in 1974 while she was residing in Denver, Colorado. It was there where she was able to put her talent to good use while writing, arranging and producing regional and national jingles for Frontier Airlines, Remax Realty, and Planned Parenthood. Conni was also a member of the Denver Symphony and a violin soloist in the Denver area. From there, Ellisor moved on to graduate from Juilliard in 1982, and headed for Nashville.

The Nashville Musical community instantly took notice of this multi-talented musician and welcomed her with open arms. It was then that sshe began performing with many of the top country artists in Nashville such as Alabama, Kathy Mattea and Chet Atkins.

This eventually led to the formation of a new string section called the A Strings. The A Strings created a live show of innovative country and bluegrass music and signed as artists to Warner Brothers Records in the spring of 1988. Ellisor also continued producing and arranging and she wrote the original musical score for the feature film, "Gift of the Magi", and was the orchestrator for the recently popular "Ernest Goes to Jail", and "Ernest Scared Stupid."

Through all of these events, Conni continued to pursue her own solo projects. She wrote, produced and arranged two albums entitled, "Strings of Solitude," and "Through the Eyes of a Child." Both of these albums created an electrical charge and brought to them the attention of Great Northern Arts Ltd.

With the release of her most recent album, "Night at the Museum," Conni Ellisor has made a step forward into a more contemporary feel. With songs like "Winds of Alaya", she incorporates keyboard, drum and brass programs which give it a jazzy, new wave feel. However, Conni can't seem to forget her country roots and tries to weave in some honky tonk hoe down where it doesn't seem to fit. It's simply like trying to mix apples and onions. Therefore the tranquil, passionate ballads moved me to relax while the up tempo songs moved me to nausea.

Conni Ellisor provides a new look into the world of contemporary orchestrations which I found refreshing, however for the mainstream audience I think she should leave the mixing of two styles to someone in the distant future.

Potential jurors screened for Tyson trial

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Lawyers at boxer Mike Tyson's rape trial explored potential juror's attitudes about race, sex and celebrity and asked whether some people "ask for it."

"Do you think famous people should try to serve as role models?" defense attorney Kathleen Beggs asked a prospective juror on Tuesday.

"I'm sure it puts a lot of pressure on them. They're human beings, like the rest of us," replied the woman, who was later selected.

Jury selection was to resume yesterday. Eleven jurors — seven men and four women — had been seated by Tuesday. Superior Court Judge Patricia J. Gifford said opening statements could begin as early as Wednesday.

Tyson has been charged with raping an 18-year-old Miss Black America contestant in his hotel room on July 19 of last year. The 25-year-old former heavyweight champ has said she consented to sex. He could get up to 63 years in prison.

Both sides revealed some legal strategy during questioning of the jury panel on Tuesday.

The defense asked if there are differences between the way young black people communicate with one another compared to the way young whites interact. Tyson, like his accuser, is black.

Another question from Beggs — "Do you think someone could make a false accusation of rape?" — was blocked by an objection from the prosecution.

Prosecutor Greg Garrison asked whether bad judgement by victims justified the crimes committed against them. "Do some people ask for it — and get what they ask for?" he asked one potential juror.

"Sometimes," replied the man, who was released from the jury pool.

Summer!

Summer in Boulder, Colorado. Who can describe it? You won't want to miss it. Here's your chance to make the summer of '92 one you'll always remember.

Think community. The Boulder campus takes on a special quality in the summer. Faculty come to class in shorts. Small discussion groups meet under the trees on the lawn. You find yourself part of a comfortable learning community—who work, study, or just relax together.

Think challenge. Choose from over 500 courses, including archaeological field study in Steamboat Springs, production with the Colorado Shakespeare Festival, an intensive Spanish institute, a biology field course on plants of Colorado, performance with the Colorado Lyric Theatre festival, and much more.

Think money. Tuition in the summer is lower than during the following academic year.

Think outdoors. Colorado has more than 1,000 spectacular peaks soaring above 10,000 feet and 53 peaks over 14,000 feet. Boulder has parks, open space, and hiking and biking trails galore. Boulder is the place to be outdoors governor." Hite also said the district's voters shouldn't choose someone who has accepted this consensus and that he would fight to restore funding for the University of Massachusetts.

Franklin reiterated a statement he made at an earlier debate about how the winner of the election should have sympathy with the other three candidates. Franklin said he was surprised when he made the statement earlier that many members of the audience laughed, and he said this reaction made him wonder about the cynicism of voters.

Page said he considers himself the "most experienced candidate" of the four, noting that he has served as a selectman and as a school committee member in Pelham.

"I believe in a common-sense approach to government," Page said. "I've had the same phone number for the last 20 years, and if I win the election, I'll continue to have the same number."

The four candidates will meet again tonight at 7 p.m. at the Amherst Junior High School, in a debate sponsored by the Amherst League of Women Voters.

Nuclear cuts announced

Bush, Yeltsin to reduce arsenals

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nuclear age was at a dramatic turning point today after President Bush and Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin announced broad cuts in their arsenals and signaled their interest in ending the threat of mutual destruction.

Bush and Yeltsin outlined their plans within hours of each other.

In the State of the Union address, Bush said that for the first time, the United States — which invented nuclear weapons and manufactured about 60,000 of them over four-plus decades — would be building none.

Yeltsin spoke on Russian television and declared that some 600 strategic nuclear missiles have been taken off alert and production of long-range nuclear bombers is being sharply curbed.

"The long, drawn-out dread is over," Bush declared, saying that a thinning of the nuclear arsenals means today's children won't grow up worrying about nuclear holocaust.

Bush offered to eliminate 1,500 of 2,000 nuclear warheads on U.S. land-based missiles and convert some bombers to non-nuclear roles.

Bush said he had discussed his offer with Yeltsin and that the Russian president's responses have been positive.

The two leaders will meet Saturday at Camp David, Md., the day after they participate in a summit of leaders of the 15 members of the United Nations Security Council.

Yeltsin said Russia has eliminated or is preparing to eliminate 130 land-based missile silos. It has also halted programs for developing or modernizing several types of offensive weapons.

"Nuclear weapons and other means of mass destruction in the world must be eliminated," Yeltsin said, urging the world's other nuclear powers — Britain, France and China — to join in radically reducing their arsenals.

In the latest exchange of arms reduction proposals, Yeltsin also urged that the remaining missiles "should no longer be aimed at corresponding targets in Russia and America."

Mass. towns to lose state aid in wake of surprise cuts

BOSTON (AP) — Many Massachusetts towns face a loss of 20 percent or more in state aid for the next fiscal year because of lower dollars for highway aid this year and lottery sales less than estimated.

The budget proposed by Gov. William F. Weld for the year beginning July 1 cuts local aid by about $80 million, said David Baier, acting director of the Massachusetts Municipal Association, which lobbies for the state's 351 cities and towns.

Dominic Slowey, Weld's fiscal spokesman, said Baier's figures are accurate, but he denied Weld misled anyone when he said local aid will not be cut in the next fiscal year.

The hardest hit would be 58 small towns, mostly on Cape Cod and the Islands and in the five western counties.

They depend entirely on the two types of local aid being reduced — state lottery aid and highway aid that can be used for street repairs and lighting and for police.

Those towns do not get so-called formula aid — Chapter 70 school aid and additional assistance.

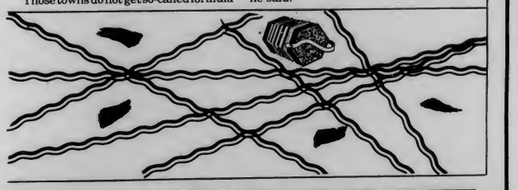
Baier said the Weld administration misled local officials when it announced "no city or town will get less" under Weld's plan.

"It's not level-funding, it's another $80 million cut," Baier said. "We can understand what they're doing, but don't claim it's level-funded. It's going to be a surprise to a lot of communities."

Norman Page, a selectman in Pelham, which could lose 26 percent of its state aid, told The Boston Globe, "Weld out-and-out lied to us. That really bothers me."

But Slowey said, "We've explained this to everybody who's been involved. We made the commitment we will level-fund our statutory responsibility for local aid, and we are."

"It was made very clear that what we were talking about was what we could control through the appropriation process," he said.



Parties reach accord on Arab-Israeli agenda

By DALIA BALIGH
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Palestinians stayed away from Arab-Israeli peace talks again today, but other parties agreed to hold a series of meetings this spring in cities around the world on issues ranging from refugees to arms control.

Despite the Palestinian boycott, the two-day Moscow conference represents a symbolic leap forward for the U.S.-brokered peace process that began with a ceremonial Madrid conference in October.

Negotiators described today's working group meeting on regional issues as businesslike and rhetoric-free, and said they would tackle the same subjects again at the end of April or beginning of May after the Jewish Passover and Muslim Ramadan holidays.

The negotiators said they would likely discuss the issue of refugees at a meeting in Canada, economic cooperation at a meeting in Belgium, arms control in the United States, the environment in Japan, and water in Turkey or Austria. Dates for future talks will be decided then.

The conference also decided that Japan will send a fact-finding mission to the Middle East to explore environmental problems.

The talks formally ended late in the afternoon, a member of the Egyptian delegation said.

Following the talks, Secretary of State James A. Baker III held an unscheduled meeting with the Palestinian's spokeswoman, Hanan Ashrawi, the U.S. Embassy said, without giving any details.

rumors finally panned out, relief was expressed throughout the program.

Koch, who hasn't been paid since November, said, "It's great. I am very excited. The greatest finish to last year we could have had is to have another year. It is just the best reward we could have gotten.

"With the rumors coming and going you tried to stay positive and hope that you'd come out on top, but it wasn't always easy. It was definitely an emotional roller coaster. I'm excited for the program and I'm excited for the kids."

Shawn Bleau, a UMass soccer player, said he was glad the wait was over. "We are all very excited. It is a big relief to get the final word on this. It's been tough. Last December it seemed the program would be back and then we never got a definite answer.

"You go up and down and kids weren't sure what to do, whether to transfer or not," Bleau said. "It is just great that the program is definitely back."

Teammate Ted Priestley said, "What a relief. It is about time. We've been up and down and all we've heard is rumors. I've gotten excited three times only to find out there has been nothing concrete. I'm happy to just have a team but with this kind of money we can bring in some top kids."

While acknowledging the increased funding will help out, Koch said he is way behind in recruiting.

"This year is almost a wash," Koch said. "To get some good players would be a miracle. We have a few kids who have stayed in touch but we are behind."

University Athletic Director Frank McInerney, who last week had head football coach Jim Reid resign due to budget difficulties, was pleased to see the program return.

"It's the first good news to hit this department in years," McInerney said. "Instead of the monthly cut, cut, cut, it is the first positive sign we've seen. I'm delighted."

McInerney, who in December told the Collegian he did not think a donor would step forward, had little to do with the agreement between UMass and Ryan.

"I had talked with him in October and November but that was all," McInerney said. "After that he started to deal with the Governor. I really don't know much about this but it is good to see this type of public-private cooperation."

Albert Bleau, President of the UMass Mens Soccer Association, said he was also pleased. It was the UMMSA which pressured Beacon Hill to find funds for the program.

"I just think it's excellent for the kids," Bleau said. "We were feeling bad because they were working so hard, so this is just great. The funding should allow the program to be very competitive.

"There was a general commitment with everyone concerned. This wouldn't have happened without the Governor's Office, but it was also everyone pulling together. It is just great that all the hard work paid off.

No. 2; at least two quality big men, and No. 3; a defense which can play a patient, oppressing zone defense. BC has guards whose strengths are outside shooting. The Eagles have one quality big man in Bill Curley, and their defense reminds most of swiss cheese. Therefore, I say this with both pride and conviction — UMass 82, BC 73.

The Kansas Jayhawks just signed the next Danny Manning to play for them. Roy Williams and Co. have to be ecstatic about getting junior college star Darrin Hancock to play for the Jayhawks. Hancock, a 6-foot-7 forward, has an incredible all-around game, just like Manning, and he is going to be a superstar for Kansas and eventually the NBA. Remember . . . you heard it here first.

In pro hoop, the Celtics have gotten rid of one headache while gaining a couple more over the break. The headache the C's got rid of was named Shaw, Brian Shaw that is. After coming back from Italy, where he spent a year overseas playing for lira, Shaw played inconsistent, (Red Auerbach would call it soft), basketball. In addition to his deteriorating court skills, Shaw managed to enrage the Cetlics' brass with his complaints and excuses.

Consequently, the Celtics decided to trade Shaw to the Miami Heat for fellow point guard Sherman Douglas. Personally, I really like the trade. Douglas gives the Celtics a point guard who simply brings excitement to the floor. Also, when Dee Brown returns, the Celtics will be able to move Brown over to shooting guard. Having Douglas, instead of the post-Italy Shaw, enables the team to be more flexible and, of course, more exciting.

Injuries to Larry Bird and Kevin Mchale are the headaches the C's gained over break. Bird must learn how to tell Celtics' management when he first feels pain. Boston has invested too much in him, and he is much too important to lose for an extended time, especially if it can be prevented by a simple notification from Bird himself.

Mchale, on the other hand, came back too early from nagging leg injuries and he is now paying the price. While Mchale should be lauded for his courage, he should also be chastised for trying to do too much, too soon. As Tina Turner once sang, "We Don't Need Another Hero!" Oh well, Celtics players are known for their pain threshold. That's it for now, I'll see you courtside!

Reflecting on a long trip to Temple

The buses left Amherst filled with hopes, dreams and rabid University of Massachusetts basketball fans.

Their destination was Temple University, home of the archrival Temple Owls, a team the Minutemen have never beaten, not in 20 games over the last nine years.

Make that 21.

Some 50 people, both students and alumni, took the 10-hour round trip to Philadelphia for 40 minutes of basketball. They were confident this time would be different. This team, with a resurgent 16-3 record and a short spell in the Top 25, would exorcise the ghosts of the past and break "the streak."

Luke Erickson

"The streak is definitely over," said 30-year-old UMass student Machael Hanieski, on the trip down.

Hanieski spoke about seeing the legendary "Dr. J," Julius Erving when Hanieski was a child, a sentiment common among older fans who remember the powerhouse teams of the 1970s.

"I think we're gonna win," said 18-year-old Jessica Leonard, whose parents are UMass alumni.

Leonard said she came from Worcester to see the intersession games, including the victory over Oklahoma which put UMass into the Top 25 for the first time ever.

There was excitement in the air as the students talked about the UMass players on a first-name basis, as if they knew them personally, and some of them did.

One enterprising student designed a colorful T-shirt that proclaimed, "A new streak has begun." Several students bought one as they wore them with pride and arrogance into McGonigle Hall in Philadelphia.

The shirts are now tucked into a top drawer, to be taken out when its message becomes a reality.

However, the trip home from a crushing 83-61 defeat was not quiet and somber. These were New England sports fans, accustomed to the success of the Celtics, but hardened by the heartache and heartbreak by the Red Sox.

Soon enough, the students began chanting, "Go rest stop," to the tune of the UMass fight song, begging the driver to stop for fast food, and he gave in, just past New York City.

They lamented the team's failures, the taunting of the Temple fans, and "should have dones." The students were soon talking about going to the next game, perhaps even taking a bus ride to Rutgers in New Jersey, hoping to see the team that has accomplished so much in the 1991-92 season.

Reflecting on the loss to Temple, 20 year-old UMass student Edward Kaufman said, "The fans were there; but the team just wasn't."

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

Tomorrow, they would be mortal enemies. But on the eve of the great hunt, feelings were put aside for the traditional Mammoth Dance.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You feel loved and appreciated now. Minor annoyances slide off your back. Although trying to please everyone is an impossible task, give it a good go anyway.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Another fine day to spend with those who are closest to your heart. Your more imaginative loved ones will want to play this coming weekend. Plan an outing everyone can enjoy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Attend to whatever formalities are required and stick with a project until it is finished. You may be able to patch up a rocky relationship tonight. Use words to heal, not condemn.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Clear the decks before starting a time-consuming project. A windfall or legacy could make a dream come true. Steer clear of friends' get-rich-quick schemes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be aware that someone is in a combative mood today. Certain associates could be their own worst enemy. Stay home tonight or at least stick to familiar territory. A romantic alliance needs nurturing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You have the opportunity to change a relationship for the better. Emphasize mutual benefits if trying to forge a new union. Give your loved ones extra encouragement.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be careful now; your star may dim if a business venture does not pan out. Set to work with a will! Others lack creativity. Have a fun lunch with a friend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A relationship may have a lot of fancy trimmings, but where's the beef? Can you really count on this person when the chips are down? Plan for the future.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Generosity is advised. Do a favor for someone you have not seen in years. Keep your poise in a social situation even if you feel uncomfortable. Dine with a loved one tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your diplomatic manner puts you in an influential person's good graces. A fundamental restlessness compels you to get in touch with old friends. Your generosity is gratefully acknowledged.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It is perfectly fine for you to change your mind. Go with the decision that makes you feel most comfortable. Your gentle, sentimental ways charm others. Keep tabs on expenses when socializing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Tender loving words will strengthen family ties. They also could start the ball rolling for a new enterprise. Enjoy the fanfare tonight — you are in the spotlight.

No. 25 West Virginia faces UM women's hoop

By KEVIN HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Masachusetts women's basketball team has its hands full today as it hosts the top team in the Atlantic 10 Conference, West Virginia, today at 4 p.m. at Curry Hicks Cage.

The Mountaineers (13-2 overall, 5-0 in the A-10) are on a roll, as they have won their last 10 games and have climbed to 25th in the national rankings.

At the same time, the Minutewomen (4-12, 0-5) are reeling, as they have lost eight of their last 10 contests.

West Virginia's senior guard Rosemary Kosiorek is the player to watch, averaging 25 points per game, good enough for sixth in the country, while hitting 59 percent of her shots. Forward Donna Abbot chips in with 13 points and 10 rebounds per game.

"Without a doubt," says UMass coach Joanie O'Brien, "West Virginia has one of the top scorers in the country [Kosiorek]. You can contain her, but you can't stop someone that good. We have to keep them off the offensive boards, only giving them one shot. We've got to switch up on them and stop them from getting into a rhythm."

UMass must rely on its strong team defense to hold off the Mountaineers. The Minutewomen are 18th in the country in field goal defense, allowing opponents to hit only 37 percent of their field goals. Unfortunately, UMass is hitting only 35 percent of its shots.

O'Brien doesn't believe her squad will be intimidated by the Mountaineers, who cracked the Top 25 for the first time in the school's history, despite the fact the Minutewomen will be decided underdogs.

"We went through the intimidation phase against Rutgers [a 71-35 loss on January 9]," O'Brien said. "They saw what can happen when they play afraid."

UMass women's hoop notes — The Minutewomen are coming off two losses last week, both away games. They fell to Buffalo, 63-54 and Saint Bonaventure, 81-64.

Junior Kim Kristofik continues to lead UMass in scoring with an average of 12.3 ppg, and rebounding, 8.7 pg, while hitting 42 percent of her shots.

Minutemen to duel with Scarlet Knights

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

When Keith Hughes, Earl Duncan and Brent Dabbs graduated from last year's NCAA Tournament Rutgers team, everybody, I mean everybody, had the Scarlet Knights pegged for the bottom of the Atlantic 10. However, coach Bob Wentzel's guys are doing just fine, thanks.

The Minutemen huddle together in the waning moments before game time.

Earlier in the season the Scarlet Knights beat UNLV (now ranked 21st in the latest Associated Press poll) 91-85. Four nights later, Seton Hall (then ranked in the Top 10) paid a visit to the Louis Brown Athletic Center, and although the Pirates won, it wasn't easy.

Rutgers led Seton Hall late in the game, before the Pirates went ahead to win by 5, 77-72. In addition, the Scarlet Knights beat a Princeton squad that gives everyone a hard time, (see Georgetown 1989 and Arkansas 1990) 46-41.

Tonight (7 p.m., Curry Hicks Cage), the University of Massachusetts (16-4, 4-3 in the A-10) gets its first look at Rutgers (9-7, 2-4). And the question surrounding the University of Massachusetts these days is which team will show up?

You know how good the Minutemen can be (see Oklahoma, the Great Alaskan Shootout, etc.) and you know how bad they can be, as witnessed Tuesday night at Temple, an 83-61 loss.

"What we do here is put so much emphasis on that game [Temple], that it's blown out of proportion," said UMass coach John Calipari, whose team has never beaten Temple in 21 games. "If we lose to Temple twice and win the rest of our games, I'll be happy as heck.

"Temple is a good club. The biggest thing about them is every time we play them, they give us their best game of the year. That was their best game of the year, according to their fans and coaches," Calipari said.

Rutgers has not played since Sunday, when they lost to Rhode Island 89-72, something that has Calipari concerned.

"It's going to be a tough game," he said. "They've had four or five days to prepare for us. They're real physical and they're a lot like us, which scares me."

What should scare Calipari is his own team. How can anyone explain why the team played so well early in the year and has struggled ever since beating Oklahoma? Recent history tells us not to worry, however, recent games have us fearing the worst.

UMass is a team which excells in the postseason. The Minutemen advanced to the semifinals of the NIT last year, and in 1990, the team played its best basketball of the season in the A-10 Tournament.

"Our teams have always played well down the stretch, and I expect that to be the case here," Calipari said.

Game Notes:

WMUA (91.1 FM) will be airing a new sports show, Sports Line, at 6 p.m., to be hosted by Joe Donovan. At 7 p.m., Mike Correa and Scott Silberzweig will be inside the Cage for the UMass-Rutgers game. The game can also be heard on WHMP (99.3 FM) with George Miller and Kevin Kennedy.

KEY MATCHUPS

William Herndon vs. Steve Worthy:
Worthy is Rutgers' go-to-guy. The 6-foot-5 forward is averaging 19 points per game, while shooting 45 percent from the 3-point area.

Jim McCoy vs. Alvin Rich:
Rich is scoring 11 points per game. However, his main job will be to keep McCoy in check. McCoy managed only 10 points Tuesday and the Minutemen missed his scoring.

Tony Barbee vs. Daryl Smith:
Barbee will have his hands full trying to score on Smith, a defensive specialist, who is averaging 9.9 points per game.

Temple game could move to Springfield

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball game against Temple University, scheduled for Feb. 16 at the University's on-campus home facility, Curry Hicks Cage, may be moved to the Springfield Civic Center, officials said yesterday.

Frank McInerney, UMass' Director of Athletics, said the department will be handing out a questionnaire at tonight's home game against Rutgers to determine if the department will further investigate the possible change.

"We're going to look at the polls and discuss it with the appropriate people," said McInerney, who is opposed to moving the site.

The Civic Center, which hosted this season's Abdow's Classic and the Oklahoma contest, has the date open and is pushing for the change in venue.

UMass coach John Calipari, who also must approve the switch, said on his radio show last night, "A lot of it depends on if we feel comfortable and that we make sure we are taking care of the students."

The questionnaires will be handed out at both the student and season ticket holder entrances.

Hard off the backboard and through the rim

As usual, it's been a very interesting winter so far in the world of basketball. Both the college and pro scenes have had their shares of ups and downs, surprises and disappointments, and of course, winners and losers. Hopefully, the basketball scene will continue to excite the public the way it has so far this season.

In college hoop, the Duke Blue Devils continue to show why they are the No. 1 team in the country. The team is an unheard of 7-0 in the Atlantic Coast Conference. It's a safe bet to say the Blue Devils will be headed back to familiar territory come March — the Final Four.

Jeff Crofts

Meanwhile, over on the West Coast, UCLA has finally harnessed all of its individual talent and is now the No. 2 team in the country. The Bruins recently got a big lift with the debut of forward Ed O'Bannon. O'Bannon was supposed to be a big factor last year as a freshman, but he suffered a severe knee injury during an early practice, ending his year prematurely. He's there now and UCLA will be another favorite come March.

Other top teams in the country right now include Oklahoma State, Indiana, and Connecticut. Oklahoma State, undefeated and ranked third, plays suffocating defense, and has an All-American in forward Byron Houston. Bobby Knight has done a masterful job in bringing the Hoosiers back to the upper echelon of the rankings after two early-season defeats. Indiana has looked tough recently, especially with the continuing development of schoolboy legend Damon Bailey. In nearby Connecticut, the UConn Huskies continue to be the class of the Big East with guards Scott Burrell (what an athlete!) and Chris Smith leading the way.

Speaking of the Big East, what has happened to that conference? It looks to me that the strength of play in that conference has leveled off tremendously since last year. St. John's and Seton Hall have been the biggest disappointments so far. Despite a victory over Ohio State, the P.J. Carlisimo-led Hall has already lost six games so far. Meanwhile, Louie Carnasecca hasn't had it any easier with his Redmen. St. John's has dropped out of the Top 25 due to five losses, including an embarrassing 45-42 defeat to Big East rookie Miami. Miami! I think on a good day I could make the Hurricanes, they could probably use my lefty hook in the low post!

Over the break I was able to check out a BC-Providence game. The Eagles won the game 79-77 when Gerrod Abram hit a layup with three seconds left. My friends that go to BC wondered aloud about the possible outcome of an Eagle-Minuteman showdown.

Despite the debacle at Temple's McGonigle Hall, UMass would take care of the Eagles. BC relies on the outside shooting of Abram and fellow guards Malcolm Huckaby and Howard Eisly. With the stifling defense the Minutemen have showed this year, the Eagles would be lucky to get off 13 open three pointers, let alone hit 13 as they did against the Friars. The Temple loss showed that the Minutemen have problems when confronted by a team which possesses three qualities: No. 1; quick, athletic, penetrating guards,

Graduate employees ratify first contract

By BROOKE C. WHEELER
Collegian Staff

After almost a year of struggle with University administrators and negotiators and a week-long strike last semester, the Graduate Employee Organization last night unanimously ratified their first official contract proposal.

More than 100 GEO members gathered in Bowker auditorium, and the contract was presented to the crowd.

"Everyone expressed satisfaction with the proposal," said Emily Isaacs, co-speaker of GEO/District 65/UAW. "We look forward to life under the contract."

Jill Havens, co-negotiator for GEO, said, "After twelve months of building the membership and a nine-day strike, this is absolutely fantastic.

"This is ground-breaking work for graduate employees to unionize across the country," Havens said. "It shows how non-traditional workers can get a contract without a labor board, just by fighting."

The major issues covered in the contract, which will be in effect through June 30, 1993, include health benefits, an official procedure for grievances, parity in budget cuts and tuition and curriculum fee waivers.

GEO members seemed enthusiastic about the results of the vote on the contract.

"I feel great about this, very positive," said GEO member Kim Hicks. "[The unanimous decision] demonstrates how pleased the membership really is."

GEO member Sabina Merz said, "It shows how successful the strike was. And we are obviously very thankful for the undergraduates' support through it all."

Next Wednesday, the University trustees will vote to officially ratify or veto the contract. The administration is recommending the trustees to ratify.

"Of course we recommend they ratify the contract, after all of the blood, sweat and tears that went into making it," said University Provost Glen Gordon. "I'd be genuinely surprised if they didn't ratify it after all the effort. It would be a mistake.

"My only regret about the contract is that it isn't for a longer period of time," he said. "It means we will be back to the table only that much sooner."

Several GEO members will also be present at the meeting to express their feelings on the importance of ratifying.

One of the most immediate interests in the contract is the health fee waiver. With the new contract, graduate employees on the individual health plan will receive a waiver of 21 percent of their fee, or $185.25, for the spring 1992 semester. Employees on the family health plan will receive the $185.25 waiver, plus a $262 exemption for the spring 1992 semester.

The percentage of the fee waived will increase each semester, and by summer 1993, 79 percent of the fee will be waived for employees under both plans. The health fee waivers could cost the University approximately $500,000 for the spring 1992 semester.

"There is no intention of affecting undergraduates with the funds needed for the waivers this semester," said Seymour Berger, a member of the Administration negotiating team. "We will deal with this from the existing budget."

Future sources for money needed to fund the waivers are not definite, he said.

"Who knows whether or not the tuition

Fiscal crisis dominates candidate's debate

By JASON GEORGE
Collegian Staff

The four Democratic candidates seeking the Third Hampshire District's state representative seat met in a debate marked by a large degree of consensus on a number of basic issues and on a need to find ways to respond to the despair wrought among citizens by the uncertainties the Commonwealth's deep recession has caused.

Jon Hite, Ellen Story and Terry Franklin of Amherst and Norman Page of Pelham participated in the debate sponsored by the Amherst League of Women Voters held at the Amherst Junior High School. The League is a non-partisan organization devoted to encouraging citizen's to vote and to become educated about political issues.

Each of the four agreed about the need to establish a more equitable tax structure in the Commonwealth, to work for better accessibility to basic social services and health care reform, to reduce the amount of waste and patronage in state government and on the need to work to restore state appropriations for public higher education.

Many of the issues raised in the debate dealt with what each candidate would do to secure resources for the district in the state's current recessionary fiscal climate.

Page said his first priority as a legislator would be to work toward securing a "predictability of dollars to cities, towns and schools," in the state's budgetary process.

Page suggested the legislature could vote to earmark certain percentages of money for state agencies rather than having to vote each year for appropriations.

Hite suggested the state move toward a two-year budgeting process to avoid what he called the "annual grind" over state budget appropriations to state agencies and towns.

As a way of gaining legislative support for restoring state appropriations for higher education, Story said if elected, she would work to "build a voting block for education." She noted that in her native Texas, approximately 50 percent of state legislators are graduates of the University of Texas system, providing a powerful lobby for higher education.

Hite said the University needs a return to fiscal autonomy to retain its effectiveness. Last summer's reorganization of higher education, which abolished the state's Board of Regents and combined the state's five colleges and universities into a single system, does not provide sufficient autonomy, Hite said.

Franklin noted that the state's difficult economic times have led citizens and politicians to lose sight of the common interest he believes people in the Commonwealth have in "working for a better society.

"There is too much divisiveness and scapegoating [in the state] — there are many who scapegoat the rich, and just as many who scapegoat the poor," Franklin said.

Franklin said he worked extensively with many homeless people last summer, noting that many of them had more hope and optimism than the "hand-wringing pessimists who represent them" in politics.

Story said she has sought to build a broad base of support incorporating people who don't regularly participate in the political process.

"My campaign has brought in a new group of people, many of whom have never before felt they needed to become involved in politics," Story said, noting that she has had approximately 220 volunteers involved in her campaign.

Hite said his experiences going door-to-door during the campaign have shown him the fear citizens in this

New security in Southwest towers

Residents share contrasting opinions on new systems

By MICHELLE BAYLISS
Collegian Staff

Housing services implemented yesterday four new different security systems for students entering John Adams, Kennedy, John Quincy Adams, and Coolidge.

Elise ViVilecchia, a sophomore resident in Coolidge, said she has to wave a white card past a scanner and has twelve seconds to be let into the building.

"I think it's a good idea, but I think the [magnetic] strip that JQA residents can add on to their ID card is more convenient because they don't have to carry an extra card around," ViVilecchia said.

Khaleelah Abdul-Kareem, the residence director of John Quincy Adams, described the new security system in the Sourthwest towers as "wonderful.

"It eliminates problems, such as when the key sticks, and I feel comfortable," she said.

Diane Richards, a cluster office worker in John Adams, said she feels safer with this new secuity system. Students now must enter a seven-digit code into a touch-pad to be granted access to their residence hall.

"It will be great, especially on weekends," Richards said.

Jill Moscicki, a cluster office worker in Kennedy, said she has to punch in a seven digit code to enter the building. "There is no better place to do it than in the towers and I think it's safer," she said.

John Adams resident Albert Escoffery said he hates the new system since he prefers using just a key. "Why couldn't they just use our student numbers? I don't see why we have to have a new number to memorize. It's a hassle," he said.

Budget hits students

Gifted learners drifting through

By JON MARCUS
Associated Press

America's most gifted students are drifting through schools unable to provide them with much more than basic education at a time of budget cuts and classroom overcrowding, experts say.

"These kids are spending the majority of their time doing work they already know," said Sally M. Reis, an assistant professor of education at the University of Connecticut. "We're abandoning a generation of our brightest youngsters."

A yearlong study released on Monday by the Connecticut-based National Research Center on the Gifted and Talented found that up to 70 percent of the curriculum is old news to bright students who already know the material; and that 84 percent of teachers give identical instruction to students of differing abilities. In one case, a student who could read at the 12th-grade level was assigned a fourth-grade textbook.

"Most teachers take a look around the classroom and say, "Who needs me the most?" said Reis. "So we cater to the lowest common denominator."

"In fact, curriculum has grown less challenging as many public schools are called upon to educate new students who have vastly different levels of proficiency, experts contend. Children from single-parent families, or from homes where both parents work or where English is not the primary language, may be less prepared.

"We do have classes where you have four or five different reading levels," said Evelyn Hiatt, director of the gifted and talented education for the state of Texas and president of the Council of State Directors of Programs for the Gifted. "The natural inclination on the part of the educators is to help the people at the bottom who need the most help."

The problem has been worsening in many states where gifted programs are among the early casualties of budget cuts while class size is ballooning.

Standardized test scores already show a drop in the number of highest-performing students. And states where the economy is troubled have made drastic cuts in programs for the gifted.

In Massachusetts, the state education department's office for the gifted and talented programs closed in 1990. In Connecticut, 78 percent of programs for the gifted have been cut back or eliminated in the past two years. Maine postponed the deadline for new requirements that schools there offer programs for the gifted. Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York and Vermont also report cuts.

Some states have expanded programs for the gifted. North Carolina and Texas, for example, have opened residential high schools for talented math and science students. Texas plans a public boarding school for students skilled in the humanities.

But educators say that, without programs for the gifted in the lower grades, there will be no one to attend those heralded academies.

Citizen's group raps Weld's budget plan

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation said Thursday Gov. William F. Weld's $14 million spending program for fiscal year 1993 doesn't meet its definition of a responsible budget.

The concerns centered around almost entirely on revenues other than taxes.

MTF and the administration were close on tax collection numbers. MTF predicted the state would take in $9.164 billion next fiscal year, while Weld has estimated $9.350 billion, before subtracting the $192 million cost of his tax reduction package.

The difference is not significant, MTF said.

The business-backed government watchdog group based its assessment on what it considered reliance on at least $335 million in one-time revenues, some of which it is predicted would not be collected.

The group also said some $181 million in other revenues are overly optimistic.

But Michael Widmer, the MTF's executive vice president, would not go so far as to say the governor's budget, submitted to the Legislature earlier this month, is out of balance.

"I think we're saying it's a chancy proposition. We can't say for sure that all of these items won't come to pass, but given this economic climate and given the uncertainty surrounding these numbers we're putting up a yellow flag," Widmer said.

But Dominic Slowey, a spokesman for the Executive Office of Administration and Finance, defended the budget submission.

"It's not a giant leap. We don't think we're overreaching. If some of them fall through in the middle of the fiscal year, we'll deal with it," Slowey said.

MTF questioned the following one-time revenue sources:

•$120 million from the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority. MTF said the idea was tried last year and was challenged in the courts. Slowey said the administration's legal analysis feels their position was strong.

•$100 million from the sale of state assets. MTF argued the administration provided no backup data. Slowey said private developers are interested in several properties, including the Transportation Building in Boston.

"We've had some interest out there for that building, and for some other state assets that despite of the real estate market we think we can sell," he said.

•$104 million from abandoned property, which would require a change in current law. Slowey said he felt the change would be approved.

•$20 million from abandoned passbooks in custody of the probate courts. MTF said the program was supposed to bring in that amount this year and instead generated only $8 million. Slowey said it was being turned over to the treasurer's office, which has more experience in dealing with abandoned property.

"There is no margin for error here," he said. "The new budget for 1993 does not fit our defintion of a reasonable balance. Massachusetts has been through too much fiscal turmoil in recent years to jeopardize progress only recently made."

Nothing stops this year's Olympic athletes

ALBERTVILLE, France (AP) — It is not, to be sure, quite there yet. Fighting still rages in Yugoslavia, the shape and destiny of the former Soviet republics is still uncertain, and other countries continue to cope with the changes unleashed by the collapse of communism.

Sports federations still quibble and maintain different rules about professionalism skiers can race for money, NBA multimillionaires can play this summer, yet, absurdly, Brian Boitano and Katarina Witt can't skate for gold again because they tour in their own ice shows.

But if fans want to see most of the world's best atheletes compete, nearly unfettered by political baggage, this year's Olympics are the places to watch.

New atlases and road maps, plus a fortune in francs, are de rigueur at the most extravagant and far-flung Winter Games in history.

It will be tough enough figuring out whom the athletes represent — Is that skier from Croatia, Yugoslavia or Carrera or Rossignol? — and even tougher trying to get to the events.

These $740 million Games are strung out over 13 indoor and outdoor TV stage sets across 640 square miles in the French Alps because every bickering resort craved a peace of Olympic prestige and cash.

Ignoring the worldwide recession, the French are proceeding with pomp that would make Louis XIV proud, even if the locals have to eat bread for a decade to pay for the feast. Fears of a return of the "Curse of Grenoble" — bills that took the French more than two decades to pay off — haunt these Games as the costs mount by the minute.

Freshly paved roads winding through the rugged mountains are prone to closure and traffic jams from snowstorms and avalanches. The only way to see all the sports is to buzz around with organizing committee co-president Jean-Claud Killy in his private helicopter or stay home and watch them on TV. A lot of fans, put off by the high prices and hassles of getting around, are choosing the latter, resulting in an embarrassingly high vacancy rate in hotels and an abundance of unsold tickets.

Not that the arenas and bleachers will be empty. More than half of the seats at all the events will go to the 17,000 accredited athletes, officials, sponsors, advertisers and journalists, leaving the rest to tourists with temerity to show up.

American fans shouldn't expect any miracles — certainly not another Miracle on Ice like the 1980 hockey triumph. The United States would need a total breakdown of both the former Soviet teams and the Germans to even come close to winning the medal race.

Four years ago, Americans seemed to be slipping all over the place. Dan Jansen, Debi Thomas, hockey players, skiers. The only golds went to Boitano and speed skater Bonnie Blair, who is back and favored to win again.

Boitano, still a spectacular skater, is likely to challenge the international figure skating federation's rules, either privately or in court, and return to competition in 1994 at the Games in Lillehammer, Norway. Until then, his absence will be deeply felt at the Olympics, where no other men's figure skater can match his blend of artistry and athleticism.

Bush tells leaders: adopt economic plan

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. — President Bush urged business leaders today to pressure Congress to adopt his economy recovery plan, promising "it will work."

"Every day individual Americans are working hard to get this economy back on its feet and it's time for Congress to do the same thing," Bush told the Greater Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

"Please tell them ... to set aside partisanship for these 51 days and give this plan a chance to work," said Bush.

He said the air back in Washington was "thick with feel-good gimmicks that have nothing to do with true prosperity and everything to do with politics." Bush said his plan was different from the rest.

"It will work," he said.

"The pessimists are wrong. ... This is no time for gloom and doom," said Bush. But he emphasized, "We need your help."

Bush was greeted outside the downtown hotel by scores of demonstrators bearing signs that read "Where's the jobs?" and "Sayanora George."

The speech reprised the themes Bush struck Tuesday night in his State of the Union address and marked the start of a cross-country campaign by Bush to rally support for his strategy of restoring economic growth through tax breaks for home-buyers.

Bush has asked Congress to enact his plan by March 20 and vowed to fight if the lawmakers fail to meet his deadline.

To honor or he's a goner
by the time I get to Arizona.

When Public Enemy came out with their "By the Time I Get to Arizona" video to protest Arizona's refusal to honor Martin Luther King Jr. Day, it pissed off a lot of people. In fact, the media successfully steered the debate away from the real issue and towards P.E.'s video.

I think first of all, Arizona should take most of the heat that Chuck D., lead rapper of Public Enemy, has taken for this sometimes violent video. Arizona has on numerous occasions, through legislation and ballot box, refused to offer a paid state holiday to celebrate the leader of the civil rights movement.

Instead of dealing with Arizona's mindless stupidity this year, the media has cornered Chuck D. on the seemingly contradictory message of his video. They brand the group as irresponsible because of the numerous assassinations on fake Arizona politicians that are shown in the video.

In case you haven't seen it, the crescendo of the video occurs when Chuck D. blows up the car of Arizona's "governor."

The biggest problem the media has with the video (aside from the black-on-white violence which they never fail to make a huge deal out of) is the fact that King stood for non-violence, and P.E.'s video preaches violence.

"Why do you try to espouse Rev. King's message through terror and violence instead of peace and non-violence," they ask Chuck D.

The simple answer is this. We as Americans cannot sit around and watch as our leaders refuse to honor men because of race. Quiet action will no longer work with respect to Arizona. There has to be something done that tells Arizona we are serious on honoring Rev. King. Pulling the Super Bowl from Tempe next January was a good first step. Maybe this video will help also.

I think "Arizona" is a great video, and I thought the portrayals of the Arizona politicians were rather funny. The video is extreme, but so is the problem they address. I think that anyone who cannot distinguish between real and fake violence is sad, and that is the problem of each individual, not Chuck D.

In my opinion, Public Enemy is not condoning killing Arizona politicians, but rather trying to start a forum for discussion.

My friend asked me yesterday, "Don't you think that the video is irresponsible and it will instigate violence?"

"I hope that it will instigate discussion on the issue of civil rights, so that people will talk about what's wrong in society, instead of what's wrong in art," I told him.

If we can't even take a step back and use the video to talk about Rev. King Day, then what kind of a society do we have? A racist, prejudiced one.

You just want a class, but you're treated like an onion bagel

On Tuesday I began preparing to leave UMass. Though I continue to bring personal belongings to my off-campus home, and though I will remain here physically for another four months, I began separating myself from our beloved University three days ago.

Entering the semester, I was looking forward to a highly productive end to my college career. Needing only 10 credits, I was ready to take a smathering of courses which I hoped would allow me to milk this school of all the learning I could take. An environmental economics class, I thought, and maybe a literature class and most importantly, a creative writing class to help me along my goal to be a fiction writer.

My attempts to add the creative writing class, English 354, were long and for the most part rewarding. That is — until I was told that my background was preposterously wrong for the upper level English class.

I went through the normal procedures: up at 4 a.m. on add/drop day, listed on the waiting list, attended class at the risk of losing another one, and began hoping.

I hoped not only for acceptance into the class, but also that the teacher would be helpful and open to discussion with a fragile future published writer. Sitting through most of the class, I spent my time carefully counting the people in the class, subtracting the number of spots available, adding my numerical place on the waiting list (2) and hoping it came out to zero (zero would mean JACKPOT; I often play these mathematical games with myself, it helps relieve the stress.)

Then, as the class was drawing to a close, the teacher suddenly asked me a question which I had not considered. She asked me about my major.

"Management," I replied humbly, not thinking at all before this time that I was any different from the others in attendance. I was wrong.

Silence followed my response. Like an onion bagel mixed in with a bag of sesame and poppy. Like any elevator you use on campus (except, of course, when you are alone or in Southwest on a weekend evening.) Then came the words which would haunt me all day and send my body into shivers at their recall.

"There is no chance of you adding this class," the teacher said.

I stayed another minute to complete a questionaire I had been working on in avoidance of embarrassment and hopes to maybe, possibly, please, oh mother of mothers, that there was still a slight chance.

Now, I know what all of you are thinking, especially English majors. Courses are few and those which are in a particular major should get first choice of those classes. I understand and agree that nobody should be shut out of a class they desire. But, not to be a poster boy for a well-known administrative catchword, but what about diversity?

Yes, I am talking about diversity. Why should I subject most of my academic time and energy to the full requirements of the English department when all I want is to take a course or two in writing? If this is truly a diverse school, I should be able to learn about something interesting to me, something meaningful — not just something convenient.

However, rules and regulations have successfully stopped me from taking the class which can help me most. Sure, there are many others out there who feel this. They would probably agree about the extent that that stinks. It stinks so much that I cannot say so or print it in a newspaper. What I can do is take my minimum credits, leave myself some free time to read and write, and begin packing my bags. I have no Monday or Friday classes this semester. On those days and those in between I will usually be in Westchester, N.Y., planning my future (did somebody say "San Francisco?") with the woman who will mark the move from the past. Maybe we will "leave" early, as she illustrates that children's book I've been working on.

As I prepare to slip through my last semester, I now say goodbye to the Happy Valley. California, here I come.

Article leaves out complete truth

I was involved with the one-day training discussion session during spring residence assistant training. There are a couple of problems with the article which Marc Elliot wrote for the Jan. 29 Collegian. First of all, it is the ALANA RA Matters Committee, not the ALANA RA "Manners" Committee. Secondly, the training session dealt with racism and homophobia/heterosexism. It was planned and produced by both the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual RA Matters Committee and the ALANA RA Matters Committee. The five skits which were presented dealt with the problems faced by both groups of RA's on staff, in the residence halls, and in the RA class. Thus they were concerned with both racism and homophobia. I should know, I wrote one of the skits myself.

The panel discussion that followed was roughly half ALANA RA's and half GLB RA's. I am exceptionally proud of the two groups' collaborative efforts in producing the session. While I think that the angle you took in writing your article was interesting (Ade's skit about racism in the RA course textbook was a blatant and sad example of institutionalized racism), I was very upset to find that you misunderstood the focus of the session and who had worked to organize it. It might be better in the future if you personally attended the events that you write about, or else solicited more complete information about them. I find it hard to believe that you were present. If you want more information about what occurred and why, I suggest that you contact Morongoe Ntloedibe (RD - Gorman-Wheeler) from the ALANA group and Stephanie Carnahan (RD - Pierpont-Moore) from the GLB group.

Add/Drop better than dull break

Multitudes of colors swirl before my eyes. Reds, yellows, browns, blacks and whites in a huge mass of humanity. Sounds. Shouting, clicking, swishing and the low murmur of many languages emits from the swirling mass. I see long hair, short hair, no hair, colored hair. The clothes are too numerous to describe. The noisy wave rolls before me. I scan the horizon. The shore is not in sight. I'm adrift on an endless sea. Just a tiny drop in a large ocean. The back of the Add/Drop line.

How many of us couldn't wait to return? The intersession dragged on too long. As I sat in back of Friendly's washing dishes, I thought wistfully of returning to Shakespeare. "Friends, Roman countrymen, lend me your. . ."

Damn! Those dishes keep piling up. I stumble on through the drudgery. Nine thirty arrives and my shift ends. I meet some friends and go shoot pool for the third time this week and it's only Tuesday. Shrack! I take my shot and the eightball rests in the corner pocket. If nothing else, I'm getting better at pool. I watch my friends rack the balls through my teary, smoke singed eyes. I'm bored, I'm edgy, I want to return.
